WASHINGTON (AP) - Curtis W. Tarr, President Nixon's choice to succeed Gen. Lewis B. Hershey as draft director, said Thursday he is accepting the assignment somewhat reluctantly with the hope he can "serve the young people of America."

Tarr, a rather gangling man of 45, has been for the past nine months assistant secretary of the Air Force for manpower and reserve affairs.

But in discussing Nixon's decision to nominate him to be director of Selective Service, Tarr emphasized his much greater experience as an educator in close touch with American youth.

For six years before joining the Nixon administration, Republican Tarr was president of Lawrence University, Appleton, Wis. Before that he acted briefly as director of Stanford University's summer session and assistant dean of its School of Humanities and Sciences.

With this background, Tarr said, he hopes his work as draft chief will permit him to continue to serve young people.

Asked by newsmen at the White House for his attitudes toward student deferments and proposals for an all-voluntary army, Tarr said he would remain silent on such subjects until he testifies at Senate confirmation hearings.

He seemed to make it evident, however , that his views differ markedly, at least in some areas, from those of the aging Hershey who retired Feb. 16 after serving as draft director since World War II.

When asked if he would carry on in the Hershey tradition, Tarr said, "Man has to be an individual," and added that he has no intention of copying anyone's philosophy or life style.

On another point - last November's anti-Vietnam "March on Washington" Tarr's words seemed a far cry from the criticism voiced by Hershey.

Tarr said of the march: "It was certainly an expression by a substantial number of people whose feelings certainly were sincere."

Brown-haired and blue-eyed, with a prominent aquiline nose, Tarr is six feet six inches tall. Even when faced with trying questions, he smiled readily.

Tarr said the White House approached him in December about the draft job and reported he expressed a preference at the time for remaining with the Air Force.

House Committee Boosts Independent Post Office

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon's plan to turn the mails over to an independent U.S. Postal Authority was approved in a turnabout Thursday by a House Post Office Committee that rejected the plan last year.

Several opponents asserted privately the administration won the votes for the 17 - 6 committee approval through intensive political horsetrading, but none was willing to make that charge publicly.

The proposed corporation would be government owned but independently operated. It is designed to put the postal system on a self-supporting basis by 1976 and has been given high priority by the administration as a way to wipe out postal deficits mounting to as much as $1.2 billion a year.

The Senate Post Office Committee plans to consider a similar bill next Thursday but prospects for final congressional approval of the plan remain uncertain.

The surprise House committee vote came after chairman Thaddeus J. Dulski, D-N.Y., publicly announced two weeks ago that all attempts to reach a compromise on the corporation plan had failed and his committee would not consider it unless he was overruled by fellow members.

Dulski, who favored reform of Post Office Department with its present framework, reportedly was overruled by fellow Democrats at a caucus Wednesday.

They lined up nine to five in favor of the corporation on the final vote. Eight committee Republicans voted for the corporation and one against, two Republicans and one Democrat took no stand.

"Although this does not represent my approach, it is a postal reform bill," Dulski said in a statement.

The postal authority, like the Tennessee Valley Authority, would be owned by the government but would operate as an independent business.

It would set postal rates, negotiate pay increases and benefits with postal unions and borrow money for modernization of its facilities.

The authority would be run by a 13-member executive council composed of two senators, two House members, seven members appointed by the president subject to Senate confirmation and the authority's director general and deputy director general.

The bill is basically the compromise drafted by Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., who sponsored the original Nixon corporation plan rejected by the House committee 13-13 last November.

The only basic change is that either the House or Senate could veto within 60 days any postal rate increase set by the authorities.

Dulski and other opponents contend mail rates would have to be increased sharply if the authority is to pay its own way.

The motion for the committee to put out a corporation bill was made by Rep. David N. Henderson, D-N.C., who said "I believe we can get it enacted by Congress."

Henderson voted against the corporation last November.

The bill contains an average 5.4 per cent pay raise for lower-grade postal employees retroactive to Jan. 1. But it does not promise an additional pay raise in July which most postal unions had made a key condition for their support of the corporation plan.

Bombs Rock N.Y. Skyscrapers

NEW YORK (AP) - A series of bomb blasts wrecked skyscraper offices of three of the nations's corporate giants Thursday, in a pattern similar to an antiestablishment vendetta of planted explosives last summer and fall.

Because of anonymous forewarnings, there were no injuries in the latest bombings for which a self-described revolutionary group claimed credit. Phony threats emptied other city buildings, as police responded to 137 bomb scares in the first 16 hours of the day.

Elsewhere in the nation, rigid security measures were enforced at the Justice Department in Washington after a telephone bomb threat. No bomb was found.

In Cambridge, Mi., police sought a mystery woman in the bombing Wednesday of the Dorchester County Courthouse as well as clues in the bomb blast 24 hours earlier that killed two men in a car on the outskirts of Bel Air. State police said her description was similar to that of an East Coast civil rights activist known to the FBI.

UMass—Boston Pledges Community Education

The U Mass/Boston campus is the dramatic physical expression of the University of Massachusetts' mission: "To increase the educational opportunities of the generations who will live and work in our increasingly urbanized world," according to its planners.

The form of the new campus arises from a comprehensive master academic plan. The work of the entire university community--trustees, faculty, administration, students--the academic plan seeks flexibility in providing the best in higher education to its commuting students in the last decades of this century and in the generations that follow.

To implement this flexible academic program the new UMass/Boston will be built on the "college" system. "Colleges" in this sense mean a manageable unit within the new campus. The key is size, not subject matter; each "college" will be limited to 2,500 students.

One "college" could embrace an engineering school, an institution for public policy planning, a center for marine and environmental studies, and a liberal arts school. Each "college" will be semi-autonomous, having its own dean, faculty, classrooms, cafeteria lounge, study areas, and meeting rooms.

The "college" system allows variety and flexibility not possible with 15,000 students (UMass/Boston's projected student body) under a single administration. Each "college" will be freer to try new approaches and experimental programs, because a mistake will not affect the entire institution. One "college," for example, may test giving academic credit for experience that furthers a person's education without fitting the traditional mechanism of formal courses.

Credit might be given for working for a period of time on the bustings with a political candidate, or for organizing a community project.

In short, the "college" system combines the advantages of the small American college with the massed resources of a large university. For at UMass/Boston the resources that only a large university can afford--library, science center, center for the fine and performing arts, medical services, large and varied faculty--will be close at hand.

Since 1965 the University of Massachusetts has offered an undergraduate program in Boston. About 3,500 students now attend classes in seven buildings in the heart of the city, following a curriculum in the liberal arts and sciences. The curriculum, which is under constant study, is already undergoing a process of change, and a committee of the Faculty Senate plans this year to recommend further flexibility in the course requirements.

UMass/Boston has also been moving out into the community it serves. Members of the mathematics department work closely with an institution established by the Model Cities Administration in Boston.

Twenty-one students are working in five urban schools while progressing toward their degrees. Soon to be implemented are programs to admit prisoners to the school during the final months of their incarceration, and to enroll state employees trying to upgrade their status within the state service.

In the future, UMass/Boston will respond increasingly to the needs of the community. Greater attention will be focused on thegrowing need for trained people in government and community service. A school of library science aimed primarily at urban communities will fill a need not being met in the Boston area.

State Bond Issue Key To UMB Project Financing

Construction of the University of Massachusetts' new Boston campus will be funded through the sale of bonds to be issued by the Commonwealth. Under the authorizing legislation, the cost limit on the project is $355 million.

The project will be built in several overlapping phases, with the first phase budgeted at $150 million. Upon completion of the first phase, scheduled for fall 1972, there will be facilities for 5,000 students. When the project is finished in 1980, the total student enrollment will be 15,000.

To initiate the project, the Governor and the General Court appropriated $50 million in capital outlay. This amount covers the acquisition of the site, site work, design of the six buildings in Phase I, and construction of foundations for the buildings.

To date, the land has been acquired, design is under way, and test borings and site investigations are being conducted at the site. Sitework is scheduled to start this spring, followed by foundation work in the summer.

The remaining $100 million to finance construction and equipment for Phase I buildings is expected to be authorized by the Governor and the Legislature this year.

Poet Meets Candidate

Encounter with McCarthy

On November 1st, 1968, I had just completed a poetry-reading tour of a number of West Coast Universities, concluding with Washington in Seattle, and I was awaiting my plane in the Seattle-Tacoma Airport. I noticed Senator McCarthy was also there with a group. As it turned out, he had just come down from Alaska, where he had gone to campaign in the last week of the election.

Since I had my last book of poems, THE WHEEL OF SUMMER, in hand and had completed my tour, and since I had also been born in Minnesota, I walked up to him, introduced myself, and said I wanted to give him my book of poems. He accepted it with great interest, and we had a little conversation there about poets, Minnesota, campaigning in small towns, and the number of poetry books accumulating in his study, most of them gifts from poets.

The election was November 5th. On November 8th I received a full-page letter from Eugene McCarthy, DATED NOVEMBER 6TH, discussing poetry and commenting in some detail about my book of poems and even singling out three of the poems he was especially interested in. What amazed me, and still does, is the specific evidence that McCarthy actually read a whole book of poems between the 1st and the 6th while the whole country was in the final orgy of the campaign, and that on the day after, while the election hung in the balance almost until noon, he was in his study reading poetry and writing a letter to a relatively unknown poet he had met just a few days before.

While he was reading and writing that letter, theremust have been a hundred commentators, news analysts, magazines, and people generally, who were trying to get at him for his own interpretation of events and incoming results.

I have not seen Senator McCarthy since. His March schedule is so busy that he left directions with his chief secretary to reject all additional invitations, which she did, including that of the DVP and MFA to our Poetry Festival. But when he heard about this he decided that he wanted to come in for this event, to read his poems and say whatever he felt inclined to say about poetry and politics.

So, for an extremely modest fee, he is coming to do that. He will read with another Minnesota poet, Robert Bly, and with Jane Tokarz, a student in the MFA program here. And perhaps it is useful to say, even in a time when almost any public gesture's motive is challenged, no matter how generous its intention, that Eugene McCarthy is giving that fee to the Black Cultural Center at the Univ. of Massachusetts.

McCarthy Widely Praised For Ironic Poetic Style

Eugene McCarthy once observed "a sure way to get a book of verse published is to run for president." He is being too modest, for after only two years of writing poetry, McCarthy is drawing wide acclaim as a poet. He still considers himself an amateur without an individual style, yet he is serious about his work. His poetry is influenced by Robert Lowell; his verse is a type of "confessional reporting."

McCarthy writes as a way of escaping from, or reconciling, the tenstons of business. His poetry is precise and ironic; his feelings and ideas are inseparable.

His political standpoints are expressed poetically: "The time has come for us to say to the come for us to say to the Vietnamese, We will take our steel out of the land of thatched huts, we will take our tanks out of the land of the water buffalo, our napalm and flame-throwers out of the land that scarcely knows the use of matches. We will give you back your small and willing women, your rice-paddles, and your land."

Eugene McCarthy will participate in the Poetry Festival tonight at the Cage, 8:30 p.m. He has donated his fee to UMass' Black Cultural Center.

Gene Given Award

Senator Eugene McCarthy recently received a $500 prize from the National Endowment for the Arts for his poem "Indiana I: Three Bad Signs". In the summer of 1968 this poem appeared in an issue of the NEW MEXICO QUARTERLY devoted to the McCarthy campaign. The QUARTERLY was then edited by Joseph Frank, now Head of the English Department at the University of Massachusetts.

Professor Frank was also awarded a National Endowment for the Arts prize for his discernment in spotting Senator McCarthy and another man as coming poets.

Peace

The sky is so blue and peaceful,
So would peace be the color of blue?
But the sea is blue also,
And it has swallowed so many.

The grass is so pretty waving
With its greeness giving life,
So would peace be the color of green?
But green is hatred and envy
And this kills our friends.

Black is the stillness of the night,
So should peace be the color of black?
But black is the color of the sky
Before a storm.

Yellow is the color of sunshine,
So would peace be the color of yellow?
But yellow is cowardness and shyness,
And this keeps away new friends.

Red is the color of a rose
Sitting there so quiet,
So would peace be the color of red?
But red is the color of blood spilling from
The wounds of our soldiers fighting our wars.

Orange is the color of sunset,
So would peace be the color of orange?
But orange is the color of those
Laughing flames, burning and killing our homes.

What color is peace?
I've looked and found no answer.
So where should I go now?
Oh God please tell me
What is the color of peace?

To the editor:

The following is an article from THE STRAWBERRY STATEMENT by James Kunen. We think that it would be an interesting article for the paper.

FROM THE PARRIS ISLAND (USMC) YEARBOOK

My Rifle: This is my Rifle. There are many like it but this one is mine. My rifle is my best friend. It is my life. I must master it as I master my life.

My rifle, without me it is useless, without my rifle I am useless.

I must fire my rifle true. I must shoot straighter than my enemy who is trying to kill me. I must shoot him before he shoots me. I WILL . . .

My rifle and myself know that what counts in this war is not the rounds we fire, the noise of our burst, nor the smoke we make. we know that it is the hits that count. WE WILL HIT . . .

My rifle is human, even as I, because it is my life. Thus, I will learn it as a brother. I will learn its weakness, its strength, its parts, its accessories, its sights, and its barrel. I will keep my rifle clean and ready, even as I am clean and ready. We will become part of each other.

WE WILL . . .

Before God I swear this creed. My rifle and myself are the defenders of my country. We are the masters of our enemy. We are the saviours of my life.

So be it, until victory is America's and there is no enemy but peace!

"Before God!" If Jesus heard that he would puke.

JAMES HARGROVE
CRAIG LEON

This is the reason that I think this society is wrong: it makes Heaven good and Hell evil. My conviction against this principle forces me to take the most drastic step short of violence. I am leaving my home in the name of Conviction.

The laws forcing murder are wrong.
The laws forcing positive behavioral patterns underground are wrong.
The laws against drug use are wrong.
The laws against gambling are wrong.
The laws against sexual exchange are wrong.

I hold these as truth upon which I place my life; upon which I place my hope.

Math Department Reforms

The University is finally giving the students a fair and equal opportunity to have their say - at least in the Math Department. Chancellor Tippo's address started the ball rolling with his proposal of having a Joint Governance Commission with a membership of four undergraduate student senators, two graduate student senators, four faculty senators, and two administrators. While Chancellor Tippo's plan is on the University level, however, Dr. Strothers', head of the Math Department, is on the Department level. His will, however, be similar to Tippo's. Each of the two graduates, four undergraduates, four faculty senators, and two administrators will be elected by the representative bodies. The reason for this new Planning Committee is simple - to let the students who have a genuine concern and who want to have an effective voice in the structure and system of the Math Dept., have their say. Communication is the main objective in this endeavor. It is important to get students and faculty alike to work together. As Dr. Strothers stated, "I even believe that under a plan which really seeks unity instead of division, all four groups can hold real power and AGREE that a student voice should prevail on one item, a faculty voice on another item and an administrative voice on still another item." For instance, on the issue of the hiring and firing of teachers, there will quite obviously be two arguments and sides to the question: that of the students, and that of the faculty. Now, each side can have their chance to state what they think. Dr. Strothers agrees that we ought to find out how the students feel. Thus, this newly formed Planning Committee, composed of elected representatives, can get together, do a study, and present a plan as to how the Department should govern itself, regarding curriculum, teacher evaluation, choice of textbooks, and on major requirements. Of course, the final decision will have to rest on the remainder of the graduate students, undergraduate students, faculty, and administrators - but at least a clear, well constructed plan will be available.

This is a "total change" in Doctor Strothers' own words. Obviously the old system has not worked. This new organization is one in which all the members, not just faculty, will have a say in the future of the Math Department. This is quite unlike previous times where the Faculty had complete control. Dr. Strothers says that he does not want students talking, and then going away while the faculty votes. He feels that this has been the major reason for the problems at hand, and believes that some segment of the students and faculty can surely reach an agreement.

Participating is the key to the success of this plan. In Dr. Strothers' own words, "The all important question is whether we can get the majority to participate and be heard. If the majority is involved and interested, I believe a spirit of cooperation will prevail."

In essence, this Joint Commission is being formed right now to get everyone together and discuss the common interests and common problems. Says Dr. Strothers, "For the first time in my experience, I believe there is a real opportunity for a joint government with no one left out of the decisions."

All you Math majors out there are getting a great chance to help form a new and better Math Department. Take advantage of it!

Through the Looking Glass

About UMass: As the White Queen says in ALICE THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS, here you see, it takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else you must run at least twice as fast as that.

The dome-building, food-sharing, and learning at Free University City taught us something university administrators and faculty are seldom concerned with - the joy of spontaneous emotion and action. The university as an institution is concerned with efficiency and stability, not with individuals or community. We easily become conditioned to viewing UMass as a concrete unchangeable process over which we have no control. Orientation, testing, registration day, requirements, IBM cards, mandatory meal tickets, drug busts, rows of chairs, the boxes we live in, the compartments we learn in - all reinforce this "Concrete reality" of our university. We forget the university is just a large group of individuals. So we begin to participate in the university rather than with the other people.

Free University is asked to do a radio show. We want to use the opportunity to experiment in taped and live broadcasting. Phone calls, music, readings, improvisation. Program Manager - "Sure." Tape anytime. Mikes at basketball game. No one qualified to engineer. Tomorrow at three-thirty. Why are all these people in the studio? Editing news until six. But the show begins at nine. Only one room available. Why are all these people in the studio? Music Power Radio.

Free University decides to video-tape WMUA's happening Saturday night. Station filled, no more room. An Ecology class was promised show. You need a producer. They were promised. Not with my license. We film chaos. Why are all these people in the studio? Tape the show. We want to be spontaneous. You wouldn't walk into NBC and do this. Ten Watts. Stepping stone to my career. Everybody runs around. Why are all these people in the studio? Nobody does anything. WMUA music power. We are told to leave.

The university teaches us to become concerned over efficiency and stability, not with individuals or community. Learn the lesson well and there's a job at Honeywell.

When the university, as any institution, does not meet an individual's needs, he can leave it, attempt to function, or try to change it. If the university is not responsive or becomes repressive, the individuals who make up the institution can break routine through their own actions. Creative confrontation and stability: Free University City. Militant confrontation and disruption: Humphrey. Social Order is not part of the nature of things, but like the university is man-made and alterable.

Free University can no longer continue as a parallel institution. A student carrying a load of fifteen credits finds it hard to work in two additional "free" courses. The creation of new education-life styles should not only take the form of relevant courses, it should reach into theatre, travel, building, media, food, all forms of human activity and art.

The members of Free University or ideally any university, should constantly be examining their function and effect upon individuals. This becomes the difference between a free university and a repressive one.

If tonight's meeting in South College were as spontaneous as Saturday's and Sunday's "Tombstone Shout-out" in the Student Union Ballroom, the meeting would have as much joy, theatre, and music as the celebrations. Incidently, the silver buswarming is at 8 p.m. Saturday and 2 p.m. Sunday. Bring costumes, instruments, props, songs, rituals, films, yourself. We're defining the education.

Campus Comment

International Living

To The Editor:

There has been, during the past few days, a very significant and very promising concept in living formed here, on this campus. I am speaking of the Prince Graduate-Undergraduate Coeducational International House. During this past week, extended discussions were held amongst the parties involved, graduate students, undergraduate students, and foreign students. The results of these negotiations are quite startling.

There will be, next Fall, in Prince House, a new kind of living. The house will be made up of one-third American graduate students, one-third American undergraduate students, and one-third foreign students. Undergraduate freshmen will be included.

Residents of the house will decide their own policies regarding living agreements, conditions and rules. There will be no counselors, but the position of Head of Residence, will remain. It will be a completely autonomous and independent community.

The possibilities for such a house are fascinating. Foreign students, graduate students, and undergraduate students living together, rapping together, exchanging ideas together, getting away from their respective stereotypes and becoming more sensitive as human beings, all in a coed atmosphere, a more relaxed, natural atmosphere.

This is, to my knowledge, a completely unique concept for a residence hall, and a strong testament to concerted student action (The initiative for this project was supplied wholly by students, and has been brought to fruition wholly by students).

This community, simply by the nature of the participants involved, can, and hopefully will, be refreshingly real and exceptionally civilized (as opposed to the neo-barbarish of most dormitories on campus). This will be a community, hopefully, not still another nocturnal filing cabinet in the mold of the concrete asylums most students now reside in; but a community in the sense of relaxed, mature responsibility and emotional candor. It is perhaps, the first living arrangement on this campus that will not impinge upon the personal dignity of the residents involved, but will recognize them as individuals within a community, individuals living within an unnatural, forced situation.

This experiment in living will present an emotional and intellectual alternative, hopefully, to the dreary, austere condition of enforced solitude which is the sad reality of living on this university.

Greeks, Blacks, & Mills

To The Editor:

As a member of the Collegian staff and an active member of the Greek community, I feel it is necessary for me to let my feelings be known on some of the incidents which have occured during the past few weeks.

I realize the paper's desire to report news while it is fresh, but I am very concerned about the paper's irresponsible coverage of the Mills House incident. The broadside which was printed on the Friday afternoon of the incident was very hastily put together and many of the facts were not known at that time. No mention was made of the use of weapons by the blacks during the takeover and the statement that the Mills House students had agreed to move has been denied to me by at least fifteen former residents.

All of the people I have talked to who lived in Mills moved because of threats by Blacks carrying knives and guns and not because "they want Mills to be available as a cultural center." The Greeks on campus have been investigating the issue entirely before passing judgement on what happened, which is more than I can say for the Collegian, which could not even wait until Monday.

We have urged Dean Field to issue a statement on what really went on and he has promised this as soon as all the groups involved have given their views. One thing he did say, however, is that the blacks will not be allowed to live in Mills this semester because they illegally took over a dorm, contrary to what that article would want people to believe.

In regard to Mr. Bromery's observations in his editorial, "The Blame is White's", I think he is being totally irresponsible and I think the paper degraded itself by printing the piece. He seems to have a very shallow view of the Greeks on this campus and he shows his ignorance in his editorial.

Anyone who thinks that blacks don't provoke incidents is kidding himself, and although I know they can't fight without having a group that is willing to fight them, I can't sit back and let him blame the Kappa Sigmas. The blacks had the knives. I'm not condonning the Kappa Sigs but they should not be condemned for starting a fight that the blacks were more than willing to get involved in.

The Greeks do more for this campus than any other individual group. Where would the guide service be without Greeks? The senior class and the Revelers would be without presidents because both persons are Greeks. It is my belief that the more energetic people GO Greek and the apathetic people stay in the dorms. I am proud to wear my fraternity Jacket on campus and if it wasn't for a certain Greek, the Collegian would be minus one wrestling reporter.

To Peggy Forfa, since you aren't going to leave the building when the fire alarm goes off, then it is pointless to label it as a "fire alarm". You're going to ignore it anyway so you have answered "Cry Wolf" for me. Why not have it designated, then, as a "raid alarm" instead. People are more likely to respond to that. (If Pierpont burns down, I'll run all the way down to Southwest so I can stand outside and laugh. Gruesome, isn't it?)

I still hold the opinion that your gripe against the Health Services is not valid. I talked to Mr. Averill of the Health Services and, according to him, the last time a gastro-intestinal disorder of this sort hit the campus was around 1960 when about 30 members of the football complained of the same symptoms. That WAS a virus. No one is sure that the recent epidemic was a virus. The Health Services, in his memory, have never had to handle an epidemic of this size (500 people in one day) before in the past ten years.

The closest thing in size was the influenza epidemic of 1957. Since then, all "epidemics" have been in the scale of 100 to 200 people over several days or weeks, including the flu epidemic of 1969. At this rate, expanding the infirmary to crisis proportions and maintaining it at that level would be a waste of time and money. There are more pressing problems at hand. And, any increase in facilities would require money and the only way to get that would be a raise in tuition, and every time someone suggests a raise in tuition fees, there arises a deluge of mail condemning the proposal.

Your question, "By the way, you weren't sick were you?" gives me the right to say, "By the way, you weren't arrested in a raid yet, were you?" Both statements are worthless.

Now about the name-calling. First, I am not the only revolutionary on campus. The occurrence at the Cage when Humphrey came to speak proved that. I do not even consider myself a true revolutionary, yet. Second, I do not consider myself hip to the drug scene. I do not smoke grass very often, assuming that's what you mean by "hip to the drug scene". And third, "all-knowing" is about the last thing I consider myself. More like "all-seeking". You, however, seem to be taking on the same "all-knowing" sound that you condemn me for. Having never met you, I won't go around trying to tell you what you think you are and I believe you should take the same position towards me.

On behalf of the Student Senate Action Committee, I would like to thank the students who volunteered their time and effort this past Tuesday. Their concern helped the Vietnam War Referendum to succeed within the short amount of time given. I hope more students become as action-concerned as they.

Community Spirit

To The Editor:

We entered Mills as two separate groups who merged into a community. Living under the pretense that Blacks and Whites could communicate, we entered into an untenable situation in second semester. Talks with a number of Blacks revealed that Mills House would soon be an ALL BLACK Cultural Center. We discussed the Black demands with our head of residence John Dalpe and decided to move only under certain circumstances. The main one being that we could continue living as a community because Mills had become our way of life.

The Black takeover had been sparked by a racial fight earlier in the night. The Blacks were tired of waiting and we were the only obstacle in their way. Each of us decided to leave the building and omit any potential violence. We wanted to stay together and Brett House offered us temporary lodging. This is when the University Community had to realize that this affected everyone. We could NOT find living quarters that would allow us to continue our sense of community.

For one week we lived on mattresses, with our possessions packed and waiting for someone else to realize our sence of togetherness. Brooks House responded with living quarters for twenty-one people under the conditions that alternate facilities be found for Mental Health. That night Brooks saw the unity among us and felt that our increased bond of understanding could be shared with them. We had gone through this week together and would be the needed foundation for their community. The result was OUR community - Brookmill.

Our first desire was to understand the needs of Mental Health. Earlier Arnold House had been offered by the Math Department as an answer to our needs. The only drawback was that if we carried on our normal everyday functions their role as teachers would be impaired. Isn't it amazing that a department concerned with numbers was the first group to recognize their social obligation to people! Being sensitive to the wants of Mental Health we held a meeting and found that their function as an institution would be slightly impaired but they were willing to move, although with constant delays. To show the Brookmill togetherness, we are doing the moving ourselves with no loss to the patients or the rest of the University. Mental Health failed to contribute anything to the Brooks Community in two years.

Mental Health will have to move in June and if no other facility is sufficient, we will sacrifice our "permanent homes" What everyone must realize is that an isolated incident like Mills does effect the entire University community, and that a response should be spontaneous. The administration throughout the time should have concerned itself with a solution to the problem of the individual student, and for once become effective and unafraid of losing face. We must become unselfish if we are all to perpetuate our common human bond to each other.

Finally Brookmill hopes to serve as an example to the entire community and in result affect eighteen thousand and not just twenty-one. We will continue to be sensitive to the Mental Health needs until they are permanently settled. We will continue to answer letters in our vain, but hopeful attempts to let the University know how we feel as a group. We do feel that we have found a little more to help us on our ultimate goal of finding ourselves.

Natalie Cole to Appear In "Roar of The Greasepaint"

Sophomore Natalie Cole, daughter of singer Nat King Cole, will be appearing April 2-5 in the Operetta Guild's production of "The Roar of the Greasepaint, The Smell of The Crowd" in Bowker Auditorium.

This will be the second acting performance at UMass for the young singer. Miss Cole performed last year in the successful production, "Purlie Victoria."

Being the daughter of a famous singer has lately been a "definite hindrance." "I find myself with a tendency to play a role," said Natalie, who objects to being compared with her late father. "I want to be what I am."

The young Los Angeles resident became interested in UMass while attending prep school for two years in Northfield which is 30 miles from Amherst. She became acquainted with Northfield through her aunt, who is a graduate of the school.

Natalie has been singing all her life. Already she has cut two records -- a Christmas song, "Good Will", sung with her father, and a recording of "Ain't She Sweet" sung with her older sister, Carol, now an actress living in France.

Despite her promising attributes, the attractive sophomore (one of the five finalists for Winter Carnival Queen) is not planning a career as a professional entertainer. Instead, Miss Cole's professional interests lie in clinical child psychology. She intends to do further work in this field when she transfers next fall to the University of Southern California, which she feels offers better training in child psychology.

Nevertheless, Natalie isn't giving up performing altogether. She and two other UMass students are forming a singing group which may be playing on campus in the future.

Gymnasts Close Season with NE Championships

Redmen in Open Division 'Gainst Spfld & S. Conn

By JOE PARNAR
Staff Reporter

Closing out their current season, the UMass varsity gymnasts will compete in the New England Championships at Lowell Tech tomorrow. Team competition will get underway at 11 a.m.

The Redmen, third-place finishers at the Eastern League Championships last weekend, will be competing in the open division against Springfield College and Southern Connecticut State College.

The teams entering the meet will compete in one of two divisions. The open division is comprised of teams averaging over 130 points per meet. The second, or college division, consists of the remaining New England college teams.

The meet will consist of team and individual competition. The top eight performers in each event will enter the finals at 7:30 p.m.

During the regular season, U-Mass defeated Southern Connecticut and lost to Springfield College. Southern Conn should be stronger than when it met the Redmen in December since it will be able to use its frosh sensation, John Crosby, in the all around event. Crosby accounted for all six first places in a meet with the undefeated UMass frosh earlier in the season.

For the Redmen, Norm Vexler and Tony Vacca will compete in the all around event. Vexler has been a consistent performer for the Redmen all season and Vacca, plagued by injuries in the early part of the season, has looked very impressive in recent meets.

In the specialist department U-Mass will enter Mike Kasavana, Bob Nelligan and John Calabria in the floor exercise event. Frank Dean, Len Aubrey and Rick Riley will get the starting assignment on side horse.

On rings UMass will enter only two specialists, Aubrey and Tom Myslicki will get the nod from Coach Eric Kjeldsen in this event.

In the long horse vault, Bob Henry, Scott Stover and Steve Cary will represent UMass. Cary was UMass' lone medalist at the Eastern's last weekend, taking fifth in long horse vaulting.

On parallel bars the Redmen will enter Cary, Henry and Doug Salisbury. The final team event, horizontal bar, will have Stover, Myslicki and Salisbury competing for UMass.

Come in and see a brand new Porsche. With its engine in the middle.

A sports car built just for racing doesn't need a back seat. So its engine can be mounted in front of the rear axle, near the middle of the car.

That distributes its weight more equally, so it holds the road better and corners better than ordinary cars.

We think it's time you shared those advantages, so we're selling a couple of mid-engine cars you can drive on the street.

The 4-cylinder 914 model costs $3595.00* It has an electronically fuel-injected engine, goes 110 mph and does 0-60 in 13 seconds.

The 6-cylinder 914/6 model costs $5999.00* goes 125 mph and does 0-60 in 9.9 seconds.

Both come with a built-in roll bar, removable fiberglass roof, 5-speed stick or optional 4-speed Sportomatic, two trunks, and the kind of craftsmanship expected from Porsche.

So if you're thinking about a true, two-seat sports car, think about this: When you don't get a back seat, you should at least get an engine in its place.

NEW YORK (AP) - Rich Yunkus, who grew up in the Midwest and plays his college basketball in the South, hopes to find a home in New York as the 33rd edition of the National Invitation Tournament opens at Madison Square Garden Friday night.

Georgia Tech's Rich Kid leads the Yellow Jackets against Duquesne in the curtain-raiser of a doubleheader that opens the glamour-tinted tourney. St. John's of New York plays Miami, Ohio, in the second game.

Yunkus, who averaged 30.4 points a game to rank as the nation's 7th leading scorer, is among a covey of headline-grabbing athletes who will compete in the week-long event ending March 21 with the title game.

Most prominent among these is Pete Maravich, the crown prince of college basketball. Maravich, of Louisiana State University, is the all-time scoring king with 3,590 career points and leads the nation with a 46.6 average this year.

Also on display will be Charlie "Great" Scott of North Carolina, a 27-point-a-game scorer and a ball-handling wizard.

Other liminaries include, Mike Newlin of Utah, 26.7 points a game; Julius Erving of UMass, 26, and Dean "The Dream" Meminger, the high-scoring playmaker of eighth-ranked Marquette, the unofficial tourney favorite.

Following Friday night's twin bill, four games are scheduled for Saturday and a doubleheader Sunday afternoon to complete first-round action. The quarter-finals will be played Monday and Tuesday, the semi-finals Thursday, with the windup on national television next Saturday.

Manhattan plays North Carolina and Army tackles Cincinnati in this Saturday's afternoon doubleheader and it's Duke-Utah, and U-Mass-Marquette at night. On Sunday, LSU plays Georgetown and Louisville meets Oklahoma.

The LSU-Georgetown game will be nationally televised.

CAPRICORN PERSONS ARE RESERVED BUT NO LESS LOVING OR GIVING THAN ANY OTHER ZODIACAL SIGN. Time is on the side of these persons. They can play with it, bide it, wait with it and flourish when the time arrives.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): If travel you must, get numbers straight. There is tendency today for you to be absent-minded. Calls, appointments, dates could suffer as result of confusion. Double check directions.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Financial dealings require scrutiny of specialist, expert. Don't fall for tall story. Get the facts and let the flattery go. You have a right to protect yourself in the clinches.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Cycle remains on top. But your public relations could use an overhauling. You mean one thing — but give impression of something different. Clarify situation with mate, partner.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): A new resolution is one that you can and will keep — affects work and health. Promote your own case. You can do this without being selfish. Strive for self-esteem, not arrogance.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 23): Some friends try to aid in fulfillment of desires. But it turns out that you do the helping rather than vice versa. This is fine. You feel better. You are a better host than a guest. Ride along

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Your judgment of property values could leave something to be desired today. You may be letting imagination run away — without restrains. Look ahead, but also get money's worth now.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): You get chance to break from routine. Can be exciting but also costly. Accent on journeys, writing, publishing, creative urges put to practical use. Play game according to rules.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): You found out things yesterday. Now, today, have courage to utilize information. Means don't backtrack. Go to source. Then you will find that crimps, entanglements vanish.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Best to let others do the asserting. You are at your best today gathering rather than dispensing information. Family member can prove a wonderful ally. Respond accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Your illusions can be beautiful. But today you can be a victim of self-deception — if you so permit. Strive to see people, propositions in realistic light.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): You will find that it is difficult to hold emotional reins. All the way or nothing — that is the key. Strive to fulfill commitments. But also make room for logic.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Spread influence. Strive to build public image. Analyze what it is you really desire. Then take steps to reach goal. Finish what you started in recent past.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are more practical than many give you credit for being. There is much inner strength. You are going to be happier in domestic area.

Redmen Challenge Marquette in NIT

UMass is Underdog to Warriors In Tommorrow's Nine P.M. Tilt

VERY IMPORTANT: There are still NIT tickets available at the Boyden ticket office (255 Boyden) and can be picked up today from 8:30 a.m. to one p.m. All on-campus sales will be terminated at one o'clock today; any tickets which are not sold by that time will have to be returned to New York. There are approximately 800 student tickets left and about 150 adult ducats available. Prices are $2.50 for the student tix and $7.50 for the adult tix.

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

UMass faces its biggest basketball challenge of the year tomorrow night at nine p.m. when the underdog Redmen go up against Marquette University, the top-seeded team, in the first round of the 33rd Annual National Invitation Tournament.

Coach Jack Leaman realizes this challenge. "Any time you play the number one seed, you're playing the number one team in the tournament," he knows. "We'll be a slight underdog," he concedes but is quick to add, "We've been down before, and have risen to the occasion."

And Leaman has an answer for all the pessimists who claim the Redmen will get blown out of Madison Square Garden, "If I thought we we're going down there to get annihilated, I wouldn't have accepted the NIT bid," he assures.

The eighth-ranked (by AP) and tenth-ranked (by UPI) Warriors from Milwaukee, Wisconsin will be a tough team for UMass to beat, no doubt about that. In trying to compare this Redman-Warrior matchup to other tilts UM has been involved in this year, one is reminded of the January affair against Pennsylvania, at the time the 12th-ranked team nationally.

The Redmen were young and relatively uncoordinated when they played the Quakers yet were in the game all the way through the last minute only to end up losing by ten, 75-65. Penn lost but two games this season and was a highly regarded squad. As far as comparing Marquette to Penn, Leaman simply says, "They're every bit as good as Penn."

Leaman feels that the key Warrior to look out for will be Dean Meminger and the head coach is planning to use a team-approach on defense to contain the 6' junior guard who averages 19 points per contest.

Other Marquette notables will be 6'5 forward Ric Cobb, 6'3 guard Jell Sewell, 6'5 forward Gary Brell and 6'6 center Joe Thomas, all of whom average in double figures.

The just mentioned players and Meminger are a defensive-minded unit. They employ a tenacious zone press and take advantage of the opponent's mistakes. The Redmen have their troubles with the turnover phase of the game, but Leaman isn't overly worried.

"We hope to cut down on turnovers," he stated but was convinced that the effects of UMass' multiple amount of turnovers is emphasized too highly.

He explained, "In games where we run, we turn the ball over more than in games in which we play discipline basketball." He pointed out that, in games in which the Redmen committed large amounts of turnovers were usually the games in which UMass romped. Thus the effect of those mistakes, to the coach, was more or less negligible.

Although Leaman is aware that the Warriors will press the Redmen, he is confident that it can be broken with some three-on-one and three-on-two fast breaks.

By the time Saturday night rolls around, it will mark a 12-day layoff for UMass, which last saw in action on March 2 against New Hampshire. Asked if such a long time away from the court tussles will have an effect on the Redmen, Leaman answered, "No, I don't think so. I think coaches sometimes use that as a crutch."

To explain his position, the head mentor said that UM has expended a lot of energy and emotion over the course of its season-capping ten-game win streak and that such a layoff served as a much-needed rest period. In fact, he put it this way, "I think, realistically, the layoff helped us."

Practice sessions all week have gone good. Leaman singled out Wednesday's practice as one of the best sessions he has conducted all year. The Redmen worked out last night and will have one more tune-up, a brief shooting drill on Saturday morning at Madison Square Garden.

Leaman had his usual good words for the fans that have supported UMass this season. He boasted, "Without a doubt, I know our fans are going to be number one in the tourney; let's hope the team will be able to make the same claim."

Those same five Redmen who have started throughout the ten-game victory stretch will again get the first nod; Ray Ellerbrook, Jack Gallagher, Dick Samuelson, Julius Erving and John Betancourt. The three top reserves, Dennis Chapman, Ken Mathias and Mike Pagliara will see lots of action as will Bob Dempsey and Rick Vogeley.

And, as nine p.m. approaches and last preparations are taken care of, Leaman can ponder for a moment and say, "I have complete confidence we'll go down there ready to play."

HOOP NOTES - A new entity has been created....It's the Redman Network and it comprises radio stations WMUA (91.1 FM), WHDH (Boston) and WHMP (Northampton)....All three of these stations will carry the play-by-play provided by Hal Dash and Ken Horseman, of the UMass-Marquette affair....There is presently no word on local television coverage as Springfield's WWLP and WHYN were not able to clear network committments on Saturday night to carry the game.... Only hope is Worcester's Channel 27 but that remains as a mere educated guess as of now.... The Redmen will depart for New York from outside the Cage locker room today at one p.m..... A large student send-off would be a most impressive experience for players and fans alike....For those who are going to the NIT, Leaman has this to say, "I hope that all of our fans remember that they are representing all of us, as well as the team."....The team, as an official guest of the tournament, has been invited to attend the Rangers-Boston hockey game tonight.

THE E'S HAVE IT – UMass will start Julius Erving and Ray Ellerbrook, the two Big E's, along with Jack Gallagher, Dick Samuelson and John Betancourt against tough Marquette. (MDC Cartoon by Fred Rosenthal)

Metawampe's Picks

It is not a misprint. The Great One is back, back to warm the cockles of all UMie hearts. He is breaking all tradition in returning outside the realm of grid season. In the past, this was akin to Joel Stone going to a gourmet's luncheon, or the News Bureau scooping the 'Hamp Gazette.

He had disappointed not a few when he failed to appear at Yule time. Where was he, you ask? Well, it'a long story. Would it suffice to say he was ringing his chimes with the old squaw, Princess Honey Bear? He was busy basking in sunshine, washing his clothes in blue cheer, and trying to regain his youth by going to vitamin C springs.

Why did he return, you ask? Well, that's a long story too. Of course there is the amazing ascendency of the hoopsters to the pinnacle of basketball. The Great One has always loved roundball, to the point of sometimes getting on the old court himself and dribbling and shooting. And of course the guys down at Rob and Billy's Nursery were getting irritable having to work for a change, so GO (an abbreviation) wanted to give them a little joy.

There were other reasons too. Like hoping possibly to get Klondike Ken Johnson out of hiding, chiding Ted Kennedy for a big mouth, congratulating Frank Olken, and of course becoming part of the Wizadry of Oz.

Yes, he has returned. Back where he really belongs. And if you think the toilets were flushing a couple of weeks ago, wait until this morning.

Leaman: "This is the Greatest Team!"

(Today features the fifth and final of a special five-part series of interviews of UMass basketball players and their coach Jack Leaman by Denise Megnell, Monday Issue Editor of the Collegian.)

Jack Leaman, describing his latest tribe of Redmen, "This is the greatest team UMass has ever had – they have broken too many records not to be. My biggest thrill in basketball has been achieving the goals we set out to reach at the beginning of the season. And we have done it all through hard work and dedication."

The coach views his relationship with the team as "a family situation, not a business. You have to let them (the players) know of your interest in their education to insure getting a good student as well as a good athlete."

"Their first reason for being here should be education, their second basketball. After that they are free to take up anything that interests them providing they maintain excellence in the first two."

The advantages of a well-run athletic program are many, according to Leaman. He wants his players to learn how to compete, how to win, and, most importantly, how to accept defeat and start over.

"Athletics also contributes to the growth of the university. It provides a unifying force on campus and an outstanding way for people to spend their leisure time."

Coach Leaman has some definite views on the Redmen's future in the Yankee Conference, but stressed that his ideas do not necessarily reflect those (ideas) of others in the athletic department.

"UMass has outgrown the league. The great inequalities that exist between the three northern and three southern New England teams have caused a split that cannot be rejoined."

To get frosh players ready for the varsity team, the freshmen are informed of their good and bad points during their one year of playing. Also, they are told what will be expected of them in the fall when they try out for varsity ball.

"Their biggest adjustment is getting used to the higher level of competition, but even that is not too serious a problem. Talent can overcome experience in a very short time."

Leaman sees the captain's job as a two-fold endeavor. "He has to be a liaison between the team and the coach, seeing both sides' point of view. As a leader, he should try to keep both the 'playing and the unplaying factions happy."

As most hoop fans have noticed, the coach does quite a bit of yelling during the course of a game.

"The players have to feel as though I'm in the game with them. If the coach does not show enthusiasm, the team won't either. We strive for perfection, and the methods I use seem the best way for me to bring it out of the players."

Friday Night Poetry Reading Features McCarthy

By DON GLICKSTEIN
Collegian Staff

Reading to more than 2000 people at the Curry Hicks Cage last Friday night, Senator Eugene J. McCarthy, Robert Bly, and Jane Tokarz bitterly, humorously, and pensively attacked the undeclared war in Vietnam.

McCarthy was introduced with a poem by Robert Lowell about the Senator, read by co-coordinator of the Moratorium poetry, Donald Junkins. McCarthy was greeted with a standing ovation.

The Senator prefaced his readings and joked with the audience with the remark that opponents of his 1968 Presidential campaign had said that the real reason why he ran "was that I wanted to be published, and poets will do almost anything to be published." He then tongue-in-cheeked two rules for aspiring poets: that one should write poetry like a political campaign, not announcing one's candidacy, yet firmly believing in it, and, that one should always write one or two poems about another more prominent poet, so as to always be protected by the patron.

Senator McCarthy interspersed anecdotes and accounts of his Presidential campaign with his poetry. "Arles" was McCarthy's response to W. H. Auden's post-World War II peom about that god of war's death. "Kilroy", the Senator explained, was about the fact that GIs were "absent without leave in Vietnam."

"Three Bad Signs" told of Mc Carthy's experience campaigning in Indiana among more conservative voters. Basing three short poems on three signs that he had seen - "Peddlars Not Allowed", "Mixed Drinks", and "We Serve All Faiths" (a funeral home sign) - McCarthy tried to communicate to his audience what Indiana was really like; the state "is an act of will", existing only if people thought it existed. "I'm running here in place", McCarthy said in introduction to his poem, "Are You Running With Me Jesus?", taken from a book of the same title by Father Malcolm Boyd. "I'm an existential runner. I'm not matching my stride with Billy Graham." The Senator explained that his poem "Communion" contained an indirect reference to former President Lyndon Johnson's deer shooing at the LBJ Ranch. As a final poem, Senator McCarthy read "The Aardvark", a piece of verse which, he elucidated, contained the "ultimate metaphor." As an aside, McCarthy joked that the "ultimate metaphor", when a writer finds it, "you don't dare use it."

Other poems that McCarthy read were "Today the Time Began", "An Oregon Message" by William Stafford, "The Heron", "An Aging Politician", and "Agony 937", dedicated to Greek poet Georges Sepharis.

The program at the Cage had begun with one of the earliest anti-Vietnam war proponents, Robert Bly. Wearing a southwestern Indian serape, Mr. Bly entertained the audience with visual, emotive and ballet-like readings.

Attacking pro-war individuals, Bly directly, sarcastically, and bitterly degraded Presidents Johnson and Nixon. Johnson, he said in introduction to "Leaving New York, March 1968", "kind of stayed half-crazy during his entire administration". Bly also said that he didn't think "Ted Kennedy's plane accident was entirely an accident."

Bly decried a massacre of Indians by white genocists with an 1864 narration of "History of the Great Massacre in Minnesota".

Mr. Bly humorously linked the sexual repression of the Pilgrims to their turkey hunting and Thanksgiving, decrying "chickens walking on Calvinist grounds" with his poem "Pilgrim Fishheads".

Continuing to attack Presidents Johnson and Nixon, Bly read "President Johnson's Face on Television", calling the face "a stomach with eyes". Of Richard Nixon's smiles during his November 3 war speech, Bly said, "Everybody smiles when he's doing his thing, and his thing is failing."

Bly finished his readings with a ten minute "Poem on the Vietnam War", and received a standing ovation. He also read "Tongues Whirling", "Outhouse Poem Number One", "The President About To Address The Nation In The 8th Year of the Vietnam War", "Counting Small-Boned Bodies", and also a poem by Moratorium co-ordinator Joseph Langland.

Jane Tokarz, a local poetess, read six of her works after Mr. Bly: "Plants", "Underbrush", "Sometimes I Feel These Poems . . .", "Gemini Meets the Monk", "Stephanotus", and "For My Dim Love". Before she was introduced, a plea was made for contributions for the Chicago 8 and for the Black Panther Party.

Speaking in a personal interview after his readings, Senator McCarthy said of freedom and the UMass-Hubert Humphrey incident, "It's a mixed case. I really don't know what went on. I've never really felt out down in a situation like that, and I've been in a few myself." When requested that he run for President in 1972, McCarthy said, "It's too early to tell what's going to happen." McCarthy was finally asked who his favorite poet was. "Probably Yeats", he said.

11th Hour Series Features Advisor of CCEBS Tonight

The Maroon Keys will present the second 11th Hour Series lecture Monday at 8 in the Student Union Ballroom. Speaker for the second of the three-part lecture series will be the advisor to the CCEBS program, Leroy Richardson.

Richardson, a veteran who served with Army Intelligence, is a senior at the University as well as advisor and counselor to the CCEBS. Richardson has attended Merrit College in Oakland and the University of California at Berkeley.

The Series which gives the speaker the opportunity to speak on his thoughts "given one hour to live", concentrates on speakers from within the University community. Richardson will speak on a model solution to alleviate humanities problems through a new world order. He has titled his lecture, "Blueprint for a New World Order."

The 11th Hour Series will conclude after vacation with Ron Bitel speaking at a time to be announced.

Special Summer Courses For Credit-Short Seniors

Some students needing only one or two courses to graduate have requested that a Special Session be arranged offering certain basic courses as early in the summer as possible.

Students may sign up for TWO COURSES; when sign-up is complete, the courses will be scheduled to minimize conflicts, since we have no idea in advance what combinations of courses will draw the most interest. MINIMUM ENROLLMENT IN EACH COURSE IS 12: if 12 people do not sign up for a course, it will not be offered.

Anti-Draft Week Plans Finalized

This week is national "anti-draft week", March 16-22. National anti-draft activities are being organized by the New Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam.

Hundreds of cities and towns are planning local activities including organizing in high schools to have assemblies on the draft, demanding high school draft counselors and draft programs, leafleting shopping centers, draft boards, and universities, demonstrations at draft boards, induction centers, and recruitment centers, draft-card burnings and turn-ins, and non-violent draft board disruptions such as demanding to see one's draft file, or asking numerous and difficult questions of the draft board clerks, or informing the draft board of every move made by a registrant, or draft board sit-ins.

Locally, there will be two major activities. On Wednesday, the Committee to Repeal the Draft at UMass will have a table in the Student Union Lobby at which members of the University Community will be able to sign cards to be sent to their Congressmen, urging the m to fight legislatively for draft repeal by 1971.

On Thursday, Anti-Draft Action, a coalition of area social action groups is planning a demonstration at draft board No. 15, at 135 Main St., Northampton. The demonstration will last from 11:00 until 4:00. Draft card burnings will take place at 1:00 (if interested, call 253-3683).

There will be a meeting this evening at 7:00 in the Student Union New Hatch to finalize and prepare for Thursday's activities. If you are interested in participating and helping, come to the meeting or call the Valley Peace Center at 253-3683.

Trustees Unanimously Oppose Tuition Hike

At their meeting in Boston last Friday, the University trustees voted unanimously to oppose any raise in the current $200-a-year tuition. Other business brought before the board included student objection to the policy by which commencement speakers are selected, a proposal concerning the university's educational television channel, and approval of preliminary plans for an engineering laboratory on the Amherst campus.

The unanimous vote on tuition reaffirmed a long-standing policy in opposition to any raise in tuition. The action followed a request from students at the UMass Boston campus asking trustees to oppose a Massachusetts House bill seeking to raise the tuition to $600. There are several bills before the legislature seeking hikes in the tuition fees at UMass as well as at all state colleges, universities, technical schools and community colleges.

The trustees' opposition is based on the premise that the low tuitions now charged make available a college education to students from middle and low income families who could not afford to attend a private college. Trustees also object to tuition hikes because the money from tuitions charged at these state-owned institutions of higher learning goes into the state's general fund and is not earmarked for educational purposes.

Students from the Amherst campus protested what they consider to be "taxation without representation" and asked the trustees to waive the $10 commencement fee for the 3,000 seniors. David Veale senior class president, told the trustees that the students object to the fee because they do not have a part in choosing the commencement speaker and honorary degree candidates.

The trustees also agreed Friday to a proposal by WGBH-TV (Channel 2) to take over the university's educational television channel. U-Mass has been able to negotiate with federal officials for a Channel 57 frequency. However, the university has not yet been able to come up with funds to build a station or transmitter. Under the new arrangement, WGBH will take over the channel and transmit its programs to the university and surrounding towns. WGBH programs are presently received on only a limited basis in this area.

Trustees said it will be about 18 months before program transmission begins. They also indicated that the university will be able to originate programs from the WGBH facility once a studio is built. The university will become a member of the WGBH foundation in the arrangement for a membership fee of $15,000 a year.

Preliminary plans were also approved Friday for an $18.9million engineering laboratory building for the Amherst campus. The proposed 225,000 square-foot building will house the chemical engineering department and research laboratories for the systems, environmental and materials engineering departments.

National Ecology Conference Planned By United Auto Workers

At the college representative meeting held Saturday at the University of Michigan, Mark Rosenfeld of the UMass Coalition for Environmental Quality was named one of two national directors for the continuance of ecology action programs beyond the April 22 teach-ins. The other director is Stephen Stollmack, a graduate of the Ohio State University, who in the past has been on the national steering committee of the New Mobe.

After meeting with Walter Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, the directors announced that a national conference of ecology moratorium leaders would be held in June at the UAW resort in upper Michigan. All costs including transportation will be paid by Reuther's union. The purpose of this convention will be to explore the area of worker involvement in the pollution crisis. Present at the meeting will be many representatives of major industry and labor to be confronted by student groups. Also, this conference should include the reports on action taken in the various regions and the planning of new tactics.

Marijuana Smoking Linked to My Lai?

WASHINGTON (AP) - Reported use of drugs by U. S. troops in Vietnam is coming under congressional scrutiny with one senator suggesting marijuana smoking as a possible factor in the alleged massacre of civilians at My Lai.

Rep. Peter N. Kyros, D-Maine, a member of a House public health subcommittee leaves Thursday for Saigon to see firsthand "if there is any truth to reports that our men's performance has been hindered" by smoking marijuana and using other drugs.

Meanwhile, Sen. Thomas J. Dodd's juvenile delinquency subcommittee plans to open hearings March 24 on the GI drug problem with the focus on the alleged My Lai incident.

The Connecticut Democrat has told the Senate his subcommittee will examine "marijuana toxic psychosis" and what possible involvement it had with the events at My Lai.

Several American soldiers have been charged with crimes in an alleged massacre of Vietnamese civilians in the tiny hamlet. There has been no public mention of marijuana in the investigations thus far.

In a statement Sunday, the senator noted that ten days before the My Lai incident on March 16, 1968, "We were told by the Defense Department in public hearings that they had found an increase of more than 2,000 per cent in the number of GIs using marijuana in Vietnam between 1965 and 1967."

"We should know if drug use influences the behavior of our troops wherever they might be," Dodd added.

Pot smoking in Vietnam has been the subject of numerous surveys and investigation by both the Defense Department and nongovernmental agencies, but never by Congress.

"Physicians in Vietnam have been impressed with the severity and frequency of adverse reactions" to smoking pot, two psychiatrists reported last October in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Drs. John A. Talbot and James W. Teague reported some troops having severe mental disturbances, a condition made potentially dangerous by the environment of the war zone.

They said pot smoking in Vietnam is not uncommon and referred to surveys indicating 30 to 65 per cent of GIs have used pot at least once during their tour of duty.

Marijuana is cheap and can be bought almost anywhere in the Southeast Asian country.

Anti-war Bill Faces House Debate Today

BOSTON (AP) - A bill that would make it illegal for a Massachusetts resident to have military duty in a war zone without a congressional declaration of war is expected to be the state House of Representatives floor fight Monday.

The measure passed a preliminary House test last week.

The actual question before the House was that of killing the bill, and this was denied on the 116 to 110 roll call vote.

It has the approval of House Speaker David M. Bartley, D-Holyoke.

Its sponsor, State Rep. H. James Shea Jr., D-Newton, says he hopes the bill will force a U. S. Supreme Court test of the legality of the Vietnam war.

The bill would allow a soldier to challenge in the courts-either through his own attorney or through the state attorney general - his transfer to a war zone in the absence of a congressional declaration of war.

The bill's supporters say once the law is on the books any case predicated on it could be appealed up to the Supreme Court. Such an appeal, they say, might force the court to rule on the constitutionality of the war.

During last week's debate Bartley said the measure was unprecedented and that "the best reason to get involved is the fact that more than 40,000 young Americans have died in a war of dubious constitutionality."

Shea said the U. S. Supreme Court "until now has refrained from considering the deep constitutional issues involved here."

American Munitions Ship Diverted to Cambodia

WASHINGTON (AP) - An American cargo ship carrying bombs and other munitions to a U. S. base in Thailand was diverted to Cambodian waters apparently after being seized by "possibly mutinous members" of its civilian crew, the Pentagon said Sunday.

Sources reported the Coast Guard Cutter Mellon had intercepted a message from an unidentified sender aboard the vessel, the Columbia Eagle, saying "I have been relieved from the bridge."

Some Navy officers expressed belief the captain, identified as Donald A. Swann, 51, of Portland, Ore., might still be aboard his ship but Pentagon officials said they had no positive information as to the skipper's whereabouts.

The Pentagon said another ship in military charter service had reported picking up 24 crew members of the Columbia Eagle from two lifeboats. Another 15 apparently stayed with the vessel.

According to first reports, the Pentagon said, "it appears that the American cargo ship was diverted in international waters by persons aboard, possibly mutinous members of the civilian crew."

The Defense department did not expect to get further information about what had happened aboard the Columbia Eagle until the 24 crewmen picked up were landed in Thailand.

"The 24 crew members who were picked up in international waters reportedly informed the civilian master of the Rappahannock tha t there had been a 'bomb scare' aboard the Columbia Eagle," the Pentagon statement said.

"These crew members of the Columbia Eagle expressed belief that their ship was continuing to its destination to Sattahip, Thailand with . . .15 crew members aboard."

Later the Pentagon said it was learned that the ship moved into Cambodian waters near a small island west of Sihanoukville.

But the Pentagon authorities were reluctant to discuss details because, they said, they wanted to be sure of their information. Officially, the Pentagon said that "some sporadic transmissions from the Columbia Eagle were monitored early this morning before the Columbia Eagle's radio went silent while the ship was in Cambodian waters."

Both the Columbia Eagle and the Rappahannock are under charter to the Military Sea Transportation Service (MSTS) and are manned by civilian crews.

Saying the messages were fragmentary in nature, the Pentagon said "it has not been possible to determine from them the exact situation aboard the Columbia Eagle."

One naval source did say "there has not been word that indicates any violence."

It was unclear when the takeover actually occurred. The Pentagon said the Rappahannock picked up the 24 crew members sometime Saturday.

A Navy search plane spotted the Columbia Eagle in the Gulf of Siam between 9 p.m. and 10 p.m. Its sighting by Coast Guard cutter Mellon was sent to the scene. It sighted the Columbia Eagle anchored in Cambodian waters, the Pentagon said.

The Pentagon statement said the Columbia Eagle loaded at Long Beach, Calif. and San Francisco with 750-pound and 500-pound bombs, as well as other munitions with Sattahip as its destination.

"The Columbia Eagle reportedly carried a crew of 39 members," the statement said. "It is not known whether all of these 39 crew members were American citizens."

Professionalism Highlights First Studio Theatre Show

If the weekend production of "Great American Desert" is any indication of the quality the Studio Theatre will be turning out, the Speech Department can consider the money spent on renovations of the South College studio a worthwhile investment.

The very fact that turn-away crowds made extra performances necessary proves that the Studio Theatre is appreciated on campus. And performances such as the one this weekend can easily make the facility even more appreciated.

Working in the round is never an easy task, but the cast of "Desert" managed to play well to the entire audience. The multi-media show which was playing as the audience entered set the mood effectively as did the songs by the cast.

The whole production was polished, and the cast, especially the three cowboys, did a good job with the pantomine. Exceptionally fine performances were turned in by Steve Woodard, as the old cowboy, and Penn Hendler, who played Wild Bill Hickock. The only shortcomings seemed to be lack of experience and depth on the part of the young cowboy and the banker.

Throughout the play , the cast showed its professionalism as the "mortals" managed to maintain their characters while the "gods" gave their commercial messages, and the total concentration on the part of all but the banker kept the audience involved.

The play itself was well-chosen to fit in with the intimate setting of the Studio, and showed a great deal of effort by cast, director Gary Stewart, and the lighting technicians.

If all Studio Theatre productions follow the example of professionalism and polish set by "The Great American Desert", this facility may become a prime means of brining entertainment and art to the University community.

"Mr. Popper's Penguins" Opens University Children's Theatre

MR. POPPER'S PENGUINS, a play for children, will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Children's Theatre March 19 through 21. The play is a dramatization of a favorite children's book by Richard and Florence Atwater. It is a story of a modern family who, not having much money to manage on, find life complicated by their accidental acquisition of a family of penguins.

Because of the nature of the script, a mixed cast of children and adults will be used, children from the Amherst area playing the penguins. This kind of casting will be used occasionally by the University Theatre, but it does not mark a change in policy which dictates production of the best possible plays FOR the child audience BY university actors.

MR. POPPER'S PENGUINS is directed by Mrs. Dorothy Aldrich, the Director of Children's Theatre at the University. The play's setting will be the kind of house children might design to have fun in, with steps and platforms in unexpected places, like a treehouse on the ground. The refrigerator, home of the penguins, will be partly transparent and decorated with gingham patterns which will be repeated elsewhere in the play.

MR. POPPER'S PENGUINS, by Albert O. Mitchell, will be presented at the following times: Thursday, March 19, 4:30 & 7:30 p.m. Friday, March 20, 7:30 p.m. Saturday, March 21, 10:00 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Admission 50¢ by advance ticket sale (reservation only). Bartlett Theatre Box Office 545-2579. All performances are in the Bartlett Theatre, University of Massachusetts.

DER GREMLIN IS KOMIN!

Once upon a time, in the mysterious Forest of Black, lived a family of elves. These industrious sprites made a good living, one might even say a fortune, by making and selling beetles to Americans. Now, the American Elves, called Gremlins in their native habitat, bought lots of the beetles because they were foreign, small and different. They finally bought so many that while they were still small and foreign they were hardly different. One day after his foreign beetle rolled over for the third time a particularly bitter Gremlin bit it. It was a bit crusty but foreign and different. This Gremlin told another Gremlin about eating beetles, and in no time it was a fad. You know how fads go, everyone just had to try one, and that's how, in America, around 1970, all the beetles were replaced by Gremlins. To this day in the few pockets of beetles that exist in the world, the most feared words are 'the Gremlins are coming.' April 1st.

Brubeck and Mulligan Unbeatable Combination

For most, the name Dave Brubeck means one thing--the best jazz composer-pianist in the business today. Gerry Mulligan also goes unequalled in the field of baritone sax. Couple these two giants with the untouchable drumming of Alan Dawson and the solid bass playing of Jack Six and you have a quartet of enormous potential. Friday might at Bowker Auditorium, that potential was realized; Brubeck and company were there to let loose with some wild, great sounds that left no question as to why their reputations stand as they are.

The jazz was superlative---cool, hot; driving, soothing; calculated, makeshift; always distinctive and profession. An opening jam on "Things Ain't What They Used to Be" showed the quartet's style at the offset. The audience lived it--feet began tapping as indifferent staring turned to smiling awe. Typical of the jazz greats that they are, Brubeck and Mulligan had more fun than anyone else.

Changing tempo with a bluesy version of "New Orleans", the quartet improvised with an abandon that left everyone laughingly amazed. Next, Brubeck led the group in one of his own works, "Lullaby of Mexico", a masterful piece that displayed Brubeck's unparalleled modern jazz techniques.

"Out of Nowhere" was a real foot-stamping, main-lining type of jam, never lagging for a moment. Mulligan was out of sight in his leads. Then Brubeck took over and it was non-stop pulsating jazz all the way. Back to an easy mood with "These Foolish Things" and more incredible sax improvisations by Mulligan. Brubeck's steel-smooth lead covered the rhythmic and color spectrum. Jack Six's solo on bass was great; Six proved almost as much fun to watch as he was to hear.

Then came one of the highlights of the evening--Alan Dawson's unbelievable ten-minute drum solo in "Indian Song"; a thing composed especially for him by Brubeck himself. Combining sticks and maraca, Dawson produced a dimension of rhythms that seemed inexhaustible.

Finishing with a 1970 interpretation of the 20's standard, "Limehouse Blues", the Brubeck-Mulligan combination again was unbeatable. If they had played all night, it still wouldn't have been enough.

French Film Series

"Carnival in Flanders," Jacques Feyder's witty and historical reconstruction of the Spanish Army's invasion of Flanders will be shown Wednesday, March 18, 1970 in Mahar Auditorium. Infused with the essence of both Breughel and Boccacio, this tale contrasts charmingly heroic wives and their terrified burgher husbands. Winner of many international awards, including the New York Film Critic's Award for Best Foreign Film, this classic French production, with English subtitles, begins at 8 p.m. Sponsored by the French Corridors, admission is $ .75.

The Silent Majority

WASHINGTON - A friend of mine named Bill Rabe, who lives in Saulte Ste. Marie, Mich., heads a very successful phonograph company called Hush. Where Rabe's company differs with others is that the Hush label specializes in the recording of silent records. Realizing that as other companies raised the decibels of their records there would be a great market for silence, Rabe has been successfully recording silent records under the Hush labelsince 1960.

His first golden record which sold over a million copies was "Calvin Coolidge Speaks" which had on the other side of the label "More of Greta Garbo." Rabe followed up this silent LP with "Wall Street Cheering Herbert Hoover After the Stock Market Crash."

Every year, Rabe has put out three or four silent records that have been played and appreciated by Americans all over this country.

This year, Rabe has just issued a new release that could be the biggest hit Hush record ever had. It is titled "The Silent Majority" and has been recorded on LP as well as tape. Rabe and his brilliant staff of sound engineers traveled all over the country to get the exact silence necessary for each cut of the label. "The Silent Majority" is not only an electronic marvel, but an inspirational triumph as well. It could, with the proper playing by disk jockeys, become the biggest seller since "My Fair Lady."

I spoke to Rabe by telephone and he told me that Hush label was working day and night to meet the orders.

"I believe our timing was perfect. The Silent Majority wanted to hear themselves on records, and if I must say so myself, the silence on this particular record is deafening."

"Where did you record 'The Silent Majority'?" I asked him.

"We went everywhere, but we still found the best quality of silence to be in Washington, D.C. For example, the first cut on the record is titled 'The State Department Explaining Our Commitment in Laos.' It's a silent triumph.

"We also recorded 'Civil Rights Leaders Listening to a Speech by Spiro Agnew,' 'The Pentagon at the Senate Defending Lockheed Overruns' and 'Strom Thurmond's Attack on the People Who Overturned the School Buses in Lamar, S.C.' "

"You certainly got some great silence there," I said.

"That isn't the half of it," Rabe said. "We recorded Atty. Gen. Mitchell when he was told his wife had just appeared on CBS television."

"But he was speechless."

"Exactly. We got it all on the record, as well as three minutes of 'The Wit and Warmth of Martha Mitchell,' "

"What other silences did you record?"

"We believe we got a wonderful cut of Lawrence O'Brien when he was told the Democratic Party owed $9 million, but we could never get Hubert Humphrey to stay quiet long enough to record him. So we eliminated him from the record."

"Did you record Daniel Moynihan's reaction when reporters told him that his phrase urging the President to use 'benign neglect' in dealing with the blacks had been made public?"

"No, we passed that one up, though we did record President Nixon alone in the Oval Room trying to decide whether Texas or Penn State had the number one football team in the country."

Rabe said he was proudest of the last part of his record. He said he recorded 5,000 members of the Silent Majority shaking their heads while watching Huntley and Brinkley on television.

Not A Revolution

(Editors note: The following letter is reprinted from the SPRINGFIELD UNION)

Dear Sir:

On February 26, 1970 your paper published a by-lined article reporting upon the "Plan to Silence Humphrey" at the University of Massachusetts. I wish to emphatically protest the accuracy of those portions of the piece dealing with my activities and my speech at a rally the afternoon preceding the scheduled Humphrey lecture.

I was invited to speak at a gathering called to protest the Chicago trials. I understood that I was to be the only speaker and that a film about Bobby Seale was to follow my presentation. My speech did not refer to Mr. Humphrey and was not part of any plan to disrupt his appearance. I believe that Mr. Perry, your reporter, understood that but his article implies, to many, that my speech was related to certain events (calls to action against Mr. Humphrey by others) which occurred thereafter; those events were unforeseen by me and, indeed, prior to them, I had left the stage and had remained on the premises merely to watch the film. In fact, the thrust of my speech was an attack on "scapegoating". Since I condemned the propensity to single out Judge Hoffman as a villain, I would hardly substitute Mr. Humphrey for him. In fact, I did not. As a civil liberties lawyer, I obviously do not endorse, indeed I abhor, any attempt anywhere to silence a speaker who has a right to be where he is.

While the article's characterization of my role in the matter may be deemed inadvertently incorrect, of graver consequence is your reporter's misquotation of my speech; these statements are simply wrong, as an analysis of the unedited transcript of my speech (which is available) will clearly demonstrate. After castigating Judge Hoffman's conduct of the Chicago trial, I told the audience that radicals must reach the American people with their message in the streets, not the courts, Fundamental attitudes will not be changed by the legal process, but social communication. None of the long quotes attributed to me reflected either the language, substance, or spirit of that appeal. I said that the "streets are our natural habitat for communicating information", a Constitutional truism. After warning that we live in an era of hostility toward dissent, I said that "As a civil liberties lawyer of course I'll haul all of them (repressive laws) into court if I can." When I spoke of the need for social change, I emphasized that "socially dissident movements do win because they get a certain amount of power behind them, the power of numbers maybe, the power of public opinion," a historical truism. In telling people not to rely upon the courts to achieve the reforms they desire, I said, "my only message is to work to change the society not in the courts but in society itself by whatever one does in the streets, moratoria etc." Finally, I concluded by quoting Alexis De Toqueville's warning that "It is a strange thing what authority the opinion of mankind grants to the intervention of courts. It clings even to the mere appearance of justice long after the substance has evaporated; it lends bodily form to the shadow of the law", to that I added, "Our law today is in extreme shadow and let's do all we can to lend it bodily form." Hardly a call to revolution, I am sure you will agree.

I trust that you will print this letter IN TOTO in the spirit of fair play which our Vice President, among others, has asked the news media to adhere to.

Yours truly.

He who knows only his own side of the case, knows little of that. His reasons may be good, and no one may have been able to refute them. But if he is equally unable to refute the reasons on the opposite side; if he does not so much as know what they are, he has no ground for preferring either opinion. The rational position for him would be the suspension of judgement, and unless he contents himself with that, he is either led by authority, or adopts, like the generality of the world, the side to which he feels the most inclination. Nor is it enough that he should hear the arguments of adversaries from his own teachers, presented as they state them, and accompanied by what they offer as refutations. That is not the way to do justice to the arguments, or bring them into real contact with his own mind. He must be able to hear them from persons who actually believe them; who defend them in earnest, and do their very utmost for them. He must know them in their most plausible and persuasive form; he must feel the whole force of the difficulty which the true view of the subject has to encounter and dispose of; else he will never really possess himself of the portion of the truth which meets and removes that difficulty. Ninety-nine in a hundred of what are called educated men are in this condition; even of those who can argue fluently for their opinions. Their conclusion may be true, but it might be false for anything they know: they have never thrown themselves into the mental position of those who think differently from them, and considered what such persons may have to say; and consequently they do not, in any proper sense of the word, know the doctrine which they themselves profess. They do not know those parts of it which explain and justify the remainder; the considerations which show that a fact which seemingly conflicts with another is reconcilable with it, or that, of two apparently strong reasons, one and not the other ought to be preferred. All that part of the truth which turns the scale, and decides the judgement of a completely informed mind, they are strangers to; nor is it ever really known but to those who have attended equally and impartially to both sides, and endeavored to see the reasons of both in the strongest light. So essential is this discipline to a real understanding of moral and human subjects, that if opponents of all important truths do not exist, it is indispensible to imagine them, and supply them with the strongest arguments which the most skillful devil's advocate can conjure up.

The New Law

To The Editor:

For many years now, the law schools have been turning out a pretty standard product. The nation has suffered as a consequence. Year after year, law school admissions people have been going out to the same schools, and, year after year, have returned with that familiar law school type - dull, hardworking and conservative.

We of the Georgetown Law School Student Bar Association are trying to change all that by initiating the first Peoples' Lawyer Recruitment Tour. The Student Bar Association is made up largely of students with radical politics. We are in search of the students with similar views: the ones the admissions office missed. We think their number is large. Convinced that law schools should be focal points for radical social action, we want to recruit the people who will want to do just that: activists, women and Third World people.

Legal training is a skill the Movement needs. In the Seventies, the repression can only continue. Many will need to be defended from political indictments; many will have to be kept out of jail and in the streets. Corporations must be pressured in order to restore the environment. The individual rights of the poor, the black and the brown, and the young will have to be safeguarded. Lawyers cannot stop calculated repression; but they can throw up roadblocks which gain valuable time.

Our hope is that we can talk to Movement - oriented people who have not made up their minds about what to do after college. We hope to persuade them that studying law is not instant cooptation. We want to convince them that they can transform the law schools into places relevant to the needs of the people. The burden of proof is on us: they will interview us.

Could we ask you to talk up our visit amongst your people (and anyone else that might be interested)? What we need is some sensational organizing to get out the people who can't believe a Movement law school is for real.

Our recruiters will be at UMass today, Monday, March 16 from 12:30 p.m. until 5:00 p.m. Hope to see you soon.

Keys

To the editor:

Thousands of dollars worth of students' valuables have been stolen from Eugene Field House during the last two months. Field residents took the initiative in forming special security precautions. These precautions included student security guards in residence corridors and on the main floor. Field residents also demanded that the dormitory be re-keyed immediately.

What did the administration do to alleviat e the theft problem? The answer is that for two months they ignored the demand for a sub-master key system!!

Now Field House has been told that a conference of 300 educators will be housed in the dorm during Spring Vacation. The executive council of Field House elected to set up the conference room as a place where valuable belongings may be stored. For those who do not wish to use the conference room, the counselors rooms will be available for storage. However, the university will not take any responsibility for stolen or damaged articles NO MATTER WHERE THEY ARE STORED!!

What does the re-keying have to do with our dorm being forcibly taken over by 300 unknown educators? The answer is that Field is now being re-keyed not because the administration was responsive to the increasing thefts at Field House, but as a bribe to make the students put up with the take-over of their rooms.

Another factor that must not be overlooked is that of the phychological repercussions that will result from the take-over. Each student tries to make his "room" his "home". How then, in all conscience, can the university tell us that the rooms will be arbitrarily taken over by a group of strangers.

Shouldn't the House residents decide who will and WILL NOT live in their rooms? Why does the administration only react when they have a chance to make money at the students' expense? These questions need to be answered. and need to be answered now!!!

Congratulations Mr. Fitzgerald. Someone finally had the guts to stand up against our cheerless cheerleaders. It is really sad when 16 year old high school girls make our cheerleaders look like the attendees of a wake.

The one person who has really put in an effort is Dave Caulette (the blond headed one with the funny cartwheel for those who don't know him). He went to Maine, the hell hole of Manchester at St. Anselms, and the last game at Durham, N.H. with the real fans of UMass basketball. Now it seems that Dave can't cheer in Madison Sq. Garden because he's not a "real" cheerleader. He took the job when the others were too apathetic, and now the "real" cheerleaders want the credit.

Give us Dave and the true fans at N.Y., and we'll see you at the NIT.

Hypocracy

To the editor:

"Jewishness is not as much a religion as a culture and Jews are a culture group, a people." David Baskin 3/11/70.

This statement is by far the most hypocritical of all arguments in favor of the Jewish National State. Judaism is a religious belief shared by people of all nationalities around the world. As a culture, Israeli Jews are Semites. All other Jews are American, French, Spanish, etc. - their culture and language being that of the country where they have citizenship. At one time the Jews were a people, but this is 1970. The standards of the B.C. era cannot be imposed on the modern world.

Anyway, how can the Jews call themselves a people, striving to unite themselves in one country, when they themselves are prejudiced against Black Jews, Asiatic Jews, even "non-conformist" Jews? As for myself, I will not be able to understand Judaism as a culture, Israel as the Jewish State, until at least there is evidence, for example, that Black Jews are treated equally to White Jews in Israel, that temples are integrated, that there are no "black kibbutzes", and that Jews of all colors can respectfully intermarry. When such matters are set forth, when the Jews THEMSELVES set forth freedom and dignity amongst ALL Jews, then and only then, Mr. Baskin, can you justifiably present your argument.

Gestapo

To The Editor:

Recently there have been many drug raids on campus and the general feeling among students towards this seems to be one of hostility towards the police. I will admit that I personally have been confronted by the state police or any police in a matter similar to the above mentioned and so I was accordingly shocked. Yesterday an incident was brought to my attention by a person very close to me concerning a married couple she knows.

It seems as though this couple were both college graduates and also both teachers in the elementary school of Conway, a small town not far from Amherst. The couple had in their possession a small quantity of drugs that were for personal use. Not long ago, at 2:00 a.m., the police (gestapo) broke down the door of this couple's house and confronted them in their bedroom where they held them at gunpoint while others proceeded to wreck the house "looking for drugs".

Many valuable John Mason ceramics were broken in the "search" and finally the man told the gestapo where the drugs were in order to save part of his home.

However, it doesn't end there, the police refused to leave the room while the couple dressed and last I heard, the man received two years. In closing I have to reflect back into history at the SS tactics that were employed by Hitler's elite -- "But its alright ma its only life" as Dylan said.

Draft

To The Editor:

The possibility of draft repeal is now extremely favorable. For the first time since 1948 the Harris poll of January 1970 showed that a majority of the people were for a change in the present draft system. Sixty-seven percent felt that a volunteer army would be better than the draft. More and more Americans are beginning to agree with General Hershey's statement, "No draft can be fair." More than 60,000 young men have sought refuge from the draft in foreign countries. Thousands are now in jail for refusing to comply with this system of involuntary servitude.

In an attempt to pacify dissent against the inequities of the draft the lottery was instituted. True, the unfair burden on Blacks was somewhat eliminated by the lottery but as Senator Hatfield of Oregon said, "Should the US move to legalize lotteries with young men's lives? It is wrong, whether we substitute Lady Luck for Gen. Hershey or not." The present Selective Service Law lapses in June 1971, by which time the repeal of the draft-with the formation of a volunteer army-is a realistic goal.

More and more Congressmen and Senators are speaking out in support of a volunteer army. President Nixon said of the draft, "It does not work fairly, and given the facts of American life, it just can't. The only way to stop the inequities is to stop using the system." Conservatives like Barry Goldwater want to end the draft. Dr. Ralph Abernathy called the draft in any form as "the other slavery." Groups like the YAF, the Americans for Democratic Action, the Methodist Church, the Ripon Society, and the ACLU endorse the repeal of the draft.

Probably the most influencing factor now is the report of the Gates Commission, headed by former Secretary of Defense, Thomas S. Gates. In the report the Commission states that a volunteer army is both economically feasible and militarily preferable, and that it should be instituted within one year. The recommendations of the Gates Commission can be summed up as follows: 1. that the power of conscription be taken away from the President. 2. that voluntarism is preferable in a society to compulsion. 3 that a volunteer army will cause only a small budget increase which would be a true indicator of the amount spent for the military. 4. that the changeover could be accomplished by 1971 with an increase of 2.7 billion dollars, not to consider the immense savings a volunteer army would give. 5. that a volunteer army is adequate to defend the nation. 6. that a stand-by draft should be minimal. 7. that the totalitarian practice of channelling should end. 8. that a volunteer military would not vary greatly in composition from the present system. 9. that it is imperative at all times that civilians gain control over the military via a reduction in the isolation of the military.

With this firm advocacy of a volunteer army and the dispelling of notions of an uncontrollable professional force or an over-burden to the budget, we must apply pressure now to see our goal realized. On Wednesday, March 18 and Thursday, March 19, in the Student Union lobby members of the University community will be able to sign cards to be sent to their Congressmen urging draft repeal. Come and show your representatives that the draft is unjust and in violation of our constitutional rights.

Conspiracy

To The Editor:

Information has recently come into my possession from usually reliable sources that last Saturday's eclipse may not have been the completely natural event it was billed as. A number of very disturbing pieces of evidence come to light upon close scrutiny of the evidence.

The only information we received of the forthcoming eclipse was the publicity released through the mass media, with these reports being generated in large by the wire services. Further, the event was publicized as the scientific event of the century. With this came the mobilization of large masses of government subsidized scientists.

The correlation of these events reveals a disturbing pattern. There is a distinct possibility that the eclipse may not have been a completely natural phenomenon. Rather, it appears that it may have been a controlled spectacle, designed to awe the public and test the vast power of the military industrial complex.

The people of the media involved in publicizing the event obtained all their information from scientific bulletins, released by the establishment and passed on as truth. This was done so that the military industrial complex could test PROJECT BRAIN STORM whereby the combined psychic powers of all members of the power establishment were combined, so as to act, in phase and multiply their force. This combined force area about 100 miles and encompassing part of the effete intellectual east coast. These combined powers were directed toward the formation of a mass hallucination. In this case the hallucination was directed as a threat toward the life giving force.

Project B.S. has only been in existence for a few years. Last Saturday's event is the most successful to date. Previous recorded events have tried to blame the deaths of 5000 sheep on the thinking of evil throughts by the citizens of Utah, and to convince the peoples of certain inner city areas that warmth and food are not good for them. These previous attempts have not been as successful.

This latest test appears to be part of a master plan of which this was only a pilot project, to move the country toward solidarity and unified control. With this success of the pilot experiment a larger one is being planned for testing in 1972. The first part will occur in the Summer of '72 on half the population at a time. If successful, the final experiment will be conducted in November of 1972. But, this date may be moved up. As of yet the actual form of the hallucination is not known....

Calm Down

To the editor:

In response to Mr. Ganley's letter of Friday concerning the Mills House incident and the fraternity system on this campus, we would like to suggest that he follow his own admonition and reserve comment on the facts until the full statement prepared by Dean Field has been published. We have, therefore, refrained from correcting some gross inaccuracies which we find in his letter. Neither faction in the dispute can objectively report all that has happened. Hence, it is imperative that further accusations and insinuations be withheld until publication of Dean Field's report.

We do, however, feel compelled to address ourselves to Mr. Ganley's accusations concerning the roles of independents on this campus. His habit of generalizing individuals into groups ("Anyone who thinks blacks don't provoke incidents . . .", "let him blame the Kappa Sigs . . .", "Greeks do more on this campus . . .", "apathetic people stay in dorms . . .") is absurd. Mr. Ganley must have learned by now in some introductory course that it is ludicrous to always categorize individuals. Just as there are apathetic independents, we are sure that even Mr. Ganley would admit that there are disinterested Greeks.

He states that "Greeks do more for this campus than any other individual group." We find an inherent contradiction in his use of the two words "individual" and "group" side by side. From our understanding of the philosophy of the fraternity-sorority system, each house has its own identity. To lump them all together under the title "individual group" seems to be an inaccuracy and a contradiction of th e basic philosophy.

We can see no point in outdoing Mr. Ganley's list of Greek leaders with a list of independent leaders. However, a cursory glance would suggest that independents are leaders in far more diversified areas of life at UMass than in social activities alone which serve as Mr. Galney's examples. The leaders of the experimental educational projects, of the student government organizations, and of the newest co-educational dorm proposals are independents. Our campus would stagnate in the "whirlwind" of social activities if some of the independents did not lead the way.

Ecologist Speaks at Amherst Tonight

The five-college community has the opportunity of nearing one of the nation's most distinguished ecologists this evening at Amherst College. Robert Rienow, who with his wife Leona, published the provocative book "Moment in the Sun" will be speaking on the subject of the deteriorating quality of our environment at 8 p.m. in the Science building at Amherst.

Rienow, who appeared at the University of Massachusetts in October, is a fascinating lecturer with a great ability to provoke discussion in the question and answer period with his sharp, witty comments concerning our environmental plight.

MLK Draft Featured On WMUA Program

Beginning at 9 p.m., the first half of tonight's "Focus" program will be devoted to a discussion of the recent split in the Martin Luther King, Jr., Social Action Council. On hand to comment on the reasons for, and effects of, the split will be representatives of the Committee on Poverty, the Northern Educational Service tutolial program, Action Lab for the Education of High School Dropouts, and the Seminars on Racial attitudes and Practices --those groups which currently comprise the Community Action Foundation, described by the DAILY COLLEGIAN as the "conservative" faction of the old King Council.

Later, during the second half of the 60-minute program, members of the Committee to Repeal the Draft will discuss the conclusions of the report recently publicized by the President's special advisory commission on the draft, the Gates Commission. Committee members will also comment on preparations being made locally in observance of Draft Resistance Week, March 15th to 21st.

Interested persons are invited to tune in on "Focus" tonight at 91.1 FM.

EVERY OUNCE OF EFFORT Ray Ellerbrook, who had some tough shots blocked early in the first against Marquette, came back for a truly fine performance at the Garden. Although captain Ellerbrook and his teammates lost to the high-ranking Warriors, they displayed great character and determination. UMass Gymnasts Finish Season with Second Place in NE's

By JOE PARNAR
Staff Reporter

With a second-place finish in the open division at the New England Championships, the UMass varsity gymnasts concluded their current session here on Saturday, Springfield College won the team championship scoring 156.45 points to UMass' 155.70. Southern Connecticut State College was third at 155.2.

In the team competition the Redmen got off to their best start of the season with 26.35 points in floor exercise. Tony Vacca was high for UMass with an 8.85. John Calabria scored an 8.75, the second highest for the Redmen.

Calabria, who has seen only limited action this past season, showed great future potential and should be a valuable asset to UMass next season. Mike Kasavana was U-Mass' third highest scorer with an 8.7.

One side horse UMass was back in early season form, taking 25.5 team points. The Redmen were plagued by a large number of breakes in this event during their last few meets. Jim Yearwood received a standing ovation after scoring a 9.55 to win the event for Southern Conn. High man for UMass was Rick Riley with an 8.6.

The still rings event saw UMass drop behind by almost two points. The Redmen entered only two specialists in the event as opposed to their usual three.

In the next two events, long horse vault and parallel bars, UMass dropped further behind as it scored 26.5 and 26.1 team points respectively. This set the stage for the comeback the Redmen would make in the final event, high bar.

With the running score, UMass 128.95, Southern Conn. 129.75 and Springfield, 132.5, the Redmen appeared to be headed for a third-place finish. However the trio of Tom Myslicki, Scott Stover and Vacca came through with 26.75 points. Myslicki and Stover both scored 8.85's and Vacca an 9.05. The strong finish by the Redmen gave them second place in the meet, one half of a point ahead of Southern Conn.

In the College Division, Dartmouth was first with 126.8 points. MIT was second with 119.8 and Coast Guard third at 92.15.

In the finals UMass had a number of outstanding performers.

John Crosby won the floor exercise event with a 9.2 for Southern Conn. UMass' Vacca was third with an 8.9 and total of 17.75. The total is derived by adding the scores from the preliminaries and the finals. Calabria and Kasavana both had totals of 17.6.

On side horse Yearwood bettered his preliminary score by one tenth of a point. His almost flawless routine netted him a 9.65 and a total of 19.2 points, highest of the meet. Riley came through with a 9.05 in the finals to take third. Norm Vexler was fifth with 17.10 total points.

On rings Vexler received his highest score of the season, a 9.2 to tie Jim Amerine of Southern Conn for second with 17.85 total points. Shiebler of Springfield was first with 9.3 in the finals and 18.6 total points.

On Trampoline Kasavana of U-Mass scored an 8.4 to take second-place honors. Stevens of Southern Conn was first at 8.75.

In the long horse vault Steve Cary placed fifth and Stover tied Rogers of Dartmouth for sixth place. Wiles of Springfield took first in this event.

On parallel bars Amerine took top honors with 18.3 total points. Vacca received a 9.0 in the finals to bring his total to 17.6 and third place. Behind Vacca was Cary in fourth with 17.3 points and Vexler in sixth place with a 17.0 total.

High bar was the high point of the meet for the Redmen in the finals as it had been in the preliminaries. Southern Conn's Amerine won the event with 18.4 total points.

Vacca of UMass was right behind Amerine with 18.25 points. He recieved a 9.2 in the finals to finish second. Vacca, a sophomore, thrilled the crowd with an extremely difficult double-twisting fly-a-way dismount. Myslicki and Stover were fourth and fifth for the Redmen with 17.8 and 17.7 points respectively.

In the all-around competition, Amerine of Southern Conn was first with 52.30 points. For U-Mass Vexler and Vacca were fourth and fifth respectively.

Kasavana and Frank Dean, both seniors, received praise from coach Eric Kjekdsen for Saturday's performances. Kasavana scored an 8.9 in the floor exercise finals besides placing second on trampoline. Dean executed a strong routine on side horse that netted him an 8.1. Both of these performers will be missed by the Redmen next season.

Phi Mu Delta's Jim Peters will meet Steve Delmaestro, of Kappa Sigma.

In the 167 lb. class, Norm Kaplan, of AEP battles Bob Knapp, Unattached.

Bill Keith, in the 177 lb. class will meet Al Ruggiano, representing the Bulldogs.

Jim Brown, of the Butterfield Lemons, will meet Rich Cook, of Phi Sigma Delta, for the 187 lb. championship.

In the 197 lb. class, Dan Kelley of Tau Kapp Epsilon, last year's champion, will be seeking his second straight title. Only a sophomore, Dan has planned all his opponents - except John Sperandio - in the past two years.

Challenging Kelley for the champion ship will be Charles Shaw, 3 M's, who has four pins and one decision to his credit.

In the final event, the unlimited class, two Kappa Sigma's, Dave Levine and Ron Marino, will tangle for the championship.

Redmen Lose to MU, 62-55, Earn Garden Respect

UMass Nipped in NIT by Marquette

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

NEW YORK, N.Y. - UMass lost a basketball game here Saturday night. The final score was 62-55 and the winner was Marquette University, the favorite in the NIT and the eighth ranked team in the country. The loss eliminated UMass from the tournament and ended its season, but the Redmen did not come away empty handed.

Instead, they came away with the respect and admiration of some 14, 236 fans at Madison Square Garden who saw the Redmen give Marquette all it could handle and more at times before succumbing only in the last minute of play. They came away with the cheers of 4000 UMass fans ringing in their ears even as the team trailed by an insurmountable seven points in the last fifteen seconds of play.

And they came away with the pride and self-respect any first class team should have, proving to everyone that UMass can play with any team in the country and that the Redmen are going to be a basketball power for years to come.

The tempo of the game was set early. Gary Brell, who was advertised as one of the Warriors' great leapers and who lived up to everything that was said about him, opened the scoring with a free throw at 17:49 of the half. But Julius Erving came right back for the Redmen with a backhand layup from a Dick Samuelson feed to give UMass a 2-1 lead, the only time UMass would lead in the half.

Marquette opened the spread in their favor as it ran off seven straight points. Ric Cobb started the Warrior surge with a hook shot which was followed by two more Brell charity tosses. Dean Meminger, rated as one of the top guards in the nation, hit a driving one hander from the lane and was fouled, converting the free one to give the Warriors an 8-2 bulge.

If UMass was going to quit and fall apart, this was the perfect opportunity. But the Redmen had different ideas.

Erving hit a 15-footer from the right side and John Betancourt, who played a great defensive game, showed he could do the job on offense too, connecting on a 20-footer from the left corner to bring the Redmen within two, 8-6, with 14:49 remaining.

But once again Marquette opened up a lead. This time it was Meminger and Brell hitting for hoops while UMass was being held scoreless.

And once again UMass closed the lead. Samuelson hooked one in from five feet and then Ken Mathias, who replaced Samuelson in the Redman lineup, hit from the left of the foul line to close the lead to 12-10.

Brell, however, kept hitting and his 12-footer was followed by an

Erving free throw. Jack Burke, who was in the ball game to give starter Jeff Sewell a rest, netted one and Mathias once again answered it with a basket. With 9:31 left in the half, the Redmen trailed by three, 16-13.

Both teams traded hoops and, with 3:24 left, Marquette still had the lead, 25-22. Samuelson cut the lead to a basket with a free throw and Ray Ellerbrook started to heat up as he connected from the left corner and UMass was finally able to tie the Warriors.

Meminger again went into action, this time putting in a jump shot from the top of the key. But, although Ellerbrook started the game slowly, he never quit, and, with 1:07 to go in the half, the senior captain made another from the corner to tie the score and the half ended deadlocked at 27-27.

The first half was crucial for the Redmen in that it showed that, contrary to what many people thought, Marquette was not going to blow UMass out of the building. Actually, the Redmen seemed to prove not only to themselves but to the fans that they could actually bring about the upset of the tournament.

And, as the second half began, they tried to prove it. When Erving hit a 10-foot jumper to open the stanza and give UMass the lead for the first time since early in the game, the Redman fans exploded.

However, the well disciplined, controlled Warrior squad was not about to quit either. Cobb who was the game's high rebounder, tapped in a missed Brell shot and this had to discourage the Redmen a little. But it certainly didn't take any of the fight out of them.

From here on in, Cobb and Sewell were almost the whole Marquette offense. Sewell, labeled the best Warrior marksman before the contest, lived up to his billing as he hit consistently from the 20-25 foot range. And Cobb dominated the boards both offensively, getting numerous tap ins, and defensively.

For the Redmen, Ellerbrook showed why he is considered one of the best in UMass history as he continued his torrid shooting when the pressure was really on. Several times, UMass came downcourt after a Marquette hoop needing a basket to stay in contention. And every time either Ellerbrook or Erwing would come through.

With 3:23 left in the contest, Brell sunk a backhanded driving layup to put his team up, 54-48. After a UMass time-out, Samuelson tapped in a missed Erving jumper to keep the Redmen in contention, never giving the Warriors a chance to let up.

Hugh McMahon, Marquette's sixth man, made his only hoop of the evening to retain his team's six-point bulge. The pressure was squarely on the Redmen at this point since they knew that, with only 2:30 to go, they could not afford to fall behind by more than six.

Erving came through again. The sophomore forward connected on a jumper from the right of the lane and Samuelson sank a charity toss cutting the Marquette bulge in half with a little over two minutes left.

But it was at this point that the UMass dream became just that. Brell converted both ends of a one and one and Cobb scored on a goaltending call against Erving. Yet, even at this point, the Redmen still hustled all over the court as if they thought they could still win. And it is doubtful if anyone would have been surprised if they had. That's the way UMass played Saturday night.

With 0:51 to play, Erving hit again leaving the Redmen behind by five, 60-55. UMass went into a full court press but Cobb snuck through the frantic defense unmolested for a layup and ended the scoring for the evening at Marquette 62, UMass, 55.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Besides the spirit and play of the Redmen, the most impressive thing about Madison Square Garden Saturday night was the 4000 fans from UMass. From the time the team entered the building to watch the Duke-Utah game until they left the floor defeated but not discouraged, the UMass fans cheered. The highlight had to be the standing ovation in the last minute of play even though the game was lost. A class team deserves class fans and it certainly had them at U-Mass....Both teams were off from the foul line, UMass hitting 13 of 22 (59.1%), Marquette netting ten of 19 (52.6%)...And both clubs were also sloppy throughout as the Redmen committed 20 turnovers and the Warriors 18....The season is over now but the memories will last for a while. And this may have been the start of an era in UMass basketball history, a time when the Redmen will establish themselves not only as a power in New England circles but also as a team to be contended with in the East. The graduating seniors, namely Ray Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman, Dick Samuelson and Jack Gallagher, have a great deal to be proud of. Not only were they the leaders of probably the best hoop quintet in UMass history but also because they were the first in what should be a long line of powerful teams to develop here. They have started a tradition which will not soon be forgotten.

By JOHN SULLIVAN Sports Editor

NEW YORK, N.Y. - Toward the end of an NIT basketball preview article in Friday's Collegian was the following quote from head coach Jack Leaman: "Without a doubt, I know our fans are going to be number one in the tourney; let's hope the team will be able to make the same claim."

The "let's hope..." half of Leaman's statement came closer to being a truth than most people would ever have expected as the Redmen came within several whiskers of knocking off tournament favorite Marquette, losing in the last few minutes, 62-55.

The "without a doubt..." part of the coach's prophesy was a reality as over 4000 UMass fans filled the new Madison Square Garden with clapping, yelling and stomping which, under the circumstances, could probably not be matched by any of the other 15 teams' supporters.

The headline in the Boston Sunday Herald Traveler read, "Marquette Ousts U-Mass in NIT Tourney", and that is just what the Warriors had to do, they had to oust the Redmen, they had to dispose of the pesky underdogs, co-titliests of the unknown Yankee Conference.

While tourney buffs and NIT matchup men saw this game as a soft touch for their favored team, Marquette, the Warriors and their coach, Al McGuire knew they were in a battle from the opening tapoff right up until the last minute of play when UMass still had the character for victory but was seven points down, 60-53.

In the dressing room after the affair, most of the writers tagged after Leaman as Marquette's McGuire had little to offer; he was happy to have come away with the win, commenting to one inquirer, "We were fortunate to win the ballgame."

Proud is the best word to use in describing Leaman as he reflected back on the NIT contest and the season as a whole. Although he showed disappointment with the outcome, for one would expect such a reaction, he was touched by the character his players had shown against the mighty Warriors, that same character that had brought the Redmen from a once 5-5 record to an NIT-accepting 18-6.

Leaman took time to cover the key points of the game with the sports writers but, time and time again made it a point to reemphasize the outstanding performance his squad showed on the Garden floor and all throughout the season.

As for those UMass people in the stands, their reactions were completely beautiful, completely fantastic, as a bond of emotion has evolved between these fans and their team, between this team and their fans.

Close to a full two hours before the nine o'clock tilt, the Redman players and staff walked down to courtside in their maroon blazers to sit together and watch the first game, Utah vs. Duke. When the fans saw them, their immediate response was an enthusiastic standing ovation and a few heavy rounds of "Let's go Redmen!"

The roar when UMass took the floor for pre-game layup drills was equally bombastic. Marquette was the away team and was introduced first. After the fifth Warrior was named, the fans got themselves ready. The Garden announcer barely got out the words, "For the University of Massachusetts...." when the crowd went nuts in support of its favorites. Julius Erving, Jack Gallagher, Dick Samuelson, John Betancourt and Ray Ellerbrook were called out in that order and the people loved it.

The game got under way and, for the next hour and a half, Madison Square Garden belonged to the Redman fans. They were pleased with the 27-27 halftime deadlock and let the whole arena know it. But, as the last minute of play finally shifted the verdict in favor of the visitors, UMass people were dsappointed but, like Leaman, they were proud and they displayed their thanks with a tremendous standing ovation with a minute to go and the score reading, 60-53. A "We'll be back!" chant highlighted the last 60 seconds of the season.

Yes, the Redmen came closer than they should have to a number one spot in the NIT; Redman fans are numbe r one in the NIT.

TOURNEY TALK - Such a display by the UMass basketball team and its fans should make tourney-acceptance in future years less tense, should the Redmen's record be worthy....In moments when one is impressed with his school's showing in something as big as the NIT, he doesn't like to mention things that disgust him, but the following should be said....The Boston Herald Traveler's coverage of the Redmen in the NIT placed it so far ahead of that coverage given UMass by the Boston Globe, it almost makes one want to stop his nickie-a-day Globe subscription....On Saturday morning, a Globe story dipicted UM's venture into the NIT as that of a "sacrificial lamb:"....Forgetting the other players, coach Leaman and the Redman following, the story went on to say, "What UMass has to offer can pretty much be summed up in two words - Julius Erving."....The Globe took no stand in this article, merely rationalizing that UMass had nothing to lose and everything to gain....The Herald, on the other hand, came out in support of the Redmen with a Saturday morning story that said the Redmen "are definitely upset-minded"....Came Sunday morning and the Globe carried no results of the Marquette game, only an AP wire release that said, "Duke met Utah and Marquette opposed Massachusetts in a first round Saturday night double header"....The Herald vastly outdid the Globe with a very long story on its first sports page by Jack McCarthy and a live picture (AP Wirephoto) from the tilt....Other highnotes of the festivities included a Garden vendor who was selling "Ice cream and Pistol Pete books!"....Marquette's striped uniforms made the Warriors look more like Tigers....Thanks to a moustachioed fellow, who wears Jack Purcell sneakers, for doing a great job driving the MDC sports staff to New York City and the sleazy Pennsylvania Gardens Hotel, as did his Parnelli Jones-type roommate on the trip back....UMass basketball officially graduated four fine seniors when the final buzzer sounded Saturday night....Hats off again to Ray Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman, Jack Gallagher and Dick Samuelson.

CCEBS Program Advisor Says "Come together with Baha'i"

By PAT KING

Last night's speaker in the Eleventh Hour Series, sponsored by the Maroon Keys, was Dr. LeRoy Richardson, advisor to the CCEBS program. He presented a plan for a new world order which he would like to see established during his last hour of life. His lecture, titled "Blueprint for a New World Order" offered the teachings of the Baha'i religion as the solution to the current problem of unity between races and nations.

Richardson, a Baha'i himself, gave a brief history of this relatively young religion. It is based upon the writings and teachings of Baha'ullah, who proclaimed himself to be a manifestation of God. The faith began in Iran and was introduced in the United States in the late nineteenth century. There are now approximately 25,000 members in America.

The basic principles of the Baha'i faith stress the need for education, an international government, an international language, equality of women, and the elimination of any form of prejudice. A great deal of emphasis is placed on the teaching that all men are One, and that there is beauty in all men. That these principles were established by a manifestation of God is what the Baha'is feel makes their religion unique. They seek to overcome the petty differences between the major religions and create a universal faith.

Baha'ullah is regarded as a modern prophet, directly inspired by God, who recognizes the spiritual needs of man today. He is considered to be part of the same cycle as Buddha, Moses, Jesus, and the other main religious figures. Richardson pointed out that all great civilizations develop parallel with some great religious inspiration, and that perhaps Baha'ullah could serve as a guide for contemporary society.

There are no rituals of clergy in the Baha'i faith. Spiritual assemblies, determined by the election of the most qualified members, govern the religion on local, national, and international levels. A typical "service", called a fireside, is simply an informal gathering in a member's home to discuss the faith and its relation to the community.

In his lecture, Richardson discussed the use of the basic Baha'i teachings in solving contemporary problems. He stated the belief in consultation and the sharing of ideas. In relating this to the situation at UMass, Richardson said that students should be consulted on decisions which will affect their lives. He also suggested a form of government similar in theory to the United Nations where each country would surrender its sovereignty and "come together for the good of man."

Proper education for the children is another important concept. The Baha'is feel that every man is responsible to society to educate his children in a manner that will eliminate prejudices from the values of their adult lives.

In his last hour of life, Richardson would like to see the realization and practical use of Baha'ullah's teachings as a means for modern society to come together.

English Council Asks Alternative to Exams

At the March meetings of EDUC, the English Department Undergraduate Council, several matters were discussed which we, the members, feel should be brought to the attention of the undergraduate students in general and specifically to those persons interested in English as a major. The members present at that meeting voted unanimously to submit the following proposal to the next department meeting:

"Whereas valuable class time is being used at the present time for formal "in-class" examinations which we as members feel do not afford the individual student the opportunity to express himself in the most advantageous manner and which in most cases exert undue pressure on that individual, we strongly urge and support a measure which will give the student the option of a prescribed number of term papers, journals, and/or a take-home type of examination or other similar method of testing of the instructor's choice IN LIEU OF A STRUCTURED IN-CLASS FORM OF EXAMINATION. We feel that the adoption of this method will relieve the problem of pressure upon the student to 'perform' release valuable class time for meaningful learning experiences and allow for a far wider means of expression of the part of the individual student."

Since this is a matter of importance directly concerning students in every English class, we strongly urge each of you to express your own opinions in the classroom and let the individual instructor know how YOU as a student feel about the proposal and HIS present examination system. Remember, if there is something about the present system with which you, as an individual, disagree, you won't bring about a satisfactory change by sitting back on your haunches with your mouth shut!!!

In April EDUC will publish a listing of courses available in the English Department next semester with valuable comments by both instructors and students. Be on the lookout, and remember, those evaluation sheets handed out at the end of each semester reflect your opinion, too. Please make an effort to fill them out and get them back to EDUC.

We would like to remind you that EDUC is YOUR organization. It is NOT a closed group of a chosen few. If you feel you have something to contribute, attend the meetings and speak up.

Flying Redmen Win Competition

Demonstrations in Washington during the November Moratorium indicate wide support for anti-draft protests. Celebrate anti-draft week – March 16-23.

While the basketball team was representing the University at the NIT Saturday, the Flying Redmen Drill Team was in Buffalo, New York, competing in their first competition of the season. Competing at the 3rd annual Canisius College Invitational Drill Meet, the Redmen took second place in trick drill, losing only to Gannon College of Penn. - a superb team which took first place in the National Competition last year. In competing against teams representing schools from the entire east coast and midwest, UMass defeated the likes of Rutgers, Northeastern, Boston College, Notre Dame and Brooklyn Polytech Institute, among others.

The Flying Redmen entered three men in individual basic drill. In this UMass placed two men in the top ten. Steve Couchon, a sophomore, placed seventh. Bob Bartlett a junior - and a civilian - won the competition by beating over a hundred ROTC cadets at their own game.

This victory for UMass, currently the No. 1 Trick Drill Team in New England, is another indication of the success of the FLYING REDMEN'S rebuilding program as an all-university civilian drill team, the only one east of the Mississippi River. next stop for the Redmen is the St. Patrick's Day Parade in Holyoke, March 22, then the Beanpot Invitational Drill Meet in Boston on April 4.

Bid to Give Peasants Property in Vietnam

SAIGON (AP) - The National Assembly passed Monday and sent to President Nguyen Van Thieu a land reform bill designed to make every peasant owner of the land he farms.

Land ownership is one of the major underlying issues of the Vietnam war, and the government's failure to carry out any significant reform plan has long been a Viet Cong selling point.

The bill passed Monday was substantially one sent to the National Assembly by Thieu last July. It provides that the landlord can retain only land he personally tills, up to a maximum of 37 acres. All other land will be taken over by the government for redistribution.

Landlords will be compensated, 20 per cent cash and 80 per cent in eight-year bonds paying 10 per cent interest. Landlords oppose the measure because they doubt the value of the government's bonds. The United States has pledged $10 million in support of the program. About three million acres of privately owned land will be affected.

Tenant farmers will receive title to their land free of charge.

Thieu now has three alternatives: to sign the bill; to take no action, in which case the bill will automatically become law; or to amend it and return it to the National Assembly.

Point of Interest

For anyone wanting to join the Homecoming Committee, applications are now available in the RSO office. Membership is open to all classes and the deadline for the return of applications is April 6.

Mrs. Evers Seeks House Seat

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Saying she wants to help solve "people problems", the widow of slain Negro rights leader Medgar Evers announced Monday she'll seek the Democratic nomination in the heavily Republican, predominantly white 24th Congressional District.

Myrlie Evers, 37, Monday told a news conference she wants to create a chance for "full development for each human regardless of his race, creed or color...Fears and threats divide us; hope and discussion will unite us. Let us confront our fears and divisions as a group."

Evers, field secretary for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was shot to death in front of his Jackson, Miss., home in 1963. Mrs. Evers has lived in suburban Claremont since 1964 with their children, Darrell 16, Rena 15 and James 10.

Mrs. Evers seeks the seat vacated by the death of GOP Rep. Glennard Lipscomb. The district east of here extends 35 miles from Eagle Rock to Ontario and includes the communities of Pasadena and Pomona. It has 129,414 Republicans and 90,989 Democrats.

She is the first Democrat in a field that includes six Republicans.

House Passes Bill Mass. Soldiers Saved

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts House took an unprecedented step Monday, passing on a roll call vote of 136-89 a bill to forbid Massachusetts residents from serving in a war zone without a Congressional declaration of war.

However, the bill was passed only after an amendment was adopted 114-107, to require that the first test case under the proposed law be carried to a final court decision before any other suits could be filed.

The bill would require the state attorney general to go into the federal courts to prevent Massachusetts servicemen from being sent to war zones.

The bill passed to the applause of a packed gallery, with most of the spectators apparently at or near draft age.

A third vote on the measure, 148-73, also on a roll call, rejected an amendment which would have crippled the bill by striking out the section covering definition of a war zone.

Rep. H. James Shea Jr. D-Newton, who filed the bill, said he was "compelled" to do so because of "the reluctance of the federal government to put its own house in Constitutional order."

"This bill is a cruel hoax," said Rep. Gerald P. Lombard, D-Fitchburg, one of the chief opponents. "It will not keep men out of Vietnam.

"If this bill passes we may well become the laughing stock of the nation," Lombard said.

Orchard Controversy Continues

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Oswald Tippo and Associate Dean of Students Daniel Fitzpatrick told 25 irate Orchard Hill residents yesterday that the University has the right to assign over-vacation conference guests to student dorm rooms, but stressed that the "imposition" placed on Hill students this vacation would be the last at UMass.

The students, who had met Sunday night to discuss the forthcoming use of their rooms by conference guests next week, maintained that the University had no right to promise dorm rooms to convention guests, despite University policy statements which appear in the school catalogue and in the Student Handbook.

They presented a petition, signed by nearly 1000 students, which urged the administration to halt this policy.

But both Tippo and Fitzpatrick stressed that, legally, the University had to live up to its agreement to let the conference use Hill rooms, and they cited the Handbook statement of dorm policy as justification for letting conferences use student rooms.

The statement says, "Room rent does not include the several regular school vacation periods. Requests may be made through the Area Coordinator to reside on campus during such periods however, the University reserves the right to utilize student rooms occasionally during vacations for conference and other groups. Residents will be given advance notice."

Dean Fitzpatrick added that this is the last conference of this year and he hopes to make it a policy in the future that no dorms will be used for any conferences. He felt that the new campus center would alleviate this problem.

Each conferee will be paying the $2 a day rate for the use of the room while each dorm will receive $500 as compensation for their facilities.

While students expressed a strong concern for security, especially in Field where coeds claimed that their dormitory has been exposed to a rash of thievery, Dean Fitzpatrick said no unusual reports of damage or theft have been reported by residents of other dorms after conferences.

Dean Fitzpatrick suggested that if this type of thievery is taking place that students be on the lookout for suspicious actions and report the action to the campus police, or their head of residence, or make an attempt to identify the person.

Claims from residents of Field that they have had no satisfaction in getting their dorm rekeyed initiated a call from Dean Fitzpatrick to the physical plant building where a spokesman told him that new locks were ready to be put in and work would begin late Monday or Tuesday morning.

Dean Fitzpatrick sympathized with the residents, but asked for cooperation since this is the last conference and all precautions would be taken to safeguard students' personal items.

The students plan to meet tonight in Field House lounge at 8:30 to discuss any possible further action. The meeting is open to the entire University community.

The following statement was released last night by the residents of Webster House:

Orchard Hill is being beselged by a plague. The plague is 600 supposed "educators" who are flocking to Apple Country to blight the "luxury" of student dwellings, having almost squatters' rights on all property contained in the room.

It is intrusion on privacy to ask students to let the locust stay. It is also an inconvenience to ask students to move their valuables into the counselor's room or to bring them home. However, the administration has seen fit not to ASK but merely to state a fact - Grayson and Field will be used over Spring Vacation.

A full house meeting of Webster residents, in response to this monopoly on living that the administrators hold, has passed the following bill: "Whereas Webster House condemns the placement of a conference in Grayson and Field Houses for three days during Spring vacation, and indeed, in any dorm on campus during any vacation, and whereas Webster House demands that the University immediately rescind the clause on page seventeen of the Student Handbook which reads: "Room rent does not include the several regular school vacation periods....The University reserves the right to utilize student rooms occasionally during vacations for conferences and other groups". Be it further resolved that Webster House will not allow any conventioneers, conferees, or students to use the Resident's rooms of Webster House during any vacation within the school year, and that any and all means necessary will be used to keep such non-residents out."

Get involved in Legislators' Day which is being sponsored by the University and State Communications Council. The purpose of the day, which will be held on May 8, 1970, is to encourage the Legislators to come and see the campus for which they pass so many laws. The day will serve an an educational experience for the representatives, most of whom have never seen the Amherst campus of UMass.

Many students are needed to write to their Legislators, inviting them to spend the day at the campus. Students are also needed to spend their day showing the Legislators around the campus, answering questions that arise and showing the Legislators both the good aspects of our campus and to inform them of what is still needed.

USCC will have a table set up in the Student Union on Tuesday and Wednesday to provide information for those who are interested. If you're interested in some kind of constructive involvement, stop at the USCC table and commit yourself.

Judge Refuses to Hear Case, Waits for Panthers to Behave

NEW YORK (AP) - Justice John M. Murtagh, still refusing to resume bomb conspiracy hearings for 13 Black Panthers until they promise to behave, said Monday he has another alternate plan - but will wait for a green light from the U.S. Supreme Court to use it.

The Panthers, 12 of whom have been in jail for nearly a year under $50,000 to $100,000 bail, have refused Murtagh's demand that they give written assurance of good conduct so pre trial hearings can continue in state Supreme Court. In New York, the Supreme Court is a trial court.

Murtagh recessed the hearings indefinitely on Feb. 20 after daily disruptions by the defendants during hearings on defense motions to suppress evidence of seizure of weapons and ammunition. They are charged with plotting to bomb department stores, a police station and railroad tracks.

The judge said if they continue to refuse he must "ultimately" resume the hearings eject any defendant who acts up, and continue without him.

"The right of the court to adopt the alternative is presently under consideration by the U.S. Supreme Court," Murtagh said. "This court is inclined to delay in invoking the alternative until the Supreme Court has rendered its ruling."

He was referring to the case of William Allen, who disrupted his trial on armed robbery charges in Chicago by tearing up his file, arguing with the judge and advising him at one point: "When I go out for lunchtime, you're going to be a corpse."

The State of Illinois contends that Allen waived his right to be present at his own trial by his boisterous conduct. His lawyer contends a defendant cannot waive that right.

The U.S. Supreme Court hasn't ruled on the question since 1884, when it said that depriving a man of life or liberty without presence would violate due process of law.

The high court can't rule on the Allen case until next Monday.

Professor Promoted

Professor William J. Mellen of the University of Massachusetts department of veterinary and animal sciences has been named associate dean of the College of Agriculture and associate director of the Agricultural Experiment Station, according to Dean A.A. Spielman of the College of Agriculture.

In his new assignment, which he begins on July 1, Dr. Mellen will be concerned with the Experiment Station program and will work with department heads and other faculty to improve the graduate program of the College of Agriculture. He will retain his professorship in the department of veterinary and animal sciences.

A 1949 UMass graduate, Dr. Mellen holds M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell University and was a faculty member at the University of Delaware before joining the UMass staff in 1958.

Anti-Draft Week Highlighted by Demonstrations

A false bomb threat at draft board offices in Norfolk, Va., a ghostly sit-in in San Antonio, Tex. and an antidraft march in Milwaukee opened a new nation-wide wave of antiwar protests Monday.

The telephoned bomb threat in Norfolk caused evacuation of a nine-story building where the draft board is located.

In San Antonio, a man in black robes with hands, face and feet painted white sat-in at the draft board. Other protesters were to relieve the "Spectre of Death" to keep the sit-in going all week.

The march by 90 young people in Milwaukee was led by Michael Cullen, whose trial on charges of burning draft records started today in federal court. Thirteen other defendants have been jailed.

Other protests were scheduled this week in other cities.

A young draft resistor will languish behind bars of a mock jail in Philadelphia.

In Los Angeles protesters will hold letter-writing parties in homes and churches - to swamp the draft boards with mail.

Students at Detroit's Wayne State University will watch movies from North Vietnam and in Milwaukee "Witnesses against the war" will stand silently in twos and threes on street corners with signs and leaflets.

Protesters plan to put a coffin full of draft cards in front of the mail door of national Selective Service headquarters in Washington.

Answering a call of the New Mobilization Committee to End the war in Vietnam, antiwar forces working through local units of "New Mobe," the Quakers, War Resisters League and other groups will demonstrate in more than 100 cities and in almost as many different ways.

Four days of events in New York City were to take the form of a march to the federal office complex, distribution of antidraft leaflets and counseling information at schools, a trip by women to Washington to talk to members of Congress and finally, an attempt by picketing and nonviolent confrontation to shut down or slow operations at four draft boards in lower Manhattan.

In most cities the demonstrations will culminate Thursday in mass demonstrations at draft boards, where the antiwar forces hope to impede the boards' work in every way possible. Many groups say their members are prepared for arrests while blocking entrances to the draft offices, and some even say they will refuse to put up bonds and will stay in jail.

This was the scene at the Boston Common last November 15. Crowds aren't expected to get this big but feelings will still run high as Anti-Draft Week gets underway. (Photo by LaBreque)

Pill Pusher May Go Free, Gov. Asks Parole for Baird

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent today called for immediate parole of William Baird, birth control crusader who has served one month of a three month term in jail.

The governor said he had written and talked with Joseph V. McBrine, commissioner of Penal institutions, "and have reason to believe that my recommendation will be favorably received."

"It is my hope that this matter will receive speedy attention."

The governor's letter to McBrine said there is clear evidence of hardship to Baird's family, and said he has no prior criminal record.

Sargent said he did not condone violation of the law, "yet, it must be considered that his action was an orderly test of a law that he and many others deem no longer relevant in today's society. . .it is my opinion that his continued imprisonment serves no sensible purpose."

The governor said the only other possibility for clemency is through the pardon process which is long and complicated and would not be completed until after Baird's term is completed.

Baird is serving a term imposed on his conviction for giving an unmarried Boston University coed a contraceptive foam kit.

He carried the case to the U.S. Supreme Court but lost on appeal.

Baird's wife and children have campaigned for his release and have picketed outside Charles St. Jail where he is being held.

Supreme Court Rejects Plea, Busing Discontinued in N.C.

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court rejected unanimously Monday, a plea that it reinstate a plan to bus thousands of school children across the city of Charlotte, N.C., to speed desegregation.

The ruling, given without amplification, was a rare setback for civil rights lawyers who have been consistent winners in the high court.

Jack Greenberg, director-counsel of the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, called the ruling a procedural matter with "no substantive significance."

But in his motion for reinstatement of the order, entered Feb. 5 by federal Judge James B. McMillan of Charlotte and later stayed by an appellate court, Greenberg had said the issue was "of considerable importance to the future of school desegregation."

McMillan's order was stayed March 5 by the U. S. Circuit Court in Richmond, Va., which has scheduled a hearing for April 9. The judge had estimated that at least 10,000 elementary school children in the Charlotte - Mecklenburg district would have been bused to different schools beginning April 1.

The Supreme Court announced its ruling while in recess. In other major actions it refused to reopen an antitrust suit against major auto manufacturers over air pollution devices, and agreed to hear a dispute over reapportionment of Indiana's congressional districts.

Prior to Monday's ruling the court rarely rejected appeals or pleas made by civil rights lawyers in school cases. Earlier this term the court ordered desegregation of schools in 30 Mississippi districts, in 14 other Southern districts, in Oklahoma City and in Memphis.

Greenberg in his statement said: "It is quite far-fetched to read the Supreme Court's order as anything other than refusal to disagree with the Court of Appeals' desire to have the conflicting views of the parties clarified by the trial judge."

He said the purpose of the NAACP fund's motion was to "expedite consideration of the matter" and he noted that a conference was scheduled Monday afternoon in McMillan's chambers on the busing question.

The conference, held at the direction of the circuit court, was to discuss how many buses would be needed and whether state authorities have enough available to carry out the plan.

In his motion to the Supreme Court last Monday, Greenberg had said: "At issue here is far more than whether a brief delay in the implementation of the school desegregation plan is authorized. The single best hope that Negro pupils have of ever obtaining their rights under Brown v. Board of Education 1954 is that they can persuade fair-minded judges at the trial court level to order desegregation."

"The problem is compounded in a big city case where the school system is complex, and it is even worse where school authorities are determined, as they are here, to resist and delay desegregation. . ."

Congress Awaits Proposal With Trouble Expected

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sharp scrutiny and possibly serious opposition in Congress await President Nixon's proposal to create a Domestic Policy Council and revamp the Budget Bureau.

One congressional source privately gave it "about a fifty-fifty chance of survival."

Rep. John A. Blatnik, D-Minn., said the government operations sub committee which he heads wants "a good deal more information" than Nixon has given so far.

Blatnik plans early hearings. The acting chairman of the full committee, Rep. Chet Holifield, D-Calif., reserved comment. "In fairness I feel I should hear their side first," he told a reporter.

Some of the congressional doubts apparently trace to fear that the new council and its proposed staff of 40 to 50 persons in the White House would screen off some of Congress' access to the Budget Bureau and assume some of the bureau's functions.

The reorganization plan, sent to Congress last week, goes into effect automatically in 60 days unless either house vetoes it with a resolution of disapproval.

With 10 Cabinet officers among its members, the Domestic Policy Council would be a counterpart, for domestic affairs, or the National Security Council on defense and foreign affairs. Presidential Assistant John D. Ehrlichman would be the executive director.

One aim of the new council would be to settle conflicts among agencies over the funding and operation of government programs. Ehrlichman would serve as a referee, in effect.

Some see this as a bestowal of enormous power on Ehrlichman. "He'd be more powerful than Sherman Adams," said one veteran Capital observer. Adams was the chief aide and confidant of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

If You're Irish, Celebrate; If Not, Celebrate Anyway

(AP) - If you're Irish, one or more of your ancestors probably saw and listened to St. Patrick during his 30 years of missionary work in Ireland in the fifth century.

Parades and ceremonies will be held in his honor by Irish and non-Irish Tuesday, the anniversary of his death.

Writings by his contemporaries indicate that Patrick, a British-born Italian, established his bishopric at Armagh in what is now Northern Ireland. Biographers describe him as a man of action and great enthusiasm. He needed these qualities to overcome the opposition of the pagan Druids and to firmly establish Christianity in Ireland.

Patrick began his task of converting the Irish in the year 432. Research has convinced some writers that he traveled the length and breadth of Ireland to spread the teachings of Christ. Tradition has it that the patron saint of the Irish drew tremendous crowds wherever he went.

Centuries ago, some Irish monks drew up a map showing where clans and families lived at that time. So, based on that map, here are some of the Celts that Patrick may have met.

Patrick's see, Armagh, was the home of the O'Larkins, Macevoys, O'Lynchs, O'Moores, O'Loughrans and O'Lawlers when he journeyed eastward to County Down.

Toward the north he would be greeted by the O'Haras, O'Flynns and O'Hamills in County Antrim. Londonderry: O'Kanes, O'Mulligans, MacDonnells, O'Cassidys.

Moving west to dear old Donegal, the MacSweenys, O'Dohertys, O'Breslins, O'Boyles, MacGintys, MacCloskeys, O'Gallaghers, MacGowans and O'Rafferty s.

Other counties Patrick toured and some families that lived there:

Tyrone - O'Neillls, O'Hagans, MacShanes, MacIntyres, MacGurks. Fermanagh - McGuires, O'Mulcahys, MacGuires, O'Clancys and O'Corcorans. Monaghan - MacMahons, MacQuades, MacKenas, O'Connellys. Louth - MacCabes, MacKennys, O'Carraghers. Cavan - O'Reillys, O'Dolans, MacTiernans, MacHughs. Leitrim - O'Rourkes, O'Carrolls, MacTigues. Sligo - O'Fenneys, O'Dowds, O'Devlins, O'Morrisseys, MacDermotts. Mayo - O'Finnegans, MacPhillips, O'Morans, MacHales. Rescommon - MacDowells, MacBrennans, O'Lonergans, O'Meaneys.

Galway, the land of the Joyces - O'Tooles, O'Flahertys, MacMartins, O'Lees. Longford - MacGilligans, MacGilchrists, O'Slavins. Meath - O'Murtaghs, O'Halligans, O'Reagans, O'Manions. West Meath - O'Dooleys, O'Sullys, O'Higgins, O'Malones. Offaly - O'Dempseys, O'Mooneys, O'Maddens. Kildare - O'Cullens, O'Kellys, O'Breens. Dublin - O'Kings, O'Ryans, O'Walshes, Wicklow - O'Cahills, O'Byrnes, O'Nolans.

In Wexford, the county where President John F. Kennedy's family was located, Patrick probably brought his work to the O'Murphys, MacKeoghs, MacMurroughs Kilkenny - the O'Sheas, O'Callans. Carlow - O'Cavanaughs, O'Mullins, O'Kinsellas, Tipperary - MacCormacks, O'Dermodys, O'Shanahans. Waterford - O'Phelans, O'Dennehys, O'Gearys. Limerick - O'Caseys, MacArthurs, O'Quinns, O'Healys. Cork - MacCarthys, O'Learys, O'Hurleys, O'Collins. Clare - MacNamaras, MacMahons, O'Griffins. Kerry - O'Sullivans, O'Kellehers, O'Connells, MacGillicuddys, O'Connors.

The prefixes O' and Mac mean son or descendant of. Some families dropped them in later years.

Where are the Fitzes. . .the Fitzgeralds, the Fitzsimmons? They were part of the Norman invasion of Ireland. They didn't arrive until about 700 years after St. Patrick lived. The prefix Fitz also means son or descendant.

These are only some of the names recorded on ancient maps. There are hundreds more. So if you are an O' or a Mac - and even if you aren't - you may consider that your forebears at least shook the hand that shook the hand of Patrick, a saint who is honored around the world annually on March 17.

Celebrate your Irishness! Have a few with your favorite friend and start shaking that Shillelagh. Carefully, of course.

NDP Meets, Plans Action Tomorrow at Amherst C.

A radical group calling itself the New Democratic Party (NDP) held its first meeting at the Student Union Thursday, March 12th. The purpose of the meeting was to introduce interested persons t o the party structure and program.

Speakers for the NDP emphasized that the party was "radical", "activist," and would demand a greater amount of discipline than many radicals were previously accustomed to experiencing. As one spokesman put it, "When we take an action we want it to be quite evident to all that the group behind it was well organized, thoroughly prepared, and completely committed to seeing the action through. We want to develop a sense of community among radicals where every member is committed and loyal to the group, and the group to its members."

The NDP is planning a support action for Amherst College students who will be demonstrating against Honeywell recruiters at Amherst College on Wednesday of this week. NDP members will support this action against Honeywell specifically because this company makes cluster bombs, an anti-personnel weapon used in Vietnam.

On Thursday of this week, the NDP will hold its second meeting to elect temporary officers, and to consider and plan further actions.

The following program and structure was introduced at the first meeting:

We declare full support for the Black Liberation movement. We support the goals of the Five college Black Community and intend to furnish support in actions on which collaboration is possible.

We support the goals and philosophy of the Women's Liberations movement and intend the NDP to reflect this in its organization.

We support the right of all members of the University community to participate actively in the decisions and structures that organize and regulate the University. We support the active dissent of students as a necessary means to the significant changes required for the humanizing of the present University community.

We intend to operate as a University focused pressure group to educate and take effective actions around the political issues of racism, the war and the basic economic inequalities of our present government.

STRUCTURE:

Secretariat (liaison and communications) - 3
Treasurer (financial) - 2
Central Committee (administrative coordination) - 5
Active Committees:
Black Liberation
Women's Liberation
Student and Faculty Organization
Political Action

(Focus will be in the actions of the individual Committees, which will be responsible for research, of both issues and campus activities, organizing actions and creating liaison with relevant organizations outside of NDP.)

Three UMass Students Win Award, Nine Take Honorable Mention

Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship designates at the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus are Gail R. Geiver of Liberty, N.Y., and Gerald Chenoweth of Baltimore, Md. They are being congratulated by UMass President John W. Lederle.

Three from the University of Massachusetts are among the 1153 future college teachers from the U.S. and Canada who have been chosen finalist s in the annual Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship competition.

They are Gail R. Geiver of Liberty, N.Y. and Gerald C. Chenoweth of Baltimore, Md., both from UMass Amherst; and John L. Pelletier of Wayland, from UMass Boston. In addition, nine from the Boston and Amherst campuses were awarded honorable mention in the competition.

The 1153 designates topped a field of 12,000 outstanding graduating seniors nominated by more than 800 colleges. The foundation's selection committe e chose them as the most intellectually promising graduates planning careers as college teachers.

Miss Geiver is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Geiver of 33 Buckley Gardens, Liberty, and is a Spanish major. Mr. Chenoweth is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Chenoweth, Sr., Baltimore, and majors in music. John L. Pelletier, an economics major, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman W. Pelletier, Wayland.

Honorable mention in the competition was awarded to: Albert S. Daggett Jr., a political science major from Wellesley; Patricia A. Delnore, an English major from Riverdale, Md.; George K. Hertz, a political science major from Holyoke; Victoria I. Kucyn, a comparative literature major from Mattituck, N.Y.; and Gail M. Langer, An English Literature major from Chestnut Hill. All are from UMass Amherst.

At the UMass Boston campus, honorable mention was awarded to Richard D. Hall, a political philosophy major from Boston; and Mrs. Anja E. Hubley, a German major from Somerville.

A list of designates is sent to graduate schools with recommendations from the foundation that graduate fellowships be provided. The foundation reserves 150 Woodrow Wilson Fellowships for those designates who do not receive funds from schools of their choice. The top 100 designates receive independent study awards from the foundation for summer study. The list of 1152 honorable mention students is also sent to graduate schools.

The Next Target for Student Dissent

College teachers are living their last year in Valhalla. Their unchallenged reign as classroom monarchs is about to end. The straws are in the wind. Reports from campuses in widely separated parts of the country indicate that round #2 of the student revolt is about to begin. Whereas the Berkeley protestors of 1964 and their Columbia counterparts of 1968 confronted the administration and the police tomorrow's students will defy their professors - without benefit of clergy.

Not that they don't have it coming. The older generation of college dons - those who earned Ph. D.'s before Kennedy - are academic fascists almost to a man. They dictate assignments, dictate class syllabi, dictate reading lists, dictate test questions and and enforce their demands using grades as a weapon. These Hitlers, Mussolinis and Tojos know no other way to behave in their courses. Professors in all departments share the attitude that students are little better than serfs, that students are incapable of creative thought and cannot be trusted making any decisions that mean anything. Professors feel that their pupils are the last people to be consulted when it comes to determining course content, that individual needs simply don't count in higher education. And if students do not show enthusiasm for some special brand of academic trivia then their professors weep and wail and beat their breats in the fashion of Jaques Barsun.

Eleventh Hour

Students are no longer willing to put up with personal degredation, however. And if the free university movement and the new labor-oriented tactics of the SDS had not intervened - diverting radical student leaders away from campus issues - the coming anti-teacher rebellion would already be under way. As it is the eleventh hour has struck. And in some departments in some universities it is already PAST midnight. At UMass the history department is in turmoil. The departments of psychology and English are possibly next in line. The fun is about to begin.

It is difficult to say, at this point, what course events will actually take once student disgust becomes visible but several possibilities exist. The least one can anticipate will be classroom walkouts on a selective basis. Pickets may advertise their dissatisfaction with teachers who disdain teaching. Petitions will be signed and presented to the fascists in question. Emergency faculty meetings will be called and heated arguments will transpire behind closed doors. It is safe to predict, however, that nothing substantive will emerge at this point. A few not-dead-yet instructors will rediscover a hidden source of humanity and change their style. The rest will reassert their right to legally screw the minds of young men and women. These are the professors who "will not be intimidated." It's OK for them to intimidate students, to be sure, but they won't stand for the same treatment in reverse.

Contagious Dissent

Now the stage is set for Act II. Polarization will become manifest - and irreversible. Departments will start splitting into factions generally along the lines determined by the generation gap. Faculty members will align themselves for or against student demonstrators. Students will also divide between the radicals and the sucks, the latter being those who decide to stick by "my professor, right or wrong." Premeditated classroom disruptions will become common at this point. And the dissention will become contagious. Occasional protestations will break out in many different departments. One will hear about walkouts in Engineering courses. And occasional sabotage will occur. Computers will be deliberately misprogrammed so that $15,000 professors will find pay envelopes with $35 inside.

Act III will be precipitated by some rather sickening episodes. Either in response to provocations or because of independent motivation some pedagogue will post flunking grades for the dissenters in his class. This will double the support of the radicals as waiverers finally decide to do something about their feelings. Class boycotts will become more extensive and prolonged. The more obvious academic targets will find their classes empty, their prestige tarnished and their colleagues making themselves scarce. It student demands for resignations are not met by this time then full-fledged demonstrations will start. But there will be some novel developments as well.

Problem of Tenure

Student power will now seek to transform the content of university education. Non-negotiable demands will be presented to the various departments. These demands will have a s their aim the creation of democratic procedures in classrooms and recognition of non-course learning experiences. Students will attempt to establish a local version of the Survival University that John Fischer wrote about in HARPERS. And the demand for student voice in retaining professors will be made. The problem of tenure will be soived by adoption of a new university policy (DE FACTO for the time being, DE JURE later on). Although those teachers who have tenure cannot be legally emasculated no future teachers will be granted the franchise to destroy education. If means cannot be found to retain desirable faculty with five years service WITHOUT granting tenure then even those teachers will be asked to go elsewhere.

New courses will appear as the university begins to realign itself for community service. Pedantic criteria for promotion will be dropped in favour of pragmatic criteria. "Who did you help with your knowledge?" will become the test for a degree candidate, not "Is your research publishable?" It will also become the test for faculty advancement. In those formal classes that continue after the revolution new methods of teaching will be developed in order to pass that test. Simulation games, creativity experiments, workshops, field experiences, and other ACTIVITIES will replace lectures and non-discussions. All this will happen, and more. But it will be purchased at a price.

The Cost Next Time

The anti-administration revolution that erupted at the University of California was an event that came about almost six years ago. It is still in progress. In its wake one can point to genuine changes in the university. Black studies have begun at many institutions. Black admissions have escalated beyond token status. Parietal rules are largely a closed chapter of history. And large scale experiments, like the School of Ed program, are agreed to. But many sacrifices purchased even these modest gains. Many more sacrifices will be necessary if the next revolution is going to amount to anything. One wonders what the cost will be this next time. More thousands of students jailed? Suspended? Expelled? Will the administration fascists respond to faculty fascists' pleas for help and order selective drug busts on a big scale to create a smoke screen? Will tyrannical professors "fight fire with fire" and flunk their students to Vietnam? Will totalitarian legislators countertattack by further cutting funds for students so that 75% of any class is reduced to a poverty level of existence? It would be rash to underestimate the unscrupulousness of the old guard.

One can ask whether or not the prophecy offered here is too gloomy. The heights and depths painted in the preceding paragraphs may seem too extreme. And many readers may recoil from the prospect ahead, from the prospect of one more struggle. Won't teachers voluntarily change? Won't they acculturate themselves to the new groundswell for participatory democracy? Unfortunately, however, the answer is no. Although few professors are willing enough to admit who their heroes are it is easy enough to discern their models by observing their behavior: Richard J. Daley, Spiro Agnew and Julius Hoffman. They may SAY that they admire John Stuart Mill or Martin Luther King Jr., but even weak eyes can see through cheap camouflage.

Revolution

Unfortunately it seems that my predictions will be fulfilled. It would be nice for totalitarian scholars to become democrats without another war but it is too late to hope for such an outcome. The widespread adoption - twoor three years ago - of student evaluations of their teachers, of the principle of student consultation on academic matters, of rules safeguarding pupils from faculty persecution might have made a difference by now. But none of these measures was adopted except in isolated instances at isolated schools. Only a crash program of impressive magnitude could prevent the events forecast here. Any sane person knows that no such thing will happen. Some few professors may take the hint and re-examine their phony values and phony priorities and change. Some are doing so already. But the rest are blind to everything around them except their own comfort, their status among their colleagues, and the size of their paycheck. They care about academic prededents not about creating new models for education in a rapidly changing world. There is no hope for these imitation men. And there will be a revolution next year because students are tired of asking for the bread of living education and being given a stone.

Give Just A Little

To the editor:

In response to "Greeks, Blacks, and Milis", by Robert Ganley, President, of Beta Kappa Phi: If you haven't read President Ganley's eloquent defense of the Greek system as well as his calculating analysis of the "Milis incident", please stop now and find the March 13 edition of the Daily Collegian and turn to page 9.

Although his insight into the problem and the underlying causes might just leave a trifle bit to be desired, he nonetheless has craftily woven a clever ruse of satire into an otherwise brilliant fairy-tale. Deploying his wit, depicting himself as somewhat of a racist, he almost has us buffaloed into believing that he might be a champion of the Silent Majority. Then out of nowhere flashes the naked truth, as he reveals to us the hidden message; doesn't he?

Of course, he knows; good times, friendship, hearty handclasps, beer, mixed drinks, swogs, leadership, mixed drinks, fun, Brotherhood. Delving into one of man's more burning issues, he ponders; "Where would the guide service be without the Greeks?" Where would mules and Borax be without Reagan, where would the sentinels of the Northeast White House be without party hats and impressive uniforms, where would the Greeks be without the guide service?

I propose that we establish a fine arts award in literature for the most outstanding country witticism contributed by a fraternity president, or anyone else for that matter. Some sort of prize should be provided for, perhaps a voucher entitling the holder to "one good time". It might consist of a round-trip ticket by mule-drawn carriage through some of our older and more rustic communities, and then on to exotic Washington, D.C., where the lucky winner will chat and have lukewarm tea with all the giants of the cherry blossom capital. He will enjoy his yearlong stay in the White House sightseeing in the quaint Black quarters and touring the halls of Congress as they feverishly grind out rapid Civil Rights legislation. Sadly bidding farewell, and receiving a Beautiful lei from Mrs. Nixon, the alohas are exchanged a good time was had by all.

Flying home, and laden down with such priceless mementos as a lead bust of Spiro Agnew, to be signed by the vice-president himself, the winner will quickly buzz the central cities once more viewing the enormous strides our leaders affected. Leaders like President Ganley. Thanks to him and his friends, it's all possible.

There are people in fraternities, some good some not so good. Articles like Ganley's give us a rather narrow view. By signing his name as president, he represents his group, or does he? Or does he extinguish a significant potential, in terms of both manpower and communication? I for one am discouraged, I'm tired, but I can rest assured knowing my president is safe, his guards are all dressed up with nowhere to go, and we are still a proud nation.

Take a Little Bit Less

To the editor:

I am sure that you are aware of the present situation concerning the use of marijuana in the United States. I suggest that this situation is tyranny. However, it is within the powers of you and the editors of other college newspapers to rectify this unfortunate state of affairs.

Were there to be a concerted surrender of all marijuana users in the country, the judicial system of the United States would be threatened with collapse. Latest estimates are that between twelve and twenty million Americans are users of Cannabis.

I feel that a carefully planned campaign to induce users to surrender stands a good chance of succeeding. The major necessities of such a campaign are publicity and coordination. The former you possess, and the latter can be achieved with a little effort. It should be noted that this is NOT a suggestion that you advocate illegal acts. On the contrary, you will be advising and coordinating the surrender of over ten million self-confessed criminals to the proper legal authorities. No one can fault you for such a public service.

The appeal must be made so as to induce as many individuals as possible to surrender. Therefore certain procedures should be followed:

1. The campaign should be limited to marijuana and hashish.
2. On the day of surrender, groups should be formed in non-threatening environments and proceed to police stations. The presence of others willing to surrender will reassure each individual.
3. Appeals to surrender should also be directed toward individuals who have graduated college and are now engaged in medium and high status occupations. They should also be directed at those who have not attended college.
4. It should be emphasized that minimal risks are attendant upon surrender, by virtue of the expected large size of the turnout.
5. Emphasis must be placed on securing as much publicity as possible in the wire services and other news media. Hopefully, sufficient publicity may result in legalization before the day of surrender.
6. Individuals surrendering should have on their person nominal amounts (perhaps one or two teaspoonsful) of marijuana.
7. Any statements or efforts by the police to prevent or hinder the campaign should be widely publicized, and interpreted as proof of the danger the campaign presents for the judician system. The irony that law enforcement agencies will be counselling criminals NOT to surrender should be very strongly emphasized.
8. The non-violent, submissive aspect of this endeavor must be maintained.
9. Buttons indicating that the wearer intends to surrender should be purchased and distributed. The fact that others are willing to surrender, and that they are visible, will serve to convince many of the undecided.

Bit More,

To the editor:

I have been a student at this university for almost four years and during that time I think I have experienced a great many of the pitfalls as well as the pleasures of the college community existence. However, I must admit that this past Friday evening I was something less than proud of being a member of the Southwest community or the University as a whole.

I was awakened at about 12:30 a.m. by the obscene shriekings of one of my "inteiiectual" neighbors. The commotion iasted for almost a half hour until the place sounded iike a virtual zoo. On the other hand, a zoo's inmates are somewhat more civilized - the animals there haven't yet learned how to be crude, obnoxious, profane, and disturbers of the peace. Maybe the UMass animals should take a few lessons from those behind bars!

What really frustrated me the most was when I attempted to do something about the disturbance. Where were the campus policemen at 12:30 at night - had they already been tucked into their safe little beds, or were they still passionately searching for that last car to ticket??? It made me feel so safe to know that someone was there if I was in need. Also, where was the proud head of residence of the dorm where the disturbance originated. Have their responsibilities been so completeiy curtailed as to prevent them from interfering, or have their moral and humane codes deteriorated so greatly as to warrant their ignoring such a situation?!?

I don't really expect any answers to these questions mainly because I don't think I could consider as valid any excuse for either the disturbance of the peace, the lack of ayailable security, or the obviously iax house rules. I would, however, like to propose a toast to the gross individuals who woke me up, our gallant security department, and our praiseworthy house "parents" for adding to my thorough disgust with this University life. I can't wait till May 30th!!!!!!!!

To the editor:

The following are some suggestions I would like to make to Miss Susan Kaminsky, regarding her letter of March 16, 1970.

1. I suggest that you go and LIVE in Israei for a period of time. To your surprise, you will find that none of the assertions/accusations you have made, will hold. The evidence to the contrary will overwhelm you.
2. Over-generalizing and stereotyping lead only to prejudice and persecution, as the past has shown.
3. I suggest that you define your terminology before using it. To my knowledge there are at least four groups of people referred to as "Black Jews", and your statements do not pertain to any of them.

To the editor:

The following quote was said by Adlai Stevenson in 1953, what is rather amazing, shocking and pathetic is that it still applies to today 1970, 17 years later!!!!! (scary isn't it?)

Some in America today would limit our freedom of expression and of conscience. In the name of unity, they would impose a narrow conformity of ideas and opinion . . . Only a government which fights for civil liberty and equal rights for its own people, can stand for freedom in the rest of the world.

NOT THE POET

i am here and I listen.
I have come to hear the poet.
I listen as his images unfold.
I bring to his images my own experiences.
I revel in the union of two lives.
I grope in the darkness of my mind for meaning.
I only grasp what I myself have known, but now I know more.
I have lived the words of the poet.
I have lived life through his eyes.
I have been taught, I have expanded.
I have come to listen and I have seen.
I have come to listen and I have tasted.
I have come to listen and I have felt.
I watch the crowd come to its feet.
I hear them applaud the poet.
I come to my feet, also.
I applaud, also, but I do not applaud the poet -
I salute the man.

Official Statement to Black People Everywhere On the Political Assassination of Ralph Featherstone And William Che Payne

Ralph Featherstone and William "Che" Payne were murdered in an attempt to kill H. Rap Brown. The close personal and political relationship among Ralph, Che, and Rap was no secret to the forces we hold responsible for this political assassination. The murderers are all the citizens and institutions of white nationalism.

Once again it has been made clear that white power is prepared to kill anyone who organizes black people to struggle for and secure their independence. All white people participate in and benefit from the continuation of white power, which is perpetuated through schools, churches, police, armies, tv's, newspapers, and radios whose alliances bring to all of them benefits and protection at our expense. They expected us to be slaves. To organize calculated revoit is the only force capable of dealing with white people's willingness to kill us. ALL OF US, IF NECESSARY.

The presence of Ralph and Che in Bel Air was certainly known by their enemies. Also known to them was the fact that Ralph and Che were to be responsible for transporting Rap Brown safely into Bel Air. And finaliy, the local, state, and national authorities were most certainly aware and fearful of the threat which Rap, Ralph and Che presented to the continued control of our lives by white people. A COLD, CALCULATED DECISION WAS TAKEN TO ELIMINATE THEM. During the night, a high explosive bomb was placed in their car. Shortiy before midnight the bomb exploded, and Ralph and Che were killed instantly. These killings were a political act designed to crush our determination to free ourselves from the chains of racism in which white people have locked us for four centuries. THESE KILLINGS WERE A POLITICAL ACT DIRECTED TO BLACK PEOPLE EVERYWHERE.

It is important to understand that the lives of Ralph and Che were as politicai as their deaths. Both were committed to winning the independence of all African people. They understood that African people are at war, not just with A LOCAL POLICE PRECINCT, OR A RACIST SCHOOL BOARD, but the entire might of European nations of which America is the citadel. There was in the minds and activities of two murdered brothers a fundamental and total commitment to the complete political, economic, and social unification of the African Continent. They understood the relationship of a strong and united Africa to the freedom and independence of African peoples everywhere. They understood that African peoples are at war with European peoples. Ralph and Che were killed because they were enemies of white controls.

The intent behind the murder of Ralph and Che was larger than eliminating two individuals. The real intent was to encourage fear, to paralyze black people and make us afraid to take actions in our own interests. This method has been used throughout Africa, the West Indies, as well as in America. It has not worked, IT CANNOT WORK. IT WILL NOT WORK BECAUSE WE WILL NOT LET IT WORK.

The life and works of Ralph and Che will be continued in the ever-growing struggles of African peoples for independence.

Let us remember Ralph's words: ". . .to look at a watch and know the time of day is to be able to read. To see what time it is in history -- our history -- and act accordingly is to be revolutionary!

Bucket Brigade to Inundate Sunderland; Sewage a Problem

The town of Sunderland will be the focus of a demonstration to be sponsored by CEQ Wednesday afternoon on the plight of the Connecticut River as it relates to that town. At present, the town of Sunderland is dumping raw sewage into the river and is not using its waste treatment plant to purify the water.

Presently, the Chairman of the Board of Aldermen is under indictment for this environmental atrocity, but he and the town will probably escape the brunt of the punishment under the law.

The demonstration in Sunderland will climax an afternoon long display on environmental awareness and water pollution. All afternoon in the Student Union a film on water pollution will be shown. At approximately one o' clock slides taken by members of CEQ will be shown emphasizing the extent to which Sunderland has polluted the Connecticut.

Shortly after that, participating students will proceed by car to the town of Sunderland where some demonstrators will canvas the area informing townspeople of the atrocity in which their town is a major participant.

Other demonstrators will serve as a bucketbrigade, taking water from the nearyb river and dumping it in front of the town hall. It is expected that after the water drains off into the sewers a great deal of the solid waste which the town originally dumped into the river will be lefr behind.

Students wishing to participate should sign up at the CEQ table.

GULCSBA Launches SSRP

The Georgetown University Law Center Student Bar Association has launched a Student to Student Recruitment Program designed to bring radicals, women, and Third World People to the nation's law schools. What for? To radicalize the law schools, to make law schools into centers for radical action, and to help produce Movement lawyers.

We are trying to reach people who otherwise wouldn't think of law school as a real alternative. We would like to talk to people who want to be useful to the Movement.

Georgetown representatives will be on campus this morning, Tuesday, March 17 from 10:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. at 167 Whitmore Hall, to tell you more about law school. All the necessary application forms will be passed out. Students from all years are welcome.

If you are in the least bit curious about Movement law, you are invited to stop in this morning to meet with Georgetown students.

Winter Wrap-up . . .

Trackmen Excel Despite Lack of Numbers

By EARLE BARROLL
STAFF REPORTER

UMass winter track has ended, the days of practice in the cage have ended for the team, and it is now time to look back at the season that has passed, and see what just did happen when the members of the UMass track team donned their track shoes and uniforms and took to the track for dual meet and championship competition.

Before the season began Coach Ken O'Brien and the members of the team realized that the main problem for them this year would be in lack of numbers. Carrying only a roster of sixteen men, the Redmen were noticeably outmanned in each meet this season and ended with a record of 0-3, with losses to Northeastern, Dartmouth and Connecticut.

WALTER MAYO

The complexion of each of these meets was the same. UMass could match first place finishes with each of these three teams, but lost on its inability to get the second and third place finishes which are so important in the final point totals. And this was due to lack of numbers.

Realizing the above fact, the team set as its goal that every man work for his personal best effort during the season. And in all but three cases, this goal was achieved.

Championship competition is won by outstanding individual efforts. UMass was the type of team this year that could continue to produce these outstanding individual performances that it made on the dual meet level in these championship meets namely, the Yankee Conference and New England Track and Field Championships.

The Redmen finished second in the Yankee Conference meet, only five points behind Connecticut, the eventual New England champion. In the New Englands, UMass finished third in a very strong field and in both instances UMass performers were able to continue their outstanding dual meet performances into the championship level. Most of the personal bests were made in these two meets.

Although lacking in numbers, the Redmen did prove to be one of the top Championship level teams in New England this year. And it was because the team knew what it had, it knew what it had to do, and it did it.

The leading scorer for this year's team was Ron Wayne, who meet after meet ran two or three races in an effort to pick up points to keep umass within reach of its opponents. Wayne finished the season with 38 points. He also ran his personal best times in the mile and two mile with times of 4:09.4 and 9:01.7 respectively, both school records. Also included in his efforts this season were a first place in the YC two mile and a third place in the mile at the New Englands.

Walter Mayo and Cal Carpenter shared second place in the scoring with 22 points each. Walter was one of the three outstanding Redmen sprinters this past winter, the other two to be covered later. Walter finished second in the New Englands in the 60 yard dash, and took a third in the YC meet.

Cal Carpenter's specialty is the high jump and he's one of the best in New England as exemplified by his third place finish in the N.E.'s. Cal also set a school record this year with a jump of 6'6".

Jim Graves scored 19 points to place fourth in this category. He was one of the bright spots for Coach O'Brien as he worked hard all season to become one of the outstanding hurdlers in N.E. Jim was an "average" hurdler as a freshman in the opinion of O'Brien, but had the attitude and the will to work that paid off in his second place performance in the YC hurdles and his outstanding early season performances at the K of C and BAA meets.

Rounding out the top five scorers for the Redmen is Dave Evans with 19 points. Dave ran primarily the 1000 this year and turned in his best effort of his career with a time of 2:12.1, a school record, in finishing second in the YC meet. He also came in fourth at the IC4A meet against the top middle distance runners in the East. Besides his own individual event, Dave also anchored the mile relay team. His top anchor leg this season was a 48.8, in a come from behind victory over the relay team from UConn.

The rest of the scoring was evenly distributed amongst the rest of the team members, each one doing his part all season long to contribute to the team scoring.

Dave Marble and Ron Harris joined Mayo to sweep all the dual meet dashes this season. Marbie was the YC dash champ this season, but was unable to compete in the N.E.'s due to an injury. Harris was the unsung hero of the dash trio. Each meet he finished third, but came back when he was needed at the end to run a good leg on the mile relay team.

Gerry Spellman combines with Graves to give UMass the best 1-2 hurdle tandem in N.E. Gerry also ran his best time ever, 7.5 seconds, in the N.E.'s this season, finishing second in that meet.

It should be noted here that all season long, on both the dual meet and championship levels, the sprinters and the hurdlers always came through with the big efforts to keep UMass close to its opponents.

Al Mangan, Bill Donaldson and Arnie Morse gave Dave Evans support in the middle distances. Al ran his best time in the 600 yard run in the N.E. meet, 1:14.9, and Coach O'Brien has high hopes for him. Bill had been hampered all season long with a bad ankle, but when it counted, the senior co-captain came through with an outstanding effort at the YC meet, finishing fourth in the 1000 and fifth in the mile. In both races he set personal best times. Arnie finished fifth at the YC meet and will be counted on this spring for fine performances in the half mile.

Larry Paulson, Bruce Blackburn, and Don Dunsky, ran in the shadow of Ron Wayne this past season, but in so doing also came up with their best times to date. Paulson ran 4:23 for the mile, with Blackburn and Dunsky turning in times of 9:32 and 9:45, respectively in the two mile.

BILL DONALDSON
(MDC photos by Tom Derderian)

Eddie Arcaro was the lone weightman for the Redmen. After coming off a pre-season injury, Eddie steadily improved in his performances and came in second in the shot at the YC meet and fifth in the N.E.'s.

Eddie Shaughnessey high jumped to his all time best mark of 6'4" and gave UMass a good scoring punch with himself and Cal Carpenter in the high jump.

The Redmen now focus their attention on the spring season, and with them they will take the experience that they gained from the season that has just past. With these factors behind them, the outlook for the spring is a good one.

Women Gymnasts Place Third

University of Massachusetts girls capped a successful dual meet season by placing close third in the Eastern Regional Championships, held last Saturday at the Southern Connecticut State College.

Eastern league, covering the North East section, is the toughest one for Women's Gymnastics in the country. Last year, 4 teams out of the top 6 in National Championships came from the East, with two of them from the Massachusetts (Springfield College and University of Massachusetts). 50% of the teams entering the Elite class at the National Championships this year are from the East again, all of them expected to place high in the National standings.

Twenty-two teams entered the Regional championships at Southern Connecticut, making it an all-day affair. Springfield College, last years Eastern Regional and National Champions, defended their title easily by scoring 98.0, 10 points above the nearest competitor. Host Southern Connecticut performed very well and captured the second place, scoring 88.70. UMass girls did not seem to get off the ground and came close third with an 87.45. Fourth place was taken by West Chester State College from Pennsylvania, fifth by Slippery Rock State College from the same state, and sixth by Towson State College from Maryland.

The only medal winner on UMass team was Marina Rodriguez who placed sixth in floor exercise, balance beam and all-around events.

UMass is not sending the girls teams to the National Championships this year, although they placed fourth in the country in 1969. The school will be represented by two individual high scorers - Marina Rodriguez and Linda Selkunas.

The individual honors shaped up as follows:

CEQ Panel to Discuss Conn. River Diversion

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) of UMass is involving itself with the proposal of the U. S. Corps of Engineers and the Metropolitan District Commission to divert water from the Connecticut River to the Quabbin Reservoir.

CEQ, which has noted that the ecologists-environmentalists side has not been given a hearing, has scheduled the Distinguished Ecologists Panel Discussion on the topic entitled, "The Environmental Peril in the Connecticut River Diversion", in Bowker Auditorium, tomorrow at 8:00 p.m.

The galaxy of seven ecologists on the panel includes teachers and writers who have distinguished themselves in pleading for a quality environment in schools of higher learning in the Connecticut River Basin.

The panel moderator is Dr. Peter Steve, Ecologist of Greenfield Community College. The panelists include Dr. John W. Brainerd, Ecologist and writer of Springfield College; Dr. Lincoln P. Brower, Ecologist and writer of Amherst College; Dr. Ward S. Motts, Environmental Geologist, and Dr. Stuart Ludlam, Ecologist, UMass, Dr. John P. Shontz, Ecologist of Mt. Holyoke College; Dr. William A. Niering, Ecologist and writer of Connecticut College, New London; and Prof. J. Kenneth Taylor, Ecologist of Westfield State College.

The large variety of ecological specializations represented by the panel has been devised to permit wider audience participation and questioning.

CEQ leaders emphasized that the ecological approach by this panel discussion will focus attention on the need for new criteria which should be applied to future highway building and planning and to water resource projects which have a substantial impact on the environment.

Invitations and notices have been sent out to state and municipal officials, schools and conservation organizations in the river basin. This panel discussion is open to the public without charge.

West Point Grad Applies For Army Discharge as CO

NEW YORK (AP) - A West Point graduate who has applied for a discharge from the Army as a selective conscientious objector said Tuesday reports of an alleged massacre at My Lai convinced him the Vietnam war was "morally repugnant."

Lt. Jouis P. Font, 24, of Kansas City, Kan., said he would "not serve in Vietnam in uniform in any capacity."

The lieutenant said he was not "a total pacifist," but that after two years of "agonizing" study and meditation he has concluded "the war in Vietnam is immoral and unjust."

"The My Lai incident strongly crystallized my belief," Font said. American soldiers were alleged to have murdered civilians at the Vietnamese village.

"I love my God and my country," he said, "but I love my God first."

Font, who placed 31st in the 1968 graduating class of 706 cadets at the United States Military Academy said he has filed a 47 page appeal to the Army asking for a discharge.

An ACLU attorney said Font was applying for the discharge in accordance with military regulations. He declined to say what he would do if the application is denied.

The lieutenant said he was obeying Army orders directing him to leave a special course at Harvard University and report to Ft. Meade Md.

Font was enrolled at Harvard under a special program for "distinguished military graduates" of West Point.

"We discussed Vietnam in this course," he said. "The more I learned about the war, the more I turned to religion."

April 10, 11 Set To Cure UMass

An AD HOC group of faculty, students, and staff have called for talk and action to deal with the serious problems of the university. Their proposal is that Friday and Saturday, Arpil 10 and 11, be devoted to consideration of the whole range of issues which have cuased educational communities to split deeply in recent years and, often, to resort to violence.

The April 10-11 Committee have expressed their confidence in further talk if it is serious talk by many diverse people and if the talk is pursued to conclusions which support and produce clear and believable proposals for quick action. They plan that the second day, Saturday, be devoted to such concern with concrete proposals for action.

The full page advertisement in today's Collegian contains the text of a petition which has already been signed by some 200 faculty members. The petition will continue to be circulated to get student, staff, and faculty signatures in the dormitories, dining commons, Student Union, and classroom buildings.

Committee members hope that there will be enough signers to establish that the many pressing problems of education, human relations, environment, war -- and all of their accompaniments -- should be the sole business of the University on April 10 and 11.

The proponents of this effort are now attempting to reach everyone on the campus who is still confident enough and optimistic enough to look for the policies and programs which can head off some of the frustrations which have helped to produce the rock throwing at other universities.

To bring about the meetings which are genuinely appropriate to the ideas and feelings of the "citizenry", the signers of the petition are being asked to state their concerns and their willingness to plan meetings. Some of the meetings are expected to involve groups which are sufficiently under way by April 10 that they can begin with rough drafts of proposals. Some other groups will start with less definition and less advance work but with a sense of mutual concern.

Many of the ideas for the two day meeting originated in the Undergraduate Education Conference which is a group of over a hundred faculty members who met last February 12 at a Northampton Hotel. The early proposal has been modified by members of SWAP, the Student Senate, and others.

A meeting of the April 10-11 Coordinating Committee is scheduled for this afternoon at 4 in the Colonial Lounge. Persons desiring further information may obtain it by telephoning 545-2789.

Shooting Spree Kills Co-pilot; Pilot Lands Safely at Logan

BOSTON (AP) The co-pilot of an airliner carrying 73 persons was shot to death and the pilot and one passenger were wounded Tuesday night when a man entered the cockpit and ordered the plane flown eastward. But the pilot - though critically injured - managed to land the plane safely.

Officials at Logan International Airport reported that the pilot, Capt. Robert Wilbur Jr., 35, of Fairlawn, N.J., radioed the tower to report his copilot dead and he and the passenger wounded.

Wilbur said an armed man had come into the cockpit, ordering them at the point of a gun to fly the plane to the east, but that when he was told they would have to land the plane at Boston first, he began shooting.

The airline said after the plane was successfully landed the first officer was found slumped over his seat, the captain at the controls and the assailant lying on the floor.

Eastern said the plane, a shuttle bound for Boston from Newark, N.J., was a DC9 with 68 passengers and 5 crewmen.

Three stewardesses were collecting fares when one of the passengers said he had no money and that he wanted to see the captain, an airline official said.

The man pulled out a pistol, strode to the cockpit - and soon thereafter the shooting broke out. The copilot who was killed was First Officer James E. Hartley, 31, of Fort Lee, N.J., Eastern said.

At that point the plane was over Franklin, Mass., about 30 miles south of Boston.

The Campus Center management announced yesterday that, contrary to several rumors, University employees will staff the food service in the new campus center. All facilities in the new building will be closed to outside vendors.

Faculty Senate Endorses Black Studies Department

By JOHN J. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

The Faculty Senate yesterday endorsed the creation in the College of Arts and Sciences of a W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies, divorcing its approval from the details of the report of the Committee on Afro-American Studies, feeling that to restrict the Department to the details of the report would be to hinder the Department created once from formulating its own policies and determining its own direction.

Reservations concerning courses to be required for blacks only were satisfied by CAS Dean Seymour Shapiro's assurance that, under the general principles guiding the College, such a requirement could not be effected by the Department without College approval. On the strength of that statement the Senate defeated an amendment to the approval motion which would have prevented mandatory course for blacks.

The only other substantial debate revolved about the role of the Five-College Black Studies Committee. The intent of the Committee was to serve as a coordinating body, designed primarily, in the words of Professor William Wilson, to "eliminate needless competition (among the five colleges) for qualified (black studies) personnel", which Mr. Wilson contended were severely limited.

The Five College Committee would also function as an advisory committee on all black studies' personnel and curriculum matters. An amendment by Professor Silver to change the wording from THE to A recommending committee passed, in the belief that to call it the committee would infringe on the function and responsibilities of the university's departmental personnel committee. The motion as amended passed unanimously.

In other business, the Committee on Committees announced the Faculty Senate appointees to the University Governance Committee: Herman Cohen, William Conelly, Glen Gordon, and Morton Sternheim.

On the Humphrey incident, the Senate charged the Emergency Advisory Committee, enlarged for this purpose by three undergraduate and two graduate student appointees, with an investigation, the results of which are to be reported by the end of the semester. The Senate struck questions of violation of local, state, and federal law, restricting the investigation to violations of University regulations.

The Senate also heard Professor James Ludtke report to the Senate on the co-operation between the President's Advisory Committee on Rents and Fees, and the Faculty Senate's University Budgets Committee.

Environment Day Coordination Urged

From Chancellor Oswald Tippo:

It is suggested that all faculty, staff and students make an effort to coordinate their activities on National Environment Day (April 22, 1970) and during National Environment Week (April 19 through 25, 1970). A number of organizations, including academic departments, faculty committees and student groups are apparently planning programs in connection with these dates with little consideration for coordination.

Needless repetition, scheduling and publicity conflicts, and wasted resources will detract from the effectiveness of Environment Week and lessen its impact on the campus and in the region.

The Coalition for Environmental Quality, a faculty, student and citizen group, is establishing an office in Bartlett Hall, room 229B; and will coordinate Environment Week activities. The University switchboard will have their telephone number as soon as service is installed. I suggest that all interested parties coordinate through the CEQ office.

Baird Parole Delayed by St. Pat's Day

BOSTON (AP) - A parole for jailed birth control advocate William Baird was delayed at least one day Tuesday as the Boston city government suspended operations to celebrate a combined Evacuation Day - St. Patrick's Day holiday.

"It is my opinion that his continued imprisonment serves no sensible purpose," Gov. Francis W. Sargent said in a letter to Joseph V. McBrine, Boston commissioner of penal institutions.

Baird has already served about one month of a three-month sentence on charges of illegally giving a can of contraceptive foam to an unmarried Boston University coed.

He said his action was designed to test the constitutionality of a state law which allows only physicians to distribute birth control information.

Sargent said he talked with Mc Brine and had "reason to believe my recommendations will be favorably received."

Take an inside view after seeing the outside for so long. This is the book store in the new campus center. Its empty now, but picture it with lots of books and people. . . (MDC photo by Pat Lempart).

UMass Criticizes State Anti-War Bill

BOSTON (AP) - Massachusetts legislators who see their bill banning deployment of state citizens to serve in undeclared wars as a test of the constitutionality of the Vietnam War may be "whistling in the dark," according to a constitutional law expert.

The House passed Monday, 136 to 89, a measure that stipulates that no resident shall be required to serve in overseas hostilities without a congressional declaration except in an emergency or otherwise authorized by the President as commander-in-chief of the armed forces.

Dr. Dean Alfange Jr., a professor of constitutional law and civil liberties at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, said in an interview that federal courts will never reach the question of the constitutionality of the Vietnam war, as many legislators believe, because he said the bill itself is unconstitutional.

"Clearly, the state is attempting to interpose itself between its citizens and the federal government," Alfange said, "and the Supreme Court has ruled consistently that this is not constitutionally permissible under our federal system."

"That is as far as the federal courts need go on this law," he said.

The bill would require also that the attorney general represent before federal courts any citizen who sought protection under terms of the law.

A compromise reached before Monday's vote however, provides that one test case be brought to final completion in the federal courts before any other citizen seeks to bring the law into force.

The U.S. Supreme Court established in 1816 the legal precedent that it was for the federal government - not the states - determine federal constitutional principles, Alfange said.

Alfange cited the 1923 case of Massachusetts versus Mellon in which the state legislature sought to nullify a federal law giving aid to expectant mothers.

"The Supreme Court ruled here that citizens of Massachusetts are also citizens of the United States and it is not part of the state's duty or power to enforce citizens' rights with respect to their relations with the federal government," Alfange said.

"If these legislators think they can force the federal government to examine the constitutionality of the Vietnam war they are just whistling in the dark," he said.

In 1967, the Supreme Court refused to hear the case of a draftee who claimed the federal government acted unconstitutionally in sending him to Vietnam. At the same time, however, Justices William O. Douglas and Potter Stewart wrote a dissenting opinion saying that the Supreme Court should examine the constitutional questions of the war and the President's powers concerning armed forces deployments.

"Now with Chief Justice Warren Burger on the court, I think they are a lot less likely to take up the war's constitutional questions," Alfange said.

Rep. H. James Shea Jr., D-Newton, who filed the bill, said it would keep Massachusetts men from serving in "presidential or executive wars which have every appearance of being flagrantly unconstitutional."

Shea said he offered the measure because of the federal government's reluctance "to put its own house in constitutional order."

"Before this law would ever force a constitutional test of the Vietnam war," Alfange said, "it would be stricken because it is itself unconstitutional."

"I don't like the war any more than anyone else, but this bill flies in the face of Supreme Court rulings from the days of Chief Justice John Marshall," Alfange said.

Vietnamese Help Cambodia In Fight Against Viet Cong

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese artillery was reported Tuesday to have gone to the aid of Cambodian soldiers trying to drive Viet Cong forces from their soil. A Cambodian officer asked for the support.

U.S. officials in Chau Doc Province, where the artillery is located, said they believed it to be an unprecedented display of Vietnamese-Cambodian cooperation against the Viet Cong.

The latest fighting with South Vietnamese artillery support erupted Sunday and Monday 103 miles west of Saigon in the Mekong Delta as Cambodian troops tried to push a Viet Cong battalion across the border, Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett reported from Chau Doc.

The Cambodian government had given the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese until dawn Sunday to get out of Cambodia.

Rightly reliable informants told Arnett that during the operation, a Cambodian officer was in radio contact with the chief of South Vietnam's An Phu district, adjoining Cambodia. He asked for the artillery support.

Within hours, several 105 mm howitzers were blasting the Viet Cong troops down An Phu district, the shells hitting on both sides of the border on target areas supplied by the Cambodians.

Astounded U.S. officials in Chau Doc stressed the artillery support was given on a local basis and did not need Saigon's approval.

"I guess the Cambodian officer over there figured he needed a little extra help," one American told Arnett. "That is what we are presuming, anyway.

"But if they make it a practice of asking for our help, then that will make it a whole new ballgame down here."

Informants said aerial spotters counted five Viet Cong bodies lying just inside the Cambodian border late Monday afternoon. It was not known whether the artillery or Cambodian ground fire killed them.

The fighting was the second reported instance of Cambodian troops tangling with Communist command forces near the border in the rice-rich Mekong Delta. On Sunday, a four-hour battle broke out between Cambodian and North Vietnamese troops about 125 miles west of Saigon.

Military sources reported the fighting centered around Nui O, a 1,500-foot mountain about three miles from the border inside Cambodia. There were no reports of either Cambodian or North Vietnamese casualties.

The Nation and The World

Nixon Eases Anti-Inflation Freeze Acts to Encourage Home Building

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, saying the nation is moving back toward stable prices, lifted Tuesday his anti-inflationary freeze on $1.5 billion in federal-state funds for schools, hospitals, roads and other public projects.

At the same time, Nixon asked a series of actions by Congress and federal agencies to spur lagging home building, and dropped a strong hint that the independent Federal Reserve Board should loosen money supplies to cut the highest mortgage interest rates in history.

But the President warned in announcing his first major easing of stringent economic measures, "The rate of inflation still remains an urgent concern."

Nixon, backed by top White House economists and Republican congressional leaders, said runaway inflation in construction costs, including mortgage interest, land, labor and building materials, has boosted the cost of an average new house to $27,000 and prevented the nation from meeting urgent housing needs.

He asked Congress to approve his requests to increase federal aid for new housing by $50 million and set up a Federal Home Loan Bank System to free some $250 million for expanding home mortgage loans.

And he ordered the secretaries of defense, labor, and welfare to study how to increase the supply of skilled construction labor, especially by training veterans and minority groups for jobs. He told all federal agencies to seek ways to cut construction costs.

His comment that "A shortage of skilled labor runs up the cost of that labor" brought a sharp rejoinder from the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department. It said his own cutbacks in federal projects had boosted unemployment to 486,000 construction workers for a 7.9 per cent jobless rate, compared with the nation's 4.2 per cent rate for all workers.

Nixon's action lifted the freeze on $1.2 billion in money for federally aided state and local construction projects and is expected to free another $300 million in state matching funds, but the freeze remained on $1.8 billion more in direct federal construction.

Black Muslims Leave Farm Site Poison and Guns Destroy Cattle

ASHVILLE, Ala. (AP) - Black Muslims said Tuesday they are giving up a farming operation near here because of rifle fire and poison that they say have destroyed many cattle in recent months.

The disclosure last fall that the black separatist group had bought 1,000 acres in St. Clair County brought objections, including court suits, in this part of east central Alabama.

The Black Muslim leader, Elijah Mohammad, said in Chicago Tuesday: "We don't want to be anywhere we are not wanted."

Reports were that the Muslims will move the operation Wednesday to Greene County in west Alabama.

Sheriff Joel Wood said an investigation by Auburn University showed calcium arsenic was responsible for the deaths of 24 cows last week. Twenty-five were killed by rifle bullets last fall.

"This only proves what the white people are," Mohammad said. "They don't want a black man to have any freedom to do for himself. As for their deeds, the law will take care of that.

"If they will buy our property, we will sell out and leave them," he said. "We are making preparations to leave that area as soon as we get a sale for our property there."

Court suits and mass meetings by white people were among obstacles encountered by the Muslims, who said all they wanted was to be left alone.

The suits were unsuccessful.

The Ku Klux Klan leased land adjacent to some of the Muslim land. Imperial Wizard Robert Shelton of Northport, Ala., said the Klan wanted to be able to observe the Muslims.

Shortly after a Pell City white man, Ray Wyatt, sold the land to the Muslims, his auto dealership was destroyed by fire. No arrests have been made.

After the arsenic poisoning report, Sheriff Wood said there are no leads "but at least now we know what we're looking for." He said two state investigators are helping him.

The announced purpose of the Muslims was a farming, canning and processing operation to provide food to outlets in northern cities.

Pentagon Probe on Son My Prompts Charges by Army

WASHINGTON (AP) - Fourteen Army officers including the superintendent at West Point were charged Tuesday with military violation ranging from dereliction of duty to false swearing in connection with the alleged massacre at Son My, South Vietnam.

The charges were the outgrowth of a 14-week Pentagon probe of whether the Army adequately investigated or tried to cover up the alleged mass killing of South Vietnamese civilians by Americans in March 1968.

Declining to call it a coverup as such, Lt. Gen. William R. Peers, head of a special panel looking into the case, reported there were "serious deficiencies" in the performance of a number of officers who held command and staff position in the units involved in U. S. operations around Son My and its hamlet of My Lai.

Implicating perhaps the highest ranking officers ever involved in a single case, the Army levied charges against two generals, five colonels, three majors and four captains.

Among them were Maj. Gen. Samuel W. Koster, present West Point head who was commander of the Americal Division whose units swept through Son My two years ago Monday. He was charged with failure to obey lawful regulations and dereliction in the performance of his duties.

Charged with the same violations was his assistant at the time, Brig. Gen George H. Young Jr.

Capt. Ernest L. Medina, who led Company C 1st Battalion, 20th Infantry, during the controversial raid on My Lai, was charged with misprision of a felony, or failure to report the commission of a felony.

Peers told reporters that because of legal considerations he could not go into detail concerning his panel's findings about the purported massacre itself.

But he said the inquiry, which heard 400 witnesses and recorded some 20,000 pages of testimony in a Pentagon basement, "clearly established that a tragedy of major proportions" occurred at Son My.

Peers said that releasing details from the report, which has been turned over to Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor and Gen. William C. Westmoreland, might prejudice court-martials already scheduled or which may be scheduled in the future.

Mobs Clash in India In General Strike

CALCUTTA, Inda (AP) - Mobs armed with bombs, spears and daggers clashed Tuesday with political enemies in an attempt to enforce a general strike called to protest the toppling of the West Bengal State government. At least 20 persons were killed and 100 injured.

Federal troops were alerted following encounters between supporters of the Marxist Communist Party and other parties.

S. M. Ghosh, inspector general of the state police, said many of the casualties were supporters of the Marxists, who called the general strike Monday to protest the downfall of the coalition government in which they were senior partners.

Although most of the fighting occurred in and around Calcutta, two persons were killed and seven others injured in a confrontation between Marists and Forward Bloc party supporters in Cooch Behar, 200 miles north of Calcutta.

Ajoy Mukherjee, a non-Communist, was the chief minister of the 14-party coalition government.

He resigned when he felt he could no loger control the deteriorating law and order situation, which was under the direct jurisdiction of the deputy chief minister, Jyoti Basu, a Marxist.

Basu, as leader of the largest party in the State Assembly, controlling 80 of its 280 seats, said he would try to form an alternative government in a few days. He was to meet with Gov. S. S. Dhawan on Wednesday.

The deep differences in the leftist movement, demonstrated by the strike, appeared to doom Basu's chances. The Marxists have continually threatened to erode the support of other leftist parties, including the less militant pro-Moscow Right Communists.

If no party or parties can form a new government, the central government in New Delhi would have to take over the administration of the state.

The alert of federal troops indicated that Prime Minister Indira Gandhi was ready for such a move.

Senator Knocks Press Handling of Carswell

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., told the Senate Tuesday a vengeful and hostile press employed "professional hatchet men" in an attempt to discredit Judge G. Harrold Carswell, President Nixon's Supreme Court nominee.

Scores of reporters were sent out to search "for some evidence to discredit him," Eastland said. "He was faced with a press that had the motive and intention to get the nominee."

Frustrated in the effort, the Judiciary Committee chairman continued, opponents of the nominee then adopted the argument that Carswell is mediocre and insensitive to minority groups.

Looking up from his speech, propped against a lecturn on his desk, Eastland declared: "They are determined to prevent the President from giving balance to the Supreme Court."

Eastland and Sen. Gordon Allott, R-Colo., labored to defend Carswell against the charge of mediocrity with which opponents hope to defeat the nominee.

Carswell, said Eastland, is "a lawyer's lawyer and a judge's judge, a man of the law."

He said the Washington Post, which is editorially against confirmation, also tagged Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Judge Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., President Nixon's first two nominees to the high court, mediocre.

Burger was confirmed but Haynsworth was rejected. Carswell was nominated for the seat which was denied to Haynsworth.

Allott, chairman of the Senate Republican Policy Committee, likened Carswell to the late Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Like "The Great Dissenter," Allott said, Carswell "is not afraid to stand against a fashionable tide of opinion."

Describing Carswell as a "strict constructionist," Allott said he has stood fast in taking a balanced view of the Constitution and the law while "The high federal judiciary is practicing what might be called 'loose construction' or 'constitutional liberalism'."

Butterfield Trial Effects Change

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

Last week the Student Senate voted to drop all charges against Butterfield House for alleged violations of the Senate Financial Policy Act. The Senate then changed the rules which Butterfield had been brought to Court under.

By changing the laws the Senate recognized what has been common practice in many dorms for many years; depositing dorm dues in private accounts.

The Recognized Student Organization office since its conception has played the role of parent. R.S.O. has for the last decade kept the University's credit rating intact.

Butterfield House and other dorms on campus have for some time had workable dorm governments, capable of maintaining their own credit rating.

The Student Senate act last week simply added one sentence to the Financial Policy Act: Dormitories shall be able to establish private accounts. This addition preempted the longer, more detailed "MacMillan Act" which had been held up in committee awaiting a change in the Student Senate Constitution.

The constitutional rationale behind the charges brought before General Court against Butterfield by Rick Verrochi, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, was based on Chapter 75 Section 11 of the Massachusetts State laws. The section makes provision for the establishment of "trust funds" for different student organizations and any student levied tax.

The vague sentence under which Butterfield was brought to question put the dormitory under an "other activities" inclusion. In other words someone at sometime had decided that dormitories were "other activities."

R.S.O. policy has long been attacked on the basis of its inefficiency and its few rules; no purchasing of alcoholic beverages; purchase slips had to be used. Butterfield attacked R.S.O. on the basis that no one had more right to control Butterfield money than Butterfield residents.

Throughout the Senate Ways and Means Committee investigations, which managed to "convince" all of the other dorms on campus to comply to Senate rule through the "freezing" of funds and threats of court cases, Butterfield House remained firm. The only words that came from Butterfield's official representatives were, "That is Butterfield's business."

Now the change is made. Responsible dormitories can now use their monies as they see fit, without fear of going to court.

The Butterfield court case officially lasted for about thirteen minutes. If the Student Senate had not responded to the need for change within the financial structure of this campus, the case might have been the longest in University history.

If the case had not been thrown out of Court on purely constitutional grounds, (Butterfield's constitution relieved the Butterfield President and Treasurer from responsibility to make use of R.S.O.) The 120 residents were thinking of going to court separately, with 140 witnesses for the defense in each case.

Bureau of Mines Turns Garbage to Oil; Reduces Problems of Waste Pollution

PITTSBURGH (AP) - If an experiment being conducted by the U.S. Bureau of Mines succeeds, the bag of garbage and trash a householder throws out every evening may become worth its weight in oil.

But not to the householder. The "discovery" of oil in solid waste won't make anyone rich but it might go some way toward solving the nation's trash disposal problems.

Chemists at the Bureau of Mines research laboratories 14 miles from here already know how to make heavy oil out of garbage. Now they are trying to find out the most economic way to do so and how to refine the black goo to make it useful.

The process was discovered by accident about a year ago by Dr. Herbet Appell and Dr. Irving Wender, chemists for the bureau. Dr. Appell said he was trying to find a way to turn coal into oil when he found that one process would also turn cellulose into oil.

Dr. Appell said he did not think of applying the process to garbage until last September when research coordinator John Tosh made the suggestion. Since then, his experiments with the garbage have taken priority over the experiments with coal.

"Right now there is a big interest in waste disposal," Dr. Appell said, "and we expect the priority to continue."

Dr. Appell and Dr. Wender say they have the process pretty well worked out but are trying to find the best and least expensive method.

The Bureau's experimental garbage is stored in refrigerated bins to prevent decomposition and then it is shredded and combined with water. When it is to be processed it is placed into steel pressure vessels along with carbon monoxide, and the heat and pressure turned up.

It is processed about an hour and allowed to cool. The heavy oil, which is almost a solid at room temperature, is extracted with a solvent. The solvent is boiled away, leaving the crude oil by itself.

One hundred pounds of garbage can produce two gallons of the heavy oil.

Two major considerations still are being studied by Dr. Appell and Dr. Wender and staff. One is how the oil can be used. In its crude form, the oil is virtually useless but, say Drs. Appell and Wender, with the proper refining it could be used as a low grade fuel oil. The chemists say the oil will have the advantage of being almost completely sulfur free so when burned it will not produce one of the most noxious of pollutants - sulfur fumes.

Commuter Assembly Meeting Allows $4200 in Expenditures

At the first meeting of the Commuter Assembly last Monday, a motion was passed which authorizes the Executive Council to spend up to $4270.00 for any single purpose without the direct consent of the Commuter Assembly.

However, according to the constitution, this motion may be reconsidered if a petition with the signatures of at least one hundred members of the Assembly is submitted to the executive council within the next two weeks.

Nomination papers for the Executive Council are available at the RSO office on March 30 and are due in on April 8. Eight members for the Executive Council will be elected on April 14.

What's so special about Beechwood Ageing?

We must be bragging too much about Beechwood Ageing.

Because we're starting to get some flak about it. Like, "Beechwood, Beechwood . . . big deal." And "If Beechwood Ageing is so hot, why don't you tell everybody what it is?"

So we will.

First, it isn't big wooden casks that we age Budweiser in.

But it is a layer of thin wood strips from the beech tree (what else?) laid down in a dense lattice on the bottom of our glass-lined and stainless steel lagering tanks. This is where we let Budweiser ferment a second time. (Most brewers quit after one fermentation. We don't.)

These beechwood strips offer extra surface area for tiny yeast particles to cling to, helping clarify the beer. And since these strips are also porous, they help absorb beer's natural "edge," giving Budweiser its finished taste. Or in other words, "a taste, a smoothness and a drinkability you will find in no other beer at any price."

Ah yes, drinkability. That's what's so special about Beechwood Ageing.

But you know that.

Budweiser® is the King of Beers®.

Record Reviews:

What's New on the Market

by DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC Staff

(It should be noted that the opinions expressed are those of the reviewer only, and reviewers are human.)

RONNIE HAWKINS, Ronnie Hawkins, (Cotillion SD 9019) This certainly is an original album. The dulcet tones of Ronnie Hawkins, not unlike a country Tom Jones, transform many fine songs into truly unlistenable ones.

BLUES FROM THE GUTTER, Champion Jack Dupree, (Atlantic SD 8255) Jack Dupree is another of the old-time blues masters. He plays the piano and sings in a nice, loose, happy style. "Walking the Blues" is not only interesting musically, it's good listening. If you like your blues easy, in the style of John Lee Hooker, but with piano, this album is your album.

BLACK GOLD, Nine Simone, (RCA LSP-4248) Nine Simone remains the greatest blues-folk-soul popular-classical singer of our day. This album was recorded live and has a few technical defects, such as an over-shadowing back-up band, but even with the defects, BLACK GOLD is an immortal album, for our time, for all times.

RENAISSANCE, Renaissance, (Elecktra EKS-74068) Another group of serious musicians has emerged with another fusion of classical and rock. The trouble is, there are so many of these groups, one tends to fall asleep listening to them. Renaissance lyrics (included in the album) are trite, and the music is far from innovative. The album as a whole, however, is not that bad, although I wouldn't buy it myself.

WOODSMOKE AND ORANGES, Paul Siebel, (Elektra (EKS-74064) I wish that this album had been released minus Paul Siebel, for the back-up group, led by guitarist David Bromberg, has a class to it that neither Siebel's singing or songs have. I suppose if you like stock country and western, you'll enjoy this album. But it all sounds the same to me --

Celebration Protests Area Sewage Disposal

In conjunction with the Sunderland sewage Celebration, a free film, "Multiply And Subdue The Earth" followed by a trek to Sunderland will take place today. The demonstration in Sunderland after the trip is to protest the town practice of dumping untreated sewage into the Connecticut River.

The demonstration will include a tour of the abandoned waste treatment plant and a dramatization in the town's center. Afterwards, participants will canvas the town to wind up the celebration.

The free film concerns water pollution and will be shown in the Student Union Ballrodm starting at one o'clock. Between the film's showings, facts pertaining to the Sunderland sewage situation will be presented. The Sunderland trip starts after the presentation.

The celebration is sponsored by the Coalition For Environmental Quality and Friends.

Some demonstrators will serve on a bucket brigade, taking water from the nearby river and dumping it in front of the town hall. After this water has drained into the sewers, solid waste will be left behind.

According to CEQ, the state law requires a primary sewage plant to remove solids and a secondary plant to remove liquid poisons.

Sunderland's primary and secondary sewage treatment plants have been inoperable since mid-1969, and run inefficiently prior to this time.

The Attorney General filed a temporary restraining order in the Superior Court prohibiting the dumping of raw sewage for ten days. The only legal attack is that Sunderland must submit a "paper answer" to the court and agree to a trial at a future time.

Assistant Attorney General Gittelsohn is now delaying a trial date because Sunderland is trying to get their sewage plant in operating condition.

Raw sewage can create these problems:

- This prevents the Connecticut River to the Holyoke Dam from becoming a Class B River by 1974; class B meaning water use for bathing, fishing and recreational purposes.
- Contact water sports such as swimming require low coliform bacteria counts; a bacteria responsible for some human diseases.
- Untreated domestic sewage generally has a high coliform bacteria count.
- Micro-organisms which cut down domestic waste compete with the fish and other fauna for oxygen, hus reducing the amount available. Domestic effluents cause darkening of the river water which means that more sunlight is absorbed as heat.
- Simply chemistry shows that warm water contains less oxygen than cooler water.
- The end result is less oxygen available for the degradation of waste products and for fish survival.
- The present situation is both illegal and ecologically disastrous!

CEQ hopes the residents of Sunderland are concerned about remedying the situation.

Hilliard to Speak At UConn Tonight

Is there a Paulist in the crowd?

Believe it or not, a campus protest group is not an unlikely place to find a Paulist.

Why? Because Paulists are the mediators of our time . . . standing between God and man . . . understanding, helping, loving . . . trying to bring together the extremes of the world we live in and the Church.

Wherever he is . . . as a college chaplain, working in a ghetto or helping in a parish . . . the Paulist is serving.

If you're interested in finding out more about the Paulist priestly spirit, write for our illustrated brochure and a copy of our Renewal Chapter Guidelines.

DO YOU CARE?

A faculty group has begun to circulate a petition which hundreds of faculty have already signed. The petition reads:

"WE THE UNDERSIGNED MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COMMUNITY join the Chancellor in believing that this is a time of crisis for the university. We believe that the university community has become fragmented. We believe that the university no longer meets adequately the needs of those whom it should serve. Although "normal" operations continue on a day-to-day basis, all is not well.

Therefore, we propose that the university community stop its normal business on Friday and Saturday, April 10 and 11, 1970 in order to reexamine and redirect itself. Many issues (general and specific merit discussion and action as acknowledged recently by the Chancellor.

In support of this proposal, we urge the cancellation of all classes on April 10-11, 1970 in order to facilitate meaningful dialogue and action on the many vital issues which face us. We invite all members of the university community, faculty, staff, administrators, trustees, and especially students, to join in suggesting problems and proposing action programs.

We emphasize that we call for this action on April 10-11 not only to encourage full discussion of many important issues, but because we feel change is vital at this critical juncture. As Chancellor Tippo said, "the need for action is imperative."

The April 10-11 Committee, composed of faculty, students, and staff, plans April 10th as a day in which many of the issues which face us will be discussed in many separate meetings and April 11th as a day for the formulation of action proposals on many of these issues.

If you agree that your needs are not being adequately met; if you believe that issues such as the grading system, students rights, residential colleges, politics and the university, teacher evaluation and training, minority group rights, etc. need to be fully and openly considered by all the members of the university community, support this effort. Sign the petition when it reaches your dorm, dining commons, or office.

These plans and efforts will be meaningless without your participation in suggesting topics, planning meetings and proposing solutions. We must all get together — students, faculty, staff — and conduct ourselves as an educational community once again.

I SUPPORT THE "APRIL 10-11" EFFORT.

Administrative News

Oswald Tippo's "University Gazette" debuts March 27th but, contrary to some student theory, the administration's house organ is not intended as a slap in the face for the existing student-controlled media on campus. If anything, the creation of the newsletter shows only that the administration has finally realized that it has no direct line of communication with the student body.

When the Chancellor announced several weeks ago that he intended to create an administration newsletter, several student leaders immediately jumped to the conclusion that Tippo was trying to upstage the Collegian and WMUA as the campus' primary news sources; in short, that he was trying to take the news media out of student hands.

But it now seems clear that these fears are groundless and that, if anything, the creation of the "Gazette" may help the student media.

As Tippo envisions it, the "Gazette" will carry official University policy statements and accounts of events, plus a variety of academic and administrative notices.

The Chancellor claims that he needs a newsletter to distribute this kind of copy because he has found that the Collegian and WMUA because of space and time limitations, "cannot fit in all the bulletin board memos which are needed to keep the University functioning smoothly."

He also wants an established vehicle ready if it becomes necessary to distribute an official University statement to the campus in a time of crisis, such as the rent hike protest and the Mills House incident earlier this semester.

All of this in understandable. Tippo, upon his appointment to the Chancellorship, told the student body that he felt increased community communication was a must, and he has seized upon the Newsletter as a first step in increasing University communication.

In the process, Tippo will be freeing the University's established daily media, WMUA and the Collegian, from the responsibility of publicizing the bulletin board notices which seem to grow each year. And this will be a welcome relief for both these organizations.

From the MDC's standpoint, it will amount to freeing nearly three pages a week, three pages which will then be open to student-oriented campus news and campus issues. Clearly, a student newspaper should devote all space possible to major student issues, and Tippo's "Gazette" will be helping the Collegian to expand its coverage of meaningful campus events by relieving the paper of its bulletin board pressure.

Thus the establishment of the "Gazette" should help, rather than harm student media on campus, but possibly the greatest contribution which the Gazette will make lies not in what it will carry but in the very fact that it exists.

It would have been easy for Tippo to state that he wanted to increase campus communication without taking any positive steps to accomplish this. But the Chancellor did take action, immediately after his appointment, to fulfill a "campaign promise."

And Tippo should be commended for recognizing the lack of satisfactory administration - campus communication. But he should also be warned that a newsletter alone cannot bridge the obvious communication gap between Whitmore and the rest of campus. Hopefully, he plans to take further action.

Sewage Celebration

A clean river to live near is all we ask. That's all. And members of the Committee on Environmental Quality will try to make their concern and desires on this subject known Wednesday in a "sewage celebration". The celebration will take the form of a mild demonstration against the town of Sunderland. Why the town of Sunderland?

At present the home of many UMies is dumping raw sewage into the Connecticut despite the fact the town owns a waste treatment plant that is presently inoperative. Even before the closing down of the plant the town had been greatly polluting the river by not using the plant to its maximum capacity by by-passing the treatment center during storms. Now that the plant is closed, solid, untreated waste is passing into the river virtually destroying the river as a body of water that can be used for recreational purposes.

It is hoped that the bucket brigade and canvasers will raise some degree of concern amongst the people of Sunderland to reopen the plant. Look at the CEQ display in the Student Union this week. The water in those cannisters is the result of the negligence of the town of Sunderland and others along the river. This kind of water makes use of the Connecticut unhealthy for recreational uses, not to mention possible human consumption.

The consequences of water pollution are far reaching and the answers to them are vital to man's survival. Anybody who is disturbed about the critical issue of water pollution is urged to voice their concern by participating actively in CEQ and in this particular demonstration.

A clean river to live near is all we ask. Please voice your concern.

What Power? To Who?

Recently, letters in this newspaper and notices around the campus have borne a stock phrase above their signatures: "ALL POWER TO THE PEOPLE!" Being one who is interested in power, people, and semantics, I have decided to take a look into that phrase.

"All Power" is a strange concept. It would help if we knew what kind of power they were talking about. It can mean the power in people uniting together, in cohesiveness, and in people being able to understand each other more clearly. This is not only a source of great power; it is a beautiful thing. This phrase can also, however, be interpreted as a request for great economic and political power, which, when severed from the human reality, becomes a device which enables one to put himself and his followers above all other people, and thereby deny our attempts to get together.

"The people" is another interesting source of ambiguity. We never learn for certain who they are. The phrase could be in reference to the general public or any part thereof, or it can mean some specialized group. If this is true, we can become concerned with the question, "What specialized group?"

Now let's see what happens when you apply "all power" to "the people".

If unrestricted, unlimited power in the hands of the general public is referred to, then it's quite obvious that, through the courtesy of the mass media, this power can be channeled into undesirable ends. One example of this is the lynch-mob, in which anger, aroused in the people by agitators, takes control and people lose their sense of responsibility, retaining only their sense of power. Besides slanting your opinion on world news, the media can also reduce your power to that needed to buy automobiles, cigarettes, and booze.

The situation is worsened, however, when "the people" become a special minority or opinion group, who desire the power to force their opinions on the rest of the public. This is more upsetting when it is seen that many letters emphasizing power are from people who associate themselves with various extremist movements. Oddly enough, these people complain about "fascism", yet they seldom realize that dictatorship originating from a large group is worse than that of a small bureaucracy because public opinion is easier to arouse, yet harder to bring under control than are a few people whom everyone can identify.

Furthermore, it seems that to use the phrase "the people" in connection with a certain group is a subtle dehumanization of everyone else. In the light of these, it appears that a new phrase must be taken up in order to meet these inadequacies. I would suggest that, whatever it may be, it should place more emphasis on human interaction, since ther seems to be little justification for hang-ups about power-grabbing. After all, we'll do better if we understand each other than if we try to compel each other.

Accomodations

If a bureaucracy lacks that intangible quality of decency, it is a bureaucracy that is doomed to die. A bureaucracy that relies on laws, "legal" only because they are written down on paper, and humanly unjust, is a bureaucracy that will fast build up a credibility gap, and lose any popular support it has ever had. Just as Lyndon Johnson lost the nation, so the Tippo Administration is in danger of losing the support of 18,000 students.

It is not too late for the University to find accomodations for the conference of state educators. It could put the educators around the campus, in rooms that are already empty. It could negotiate with the numerous hotels and motels around the Amherst area for reasonable rates. Indeed, bedding in a motel might be more agreeable to the educators than climbing up the frame of a bunk bed and hiking up Orchard Hill.

If the University cannot make alternative arrangements for its conference, then the property rights of the students must be protected. A security guard must be stationed round-the-clock in the two dorms to protect the resident's properties. If President Nixon can search American tourists for a substance that doesn't overtly harm anyone, then surely Chancellor Tippo can search souvenir taking conventioneers in order to protect the RIGHTS of American citizens.

Someone in the University isn't doing his job. To inform residents that their rooms will have to be vacated only five days before the deadline for moving possessions is benign neglect of the highest order. Charging but $2.00 per day for lodging for each conferee is fiscal stupidity. According to Mr. William Harlow of the University Conference Office, the only profit that will be made will be put into the Residence Hall income Fund, and Dean Fitzpatrick has said that Grayson and Fields House will receive a total of $1000 for their inconvenience. Is it really worth it?

The Administration has said that this conference will be the last one that is imposed on students. Nagasaki was the last A-Bomb dropped on Japan you know.

Ode

Yodel and twist like a communist you u.s. private soap opera eye
Hang your gob of spit on my umbrella big brother
I see you too and someday I'll be big and strong and someday I'll come looking for you

Inside the sound-proof booth with four white walls the cell of electric chair blues chant
From your womb I've tuned in, to progress in progress

Stiff god haunts the d.c.ville skyline
A starched scarecrow in the cornfield of plenty Calling all crows!
your idol is high
but you are fowl as long as you bow this way
Priestly farmer of law, shut thy tongue and leave thy faithful dummy without a voice
I can feel only silence in the midst of this noise

And as the great white chef cooks and schemes in his great white house they're still saying that cannibals are black they're still using their toilet paper to wipe their conscience clean
And their god is red white and blue
And the bible is their tool, of their constitution blues
Deliver me from this sound-proof booth this antiseptic wilderness wall to wall coast to coast back to back . . .

The monument climbs the sky
The pin has marked the cushion in memory of the first win
Rigormortis sets in and limpness stiffens and comes off into decay like the erection of a statue
I drop out someday
into anonymity

The stiff standing washington monument under which the body of general george must lie on his back with his legs spread, in a toast to the heavens

Yes one day this spear will sprout flowers one day tarzan will swing down and claim it for lady jane one day it will take all comers on the day of a new moon
Now it stands and sways a bit star spangled beanstalk from a fatherly crotch
It stands without a conscience, until the final handjob
Until general george rolls over on his belly

No Apathy

To the editor:

I am a member of "the new silent majority", but I am not apathetic. I did not vote on the Vietnam referendum because I don't know which way I'd vote. I see merit on both sides. I don't like war or killing and I'd rather the U. S. wouldn't get involved in others political troubles. But I also think there must be more behind the war than "meddling." We must be fighting for something more far-reaching. Frankly, I don't know enough about the war to decide whether it's better to fight or not. (and both sides seem so bigoted that I can't get straight answers as to what the reasons are for being there.) Until I can get all the true facts, I need to base my belief on, I have to go "middle-of-the road" siding with one side for some things and the other side for others. I also have to have faith that our existing policy is the best alternative we currently have and I must accept this until I can present a reasonable and better solution to put in its place.

I agree that people who know where they stand should let it be known (and in ways other than bandwagon, newsmaking tactics which turn people away from what they express). People who complain, discuss and firmly believe in one side, but don't let their reasons and view be known where it can be effective, surely are apathetic folks. But perhaps too, there are non-apathetic people who try but can't conscientiously take either side - their vote would be invalid if they checked both "Yes" and "No" (It's like a multiple choice exam). Maybe it's the latter group who composes much of the silent majority.

One thing which I think is frequently lost in such issues, is the mature, rational weighing of all possibilities presented by both sides. Many will jump onto one side then put up defenses as to why they profess some things. Many of their arguments "go off half-cocked" because they haven't thought through both sides. They may not even believe some things they are saying.

It seems that many people are tearing down and condemning whatever "the administration" or "the establishment" does, but I don't see anyone putting anything better in its place. They often seem to overlook "the other" and aren't willing to sacrifice things of themselves. They are as unwilling to see the other side as the latter is to see theirs. This looks to me like parallel lines in discord to infinity.

Unfair

To the Editor:

It's funny but I had hopes that discrimination between male and female would at least be lessened at the college level. I can remember incidents in high school that really made me wonder just what the reasoning was behind many administrative policies regarding time and financial allotments for womens' sports. Well, UMass is doing a fine job of perpetuating this inequality! Consider the following situation and ask yourself if it's really fair.

The Womens' Gymnastics Team this year is by far one of the best yet. Big deal, huh? Last year they placed 4th in the National Competitions held in Springfield. That is a big deal. That made UMass Womens' Gymnastics Team 4th in the nation. This year the team has a good chance of placing 3rd or higher. But the chance is being quelched quite effectively by the Athletic Department's discriminatory policy. The National Competitions are being held in Provo, Utah and to send a team of six and one coach would cost $1,500. The girls on the team work just as hard as the men do on their respective teams, yet the school will not give them the well deserved honor of representing and defending UMass' title this year. Their coach Mrs. Kjeldsen puts in a lot of time also, only to have her highly skilled team turned aside. Mrs. Kjeldsen approached top officials in the Athletic Dept. to receive the answer no and hear the rationalization that the teams the Womens' Team would be competing with would not be of high caliber. One problem: they were thinking in terms of caliber for MEN'S SPORTS. As it stands now Mrs. Kjeldsen and two girls, Linda Seikunas and Marina Rodriguez are going to the competition. Mrs. Kjeldsen is paying her own expenses and the girls' bills are covered by money Mrs. Kjeldsen has managed to save and scrape out of the team budget. Of course, their living expenses are a big questionmark. Think about it. You know if it was a mens' team they'd have a chartered plane, steak dinners, the best accommodations and probably chartered transport for UMass fans. As a student paying student activity and athletic fees I see a GREAT DISCREPANCY. There are other examples of this inequality within the structure of the Athletic Department I could cite but this one particularly outrages me. A team that has worked so hard and so long will not be able to represent itself and YOU in the Nationals on March 25 - 28 and to me the reason why is downright unfair. Think about it kids, your funds are being allotted on a pretty biased basis.

Prejudice

To the editor:

Miss Kaminsky: In your MDC letter of March 16 you ally yourself resolutely among the ranks of those individuals who never permit reason to interfere with their convictions.

Why require Jews, often considered human, you know, to be morally superior to other people as a criterion for recognition? Their personal failings are no more execrable and no less understandable than the same frailties in non-Jews. (I said understandable, not commendable.) Each individual's disparate shortcomings have no bearing on his group's worthiness to exist.

Were you to examine Jewish religious ideals (prayers, penitence, charity, etc.) and their secular, devolved goals (intellectual achievement, security, integrity, etc.) you would discover a remarkably high correlation between ideology and socially beneficent actualization. You would also find your generalized "facts" in error.

Poll the creators, innovators, and leading lights in the world (including outstanding radicals) and you would find a disproportionate number of Jews; impelled by their cultural background they strive actively (often against prejudice) to create a better world... for everyone.

You denigrate prejudice against Blacks et. al., yet concomitantly espouse anti-Semitism? Perhaps this is consequent of your ignorance about the facts you allude to. I can't offer a guaranteed specific for the educational deficiencies and simplistic tendentiousness of you and your ilk (please excuse the generalization); but for starters I'd suggest a diverse reading list and an open mind.

Even were your allegations true, it would be asinine to totally condemn any group fighting to exist simply because their members were morally imperfect. The goal is improvement, not elimination. If social progress awaited man's moral perfection, we'd all still be in trees -- and you'd be there with us, I'm sure.

Jews aren't perfect, but they do try harder.

I'm sorry people like you reduce people like me to chauvinism; it, too, is prejudice.

Perhaps you might do well to consult the Delphic Oracle before venturing additional diatribes on any of your other favorite prejudices.

Don't G o!

To the Editor:

I am an American Serviceman, and have been visiting here on campus for the past two weeks, prior to being sent to Vietnam. During these two weeks, I could not help but notice all the attention being given to Vietnam and the draft. I have been in the service for fifteen months, and I write this letter to advise anyone who is eligible for the draft to resist, and in doing so, to stand firm for what they believe.

When in the service one is limited by being unable to say or do what one feels is correct. Limited much more than in civilian life.

I am being forced against my will to serve in a war in which I do not believe. Eight months ago I requested reassignment to Vietnam, and two months later the request was disapproved. When this happened, I began to see things in a new light. I was glad that I would not be sent to that Godforsaken country. In January of this year, my request was taken and approved by the Department of the Army. I am being sent to Vietnam. In a word, I was Ripshit, but there was nothing I could do. In the military there is no right of appeal.

As soon as a person enters the service, he has certain Constitutional rights violated. The four rights that the military pays no heed to are: Freedom of Speech, Search & Seizure, Trial by Jury, and Cruel & unusual punishment.

As an example of violation of rights; while I was stationed in Detroit, one of my buddies wore a hash pipe with a peace symbol painted on it, around his neck. He only wore it while he was off duty and in civilian clothes. One day, he was approached by an officer who told him to take it off, since it was considered to be the symbol of a "Subversive organization" My buddy refused, and consequently got in some hot water.

Believe me, the war in Vietnam is hell! Brutal, gory, bloody, ugly, unjust, unnecessary hell.

It is for these reasons that I say to all the youth of America, Throw your fists in the air and shout "Hell No! We won't GO!"

I only wish I had.

Not Enough

To The Editor:

I find Mr. Medieros' article on freedom (3-12-70) a very revealing one in this age of turmoil and dissent. I think the best statement was his concern in seeing "improvement in upward communication" as a basic problem in our society today. I often wonder if the reverse is also true, that we often do not communicate very well from the upper levels down.

His definition of "real freedom" bothered me. He explained that freedom means "not...only access to communications, (but) access to power." He also explained that in this day of computers direct voting on issues is possible. He further cited our Founding Fathers as effective radicals. It was Patrick Henry that said, "the people is a beast". In fact, the entire Virginia delegation wanted voting rights extended only to the landowners. Samuel Adams, a radical who wanted to change things, wasn't there to plan the Constitution. The Revolution in France was long and bloody because people were given access to power. A strong leader finally solidified that country - a dictator.

Yes, I agree with Mr. Medieros in that communication from the bottom should be improved. But, somehow, I don't think all the world's problems can be solved by any but professionally competent people whose occupation is nothing but government. To have a person who reads the newspapers at night directly making decisions and extremely complex problems seems to me like a plumber assisting in a heart transplant.

I think our problem in this country is a failure in the voter to take a long, hard look at the candidates who are supposed to be the professionals we hire. We listen to their campaign speeches and pay attention to party, etc. How often do we examine their past performance? How did this presidential candidate vote as a congressman? What legislation did he oppose? How effective was he? I think the majority of people in this country are led too often by emotional choices, both in selecting their candidate and in opposing present policies.

By the way, when did you last personally write to your Congressmen?

Dissent

It is not enough to allow dissent. We must demand it. For there is much to dissent from. We dissent from the fact that millions are trapped in poverty while the nation grows rich. We dissent from the condi"ons and hatreds which deny full life to our fellow citizens because of the color of their skin. We dissent from the monstrous absurdity of a world where nations stand poised to destroy one another, and men must kill their fellow man. We dissent from cities which blunt our senses and turn the ordinary acts of daily life into a painful struggle.

Interview

But if you see no hope at all, isn't it sort of. . .well, a lie--all your talk about how human beings must love one another?

Yes, my friend, it is a lie. Already on the calendar blares the moment of all-freeing Truth.. of Peace and Brotherhood and Equality and Integration--an end to misery and fear and hatred. Why, in that wonderful moment even their skins (had they skins) will be quite acceptable color of cinder-black.

St. Patrick's Parade

Welcome a Bit Too Warm For Kennedy in Boston

BOSTON (AP) - A solemn, six-year-old girl clutched a sign saying, "Southie Welcomes Ted Kennedy". She was part of a crowd of over 100,000 people in South Boston who made the welcome warm - a bit too warm.

South Boston on St. Patrick's Day has a parade that absorbs most of the community as marchers or spectators, but when U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy showed up Tuesday it became a disorganized mob scene.

Youngsters, many of them teen-age girls, rushed up to shake Kennedy's hand, demand his autograph, hug him. Their elders came out too. One girl rushed at him so fiercely, she fell to the ground; another had her foot run over by a police escort motorcycle.

Near the end of the parade, the pressure became so strong Kennedy's wife, Joan, was knocked to her knees, and appeared dazed when helped up.

Kennedy and his wife finally broke into a run; reached their waiting car and drove away.

Mrs. Kennedy, dressed all in green for St. Patrick's Day, and the senator, in a black suit with a green tie and white shirt, marched the full four miles of the route, with a half dozen aides helping to fend off the more enthusiastic greeters.

It wasn't entirely a pro-Kennedy crowd. The senator occasionally drew some boos from older spectators, and others ignored his passing. One older man in work clothes and a watch cap glowered and said, "You're not gonna get my vote."

But almost everywhere else it was applause, squeals from the young girls, shouts of 'Hi Ted', or 'Yay Ted'. Occasionally, a woman would rush over and offer a drink, which he declined.

Brockton to Open New High School, Many Teaching Positions Available

Dr. Frank L. Saba, one-time Holy Cross star (1939-41) has begun a recruiting program to secure approximately 400 teachers for the Brockton school system where a $16.9 million high school - largest in the East - will open in September for 5100 students. This former gridiron hero will be on campus March 19.

At least 135 additional teachers will join the 900 men and women now teaching in Brockton and about 200 will be needed to replace annual retirements and resignations.

Dr. Saba will meet with teacher aspirants at UMass and also plans evening sessions to talk with any teacher in the area wanting more information about the new educational program and facilities in Brockton.

The Brockton School Committee recently approved a $7300 teacher salary minimum, with significant pay increases for those who continue graduate study. A doctor's degree holder with 11 years in the Brockton system can attain a salary of $13,800.

The new high school, which includes nine buildings, has academic buildings for science and commercial, fine and applied arts, and physical education, an administrative wing and service area. It also has a 1600 capacity auditorium, closed circuit television and a planetarium. There are data processing machines for the business education center, science laboratories and a library at each of the four academic buildings. There are 196 teaching stations and 11 gymnasiums.

According to Saba, the two major criteria for teachers in the Brockton system are a willingness to enter a teaching plan that is flexible and geared to experiment with new educational methods and a basic educational background that is strong enough to make them capable of attempting new programs.

We do not want to endanger basic education while finding out how new methods can be applied to a variety of students who learn in a variety of ways and whose special interests deserve developing, he said.

Brockton is located about 20 miles via expressways from Boston. The city's population is approaching 100,000.

Historian of IWW To Appear On Campus Today and Thurs

Fred Thompson, the official historian to the Industrial Workers of the World and a fifty year veteran of the class war, will be on campus Wednesday and Thursday, March 18 and 19 to speak with members of the University community. The author of THE I.W.W.: ITS FIRST FIFTY YEARS, he has recently completed a position paper "WORLD LABOR NEEDS A UNION."

From his half century of association with radical causes Thompson brings the perspective of experience in the labor movement and the revolution often lacking in New Left advocates. This experience reinforces the basic realization that the Working Class must be organized as a class along democratic lines.

Thompson will meet with UMass Fellow Workers and friends of the I.W.W. in the Hampshire Room of the Student Union at 6:30 p.m. on Wednesday. He is anxious to speak of labor and history classes, as well as other interested parties. He can best be contacted through David Aronow, via the R.S.O. office.

Come in and see a brand new Porsche. With its engine in the middle.

A sports car built just for racing doesn't need a back seat. So its engine can be mounted in front of the rear axle, near the middle of the car.

That distributes its weight more equally, so it holds the road better and corners better than ordinary cars.

We think it's time you shared those advantages, so we're selling a couple of mid-engine cars you can drive on the street.

The 4-cylinder 914 model costs $3595.00* It has an electronically fuel-injected engine, goes 110 mph and does 0-60 in 13 seconds.

The 6-cylinder 914/6 model costs $5999.00* goes 125 mph and does 0-60 in 9.9 seconds.

Both come with a built-in roll bar, removable fiberglass roof, 5-speed stick or optional 4-speed Sportomatic, two trunks, and the kind of craftsmanship expected from Porsche.

So if you're thinking about a true, two-seat sports car, think about this: When you don't get a back seat, you should at least get an engine in its place.

Go to Monday, Do Not Pass Go, Do Not Collect Thursday

The University's crack scheduling office, in cooperation with the Wizard of Oz, has announced that tomorrow is cancelled and will be replaced by Monday.

Reason that, what with the barrage of Monday holidays this semester and the steady flow of Thursdays all year long, one less Thursday would never be missed, and an additional Monday conveniently snuck into the middle of the week would be an improvement over the traditional UMass week, UMass has decided to have two Mondays this week.

The editor of Yahoo has refused to comment on this rescheduling, saying only "oh." And Metawampe, the University's answer to Sidney Omarr, has commented, "If you can't be happy with two Mondays in one week then you shouldn't be allowed to have a Friday afternoon."

No University spokesmen have been contacted for an official statement, however the MDC sports staff said it would work tonight anyway.

US Considers Troop Decrease In W. Europe

WASHINGTON (AP) - Secretary of State William P. Rogers pledged Tuesday to give serious consideration to reducing U.S. troop strength in Western Europe next year.

"I think probably we are carrying more than our share of the burden. And in light of that we will give serious consideration to some reduction in the middle of 1971," Rogers said.

He was interviewed on the NBC Today Show.

U.S. officials stressed that Rogers did not disclose anything new but simply restated what has been said on several occasions. The officials would not deny, however, that Rogers appeared to have indicated more strongly than ever before the possibility of a cutback in U.S. troops in Europe.

It is not customary in administration circles to argue with the Secretary of State, and officials accordingly avoided public comment on what Rogers said.

Some officials, however, acknowledged privately that Rogers' words raised the obvious question: Why should the Soviet Union even consider a mutual reduction of forces in Europe if they now have good reason to believe that the United States will reduce its forces anyway?

The Atlantic alliance last December suggested negotiations with the Communist block on "mutual and balanced" troop reductions in Europe. Thus far Moscow's answer has been total silence.

Undersecretary of State Elliot L. Richardson in a Jan. 20 speech described as the Nixon administration's definitive policy statement on Europe said, "We hope the Warsaw Pack nations will respond. Realism, however, suggests that they will be less likely to respond if a unilateral reduction of U.S. forces appears in the offing anyway."

Richardson also cautioned that any "sudden or major withdrawal of American forces would have a distinctly disstabilizing effect on the European scene."

And the Season (Or Story) Goes On . . .

In another total team effort, the Redmen, led by Erving, Ellerbrook, who had his finest scoring night when it was really needed, Mike Pagliara, and Chapman, kept the pressure on all the way and pulled ahead with just under six minutes left. They held on the rest of the way for a sweep of their crucial three contests and a solid claim to the top NE ranking.

From then on in, the other games had to be anti-climatic. Fans and players alike began to think about possible post-season action but there were still tough battles to be fought in the regular season.

The first of these was Springfield. Coming into the Cage with Denis Clark, one of the nation's best small college guards, the Chiefs put a big scare into the Redmen before succumbing, 82-76. Ellerbrook and Erving combined for 46 points while Ken Mathias played a great defensive and rebounding game to offset the 37-point performance of Clark.

With four games left, UMass, winners of six in a row, set their sights on the school record for victories and a NIT berth. Both objectives required that the Redmen win all of their remaining contests.

The first of these was against Maine. Although it hardly seemed worth the trip, UMass downed the Black Bears despite playing poorly 84-66. The Redmen displayed their depth in this one as four players hit for double figures. Led by Erving with 22, Ellerbrook had 21, Gallagher 13 and Mathias 12. It was this depth that had paid off for the Redmen all season.

The biggest of the remaining contests was the next one, against St. Anselm's. The Hawks, one of the best college division teams in the area, were poised for an upset, and in the setting of their gym, which is best described as a pit, anything could happen. But by this point the Redmen had gained the maturity they lacked earlier in the season, and they could handle anything St. Anselm's and Dave Struma could offer.

UMass proved this quite conclusively as it blew the Hawks off the court in the second half and romped to a 94-63 victory. As Coach Jack Leaman stated after the game, "Not even Boston can make us No. 2".

In the last home game of the year, the Redmen once again soundly defeated Maine, 103-71. The highlight of this one was the fact that it was the last appearance at the Cage for the team's four seniors. Ellerbrook, Gallagher, Samuelson and Chapman all received warm thanks from the 4200 fans who packed the Cage.

Only one game remained between UMass and its two goals, (the school win record and a NIT bid). The opponent was UNH. Erving came through with 37 points and 25 bounds while Pagliara and Betancourt shined in the backcourt to end a great season on a great note, a 92-75 win.

But at this point, few knew if the season was really over or not. Rumors abounded about UMass' NIT chances but no one was really sure. Finally, five days after UMass had finished its season, the long awaited word came from New York and the Redmen, officially NE's No. 1 team, were going to the NIT.

What happened after that is common knowledge. Only a hermit could have avoided hearing about the inspirational showing that both the team and the fans made in New York.

Yes, the season's over now. But there's certainly a lot to look back on. And it makes one wish that the season would start again tomorrow.

REDMAN RANTINGS - Julius Erving, who has been honored so many times already, continues to reap the rewards of his great talent. UPI named the UMass soph to its All New England team and the ECAC named him Sophomore of the Year...

KANSAS CITY (AP) - The NAIA Basketball Coaches Association announced it has voted to allow dunking in games played by member colleges and universities for the 1970-71 season.

Violations involving grabbing the basket rim in the act of dunking will be strictly enforced.

Dunking occurs when a player reaches above the basket to plunk the ball in. It previously had been banned.

UMass Football Signs Up Nicolau as Assistant

UMass director of athletics Warren P. McGuirk today announced the appointment of Anthero "Nick" Nicolau as an assistant football coach.

Nicolau, the head football coach at the University of Bridgeport for the past five years, will begin his duties immediately. Head Coach Vic Fusia has indicated that Nicolau's primary responsibilities on the Redman staff will concern the offensive backfield. Fusia said, "Nick has proven himself to be an excellent football coach, and we are most fortunate to have such an outstanding individual join our coaching staff."

A graduate of Southern Connecticut State College where he was an outstanding halfback for three years, Nicolau holds a Master's degree from the University of Indiana and a Doctoral degree in physical education from Springfield College.

In addition to his tenure at Bridgeport, Nicolau has also coached football at Springfield College, Southern Connecticut State College as well as New Bedford and Wareham (Mass.) High Schools.

Bouncing Back Over Basketball (Part One) . . .

Unforgettable Season Reaps Thrills And Hope

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Staff Reporter

After over four months of exhilaration and sometimes depression, the 1969-70 Redman basketball season is now history. The thrills and excitement which it brought to the U-Mass campus will not soon be forgotten nor will the spirit and hope which sprang forth in the midst of defeat to lead the Redmen to their greatest season ever.

It was a year which saw the Redmen rise from a mediocre 5-5 record to a final mark of 18-6, top ranking in New England, and a bid to the NIT. It was also a year in which Julius Erving emerged as one of the country's most talented hoopsters. But Erving would be the first to admit that he alone was not responsible for the success of the UMass team.

For it was exactly that, "the UMass team" which achieved what it did. A mixture of experienced veterans and talented but unproven newcomers who jelled into the finest quintet in the area seems the best way to describe the squad.

But 1969-70 was not a season filled with success only. There were failures too which, though more than outweighed by victory, still caused points of sadness amidst the total picture of joy.

The year started out on a high note as UMass upset a highly rated Providence squad, 90-85, before 4200 delirious fans at the Cage. This game proved to be a foreshadowing of things to come. Not only did Erving serve notice of his approaching stardom (27 points, 28 rebounds, a school record) but Ray Ellerbrook (25 points), Dennis Chapman (13 points) and John Betancourt (10) showed that the team had great balance, and the mixture of experience and talent could pay huge dividends for UMass basketball.

The next contest for the Redmen was a Yankee Conference game at home against Vermont and once again the Cage was packed by over 4000 fans. This time UMass won with methodical ease, simply wearing down the smaller and less talented Catamounts for a 90-73 victory. High scorer for UMass was Erving with 25 points, he had 15 rebounds.

But it was at this point that the Redmen victory train was derailed for a while. Led by John Fultz and Claude English, the Rhode Island Rams slipped past UMass in overtime, 77-73. The loss was especially disappointing for a couple of reasons.

First of all, the Redmen had the game all but sewed up in the last minute of play, until their own mistakes cost them the game. Possibly inexperience had a lot to do with it. Another discouraging point was that the loss dropped the Redmen behind in the race for the YC crown and meant that UMass had to beat URI at Kingston, always a tough chore.

The hoopsters got back on the winning track, however, in their next contest as they used the fast break very effectively in the second half to break open a close game and down UNH, 76-56. Erving, having one of his best nights of the season, had 33 points and 26 caroms while the overall play of Chapman aided greatly in the victory.

But after this easy win, the Redmen faced what they considered at the time, a "must" game against UConn. With URI already a game up on the Redmen, another YC loss, especially on their home court, probably would eliminate UMass from the race. But things didn't turn out that way.

UMass, however, did lose the game. The depressing part was not only that it seemed to all but end UMass' hopes for a second straight YanCon crown, but it appeared that the Redmen gave up when they fell behind in the late going.

Things looked bad as UMass prepped for its first road game of the season against AIC. The Redmen were two games behind in the Yankee Conference and they had only a 3-2 mark to show for their first five games despite the fact that all were home games.

And things got worse before they got better. AIC, ranked highly among the nation's small colleges, took a one-point decision from the Redmen. It was a contest that many thought UMass should have won, but everything seemed to be going against the Redmen at this point.

During the semester break, U-Mass started to come back. It won the dull Gem City Bowl defeating Catholic U. and Gannon College. The Gannon victory may have been very important in that the Redmen were able to hold off the Golden Knights' second half surge, something which UMass had been unable to do earlier in the season.

But then the Redmen faced a major test against highly-ranked Penn. UMass showed that it was coming back as it fought the Quakers all the way and was leading with six minutes left. But Penn's superior height and deft passing paid off for a 75-65 victory. UMass, however, served notice that it was to be a team to be contended with for the rest of the year.

Things had not as yet completely swung in the Redmen's favor. In their next game against Fordham, the hoopsters lost another one pointer in the last minute of play, 62-61. Despite Erving's 37 points and 20 rebounds, UMass could only shoot 37% from the floor and 57% from the charity stripe.

UMass then started to jell. Ellerbrook, who was having his troubles in the first half of the year, started to show the form that made him AllYanCon in his junior year, and the team began to move.

Against Iona, the hot second half shooting of both Ellerbrook and Erving propelled the Redmen to an 86-82 decision. But the performances of the whole team, especially Dick Samuelson and Chapman, were important in the victory which put the Redmen over the .500 mark.

The next game of the season might have been the most important for the Redmen. In it they thoroughly trounced the BU Terriers, 103-68, with an awesome display of fast break basketball. Building up an incredible 61-28 halftime bulge, the Redmen, led by Erving's 34 points and 27 rebounds (29 and 18 in the first half) and Ellerbrook's 25 points, proved once and for all that they were as good as anybody in New England.

But once they had proven it to themselves, UMass still had to prove it to the rest of New England. It began that task immediately as it faced Northeastern.

Forty-two hundred fans jammed the Cage to see if the UMass basketball team, which they had seen humiliate BU, was for real. And the Redmen proved it conclusively as they once again tore apart a Boston team, this time ripping NU, 90-62. Showing that they could play a physical game, the resurging Redmen scored 17 points in the last six minutes of the half to ice the verdict.

UMass then had to travel to Boston to face their third straight Hub team, Boston College. Although in the midst of a poor season, the Eagles are always dangerous and UMass has always had trouble beating them. And in one of the most disappointing contests in recent years, the Redmen blew a thirteen-point first half lead to fall to the Eagles, 83-76. But there were encouraging factors about the loss. For one, Betancourt showed that he was a great clutch ball player, scoring a season high of 25 points.

Also, the Redmen as a team showed that they had matured a great deal since their early season loss to UConn as they kept fighting until the final buzzer. This fact would prove extremely important as the season progressed.

After a tough loss like the one to BC, there is always a tendency to give up. It is the mark of a superior team to keep trying and scrapping no matter what happens. And that's just what the Redmen did.

Upping its record to 9-6, UMass overpowered Rider College for a relatively easy 82-67 win. Stars in the victory along with Erving (30 points and 20 bounds) were Samuelson and Jack Gallagher. Both had become starters for the first time against BU, and their insertion into the lineup had definitely strengthened the Redmen.

UMass, obviously looking ahead to its upcoming tilts with Holy Cross, UConn and URI had little trouble in its next contest, easily disposing of UVM at Burlington, 93-59. Ellerbrook, after mediocre performances against both BC and Rider, returned to top form with a 22-point effort in this one. Erving played his usual game, collecting 25 points and 18 rebounds.

The big test, however, was yet to come. In rapid succession, the Redmen had to face Holy Cross, number one in NE at the time, UConn and URI, co-leaders of the Yankee Conference. If the Redmen hoped to become top-ranked in NE, as many thought they deserved, they knew they would have to win all three games. To most this seemed like (pardon the term) an impossible dream. To others who knew the quality of this UMass team, it was simply a matter of the Redmen producing all they were capable of at the right time. And as we all already know, they did just that.

In what must be described as the greatest Cage win in recent years, the rampaging Redmen proved not only to Holy Cross but to a large TV audience as well, that they were the best. Before a capacity crowd which cheered every move UMass made, the home team proved beyond a doubt that it was a great unit.

Erving won the individual battle with HC's Bob Kissane for the label of best in New England. Credit for this feat also belongs to Gallagher who held the Crusader star to only six points in the crucial first half. Betancourt played another clutch game, hitting for 19 points and Ellerbrook had 12 as everyone came through.

But the battle was far from over. A loss to either UConn or URI would have erased everything that had been gained against Holy Cross along with eliminating the Redmen from the YC race. And to make it even tougher, both contests were on the opponent's courts, both places where UMass has had a history of tough losses.

This, however, was no ordinary year. And this was no ordinary team.

Once again the Redmen put it all together when they needed to. One effort produced a tremendous 71-65 victory over UConn. Erving was outstanding as usual with 20 points and 23 caroms, and Gallagher came up with probably his best all-around effort as he scored 15 points, pulled down 11 rebounds and played his usual strong defensive game, against Ron Krubala and Robert Taylor.

With two down and one to go, the Redmen were beginning to raise some eye brows in NE basketball circles. All attention was focused on Kingston as the Redmen set themselves for another "must" game. URI, also, led the YC with a 6-1 mark and therefore the Redmen would have been eliminated from the race with a loss.

SUNDERLAND SEWAGE PROTEST POSTPONED AFTER MEETING WITH RESIDENTS

Improvement Pledge Halts Sewage Demonstration

Students Set April 17 Deadline

By CLAUDIA HAMBERG
News Editor

The Sunderland Sewage Celebration demonstration planned for yesterday by the Committee for Environmental Quality and friends turned out to be a lesson in the operation of a secondary sewage treatment plant.

All demonstration plans were discarded at a discussion meeting early yesterday afternoon when officials and citizens of Sunderland showed the problem to be near solution. Instead, students showed their concern for environmental pollution by visiting the plant and canvassing the town in support of efforts being made to put the plant into operational condition.

The town of Sunderland has been dumping raw sewage into the Connecticut River for approximately six months while the treatment plant was out of operation. C.E.Q. had planned to form a bucket brigade to bring pollution ot the town hall showing just what the Connecticut River contains. It was hoped that this display would arouse a public outcry and lead to prompt solution of the problem.

A rally prior to the planned demonstration brought to light many facts which led to the change in plans.

Eric Walgren, chairman of the Water Committee of C.E.Q. presented an afternoon plan of action to the approximately 75 persons gathered in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union. The original plan called for visitation to the sewage plant, observation of raw sewage running into the river, dumping the sewage back into a sewer in front of the town hall and sweeping up its remains as a symbolic action, and canvassing the town to publicize Sunderland's pollution.

A Sunderland voter then took the floor saying he wished the gathering to "have the facts." He explained that until town elections one month ago, only one of the three members of the Board of selectmen had supported pollution control. In the latest elections, a second Selectman with anti-pollution feelings was elected. This majority of the Board immediately after the elections approached the State Division of Water Pollution Control for aid in correcting the sewage plant's problems.

Mr. William Doubleday, Regional Engineer with the Pollution Control Division, explained that the Sunderland sewage plant had not been adequately maintained since its opening 10 years ago and was finally shut down. Until two years ago, the law was very weak and no town was prosecuted for polluting. Section 49 of the Clean Waters Act passed two years ago was used for the first time against a town - Sunderland. Facing court action, the voters of Sunderland elected a Selectman who would fight the pollution problem.

Doubleday explained that many problems were found when the plant was examined - pipes needed to be replaced, and parts and labor were necessary to put the plant back into operation. He stated that the plant should be operating "within the week" and stressed that outside agitation now could only upset the progress made since the elections.

Amid questioning and confusion, several plans of action were presented and debated at this point by the concerned students.

Albin Koblinski, acting chairman of the Board of Selectmen, explained that the town of Sunderland was very aware of the problem. At a special November town meeting $15,000 was voted to repair the sewage facility. A full-time operator has been hired and repair operations are nearly completed.

He stated his belief that any demonstration would bring police and press interference and stated the town is "sick and tired of being embarrassed." He asked that all action be postponed for three weeks, and if the sewage plant is not then in operation, it was promised that the town and the Selectmen would help in protesting Sunderland's pollution of the river.

After discussion and several votes, it was decided to set a deadline of April 7, 1970 for the town to correct its sewage situation, before any protest, and that the afternoon would be spent in a tour of the sewage plant and canvassing the town to ask support for the corrective action.

Several carloads of students journeyed to the secondary sewage treatment plant on the Sunderland bank of the Connecticut River where Doubleday and plant operator Jack Hawkins explained the functioning of the plant and current repairs on the facility. Hawkins stated his hope that it would be in operation within 4 - 5 days.

Canvassing of the town followed, with the group of students approaching townspeople eliciting support in fighting the sewerage problem.

CEQ Panel to Discuss Conn. River Diversion

The Coalition for Environmental Quality (CEQ) of UMass is involving itself with the proposal of the U. S. Corps of Engineers and the Metropolitan District Commission to divert water from the Connecticut River to the Quabbin Reservoir.

CEQ, which has noted that the ecologists-environmentalists side has not been given a hearing, has scheduled the Distinguished Ecologists Panel Discussion on the topic entitled, "The Environmental Peril in the Connecticut River Diversion", in Bowker Auditorium, tonight at 8 p.m.

The galaxy of seven ecologists on the panel includes teachers and writers who have distinguished themselves in pleading for a quality environment in schools of higher learning in the Connecticut River Basin.

The panel moderator is Dr. Peter Steve, Ecologist of Greenfield Community College. The panelists include Dr. John W. Brainerd, Ecologist and writer of Springfield College; Dr. Lincoln P. Brower, Ecologist and writer of Amherst College; Dr. Ward S. Motts, Environmental Geologist, and Dr. Stuart Ludlam, Ecologist, UMass, Dr. John P. Shontz, Ecologist of Mt. Holyoke College; Dr. William A. Niering, Ecologist and writer of Connecticut College, New London; and Prof. J. Kenneth Taylor, Ecologist of Westfield State College.

The large variety of ecological specializations represented by the panel has been devised to permit wider audience participation and questioning.

CEQ leaders emphasized that the ecological approach by this panel discussion will focus attention on the need for new criteria which should be applied to future highway building and planning and to water resource projects which have a substantial impact on the environment.

Invitations and notices have been sent out to state and municipal officials, schools and conservation organizations in the river basin. This panel discussion is open to the public without charge.

CEQ In Statement Sets Record Straight

The Coalition for Environmental Quality wishes to set the record straight on its program opposing the pollution of the Connecticut River by the Town of Sunderland.

The press falsely stated that CEQ planned to dump raw sewerage on the steps of town hall and leave it there. The original plan was to dump raw sewerage from the river into a sewer in front of town hall. This action would demonstrate that Sunderland's sewers dump directly into the river.

CEQ negotiated with an interested town selectman to postpone the sewerage dumping action on condition that the sewerage plant be operating by a deadline of April 7.

The selectman proclaimed that CEQ could dump the sewerage "on my front porch" is the plant is not operating.

The actual demonstration was peaceful and educational in nature. It included a tour of the inoperative plant. About 40 students then canvassed the town door-to-door with fact sheets. Townspeople were encouraged to support two selectmen supporting the clean-up.

CEQ plans to follow other developments on the river as well as Sunderland's progress.

Senate Calls for Report On Rent Hike Proposal

By JOHN O. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

The Senate last night scheduled a special meeting in the Ballroom for the Monday after vacation to receive from the Treasurer's office the final rent proposal, incorporating the work of the President's Advisory Committee on Rents and Fees.

Concerning the April Vietnam Moratorium, targeted by the peace movement as the opening of the Spring Antiwar offensive, the Senate, calling the question after perfunctory debate, and after hearing Senator David Veale note the results of the recent Senate-sponsored referendum overwhelmingly favoring immediate withdrawal, voted to call a student strike on April 15. The Public Relations and Social Action Committees of the Senate, operating under the aegis of the University Mobilization Committee will plan and coordinate the day's activities.

At the outset of the meeting, the Senate heard Planning Officer Jack Littlefield and Mr. Gary Greebody, representing the consulting firm of Sasaki, Dawson and Demay unveil plans for a housing survey of a representative ten per cent sample of the student body (to be administered by the Counseling Office). The survey will determine in detail student sentiment on current housing facilities, and desires concerning the nature of future University-supported housing, not necessarily of the dormitory kind.

Stressed was the need for responses from survey participants, if the University is to satisfy student desires. While there is no guarantee that the results of the survey will become University housing policy, Mr. Littlefield affirmed the likelihood of University compliance with the results. Mr. Littlefield further noted the urgency of the survey, revealing that the residence hall system by the Fall of 1971 will again be filled to capacity.

The Senate unanimously endorsed efforts by concerned faculty and students to suspend normal University activities on April 10 and 11 in order to devote those days to the examination of issues confronting the University, and the formulation of solutions. Academic Affairs Chairman Senator Mark Smith asserted that "This institution is not meeting our needs. This University is no longer channeling its efforts toward undergraduate education. The Senate subsequently approved category changes in the SWAP budget to allow that organization to provide financial support for the effort.

After defeating an objection to its consideration by Senator Madden, the Senate defeated 27-25-3 on a roll call vote a motion by Senator Waters to send a letter of apology to Hubert Humphrey for the recent incident. Senator Waters, speaking for the bill, affirmed that "This amounts to about two steps above nothing. It will send a piece of paper to Hubert telling him we're sorry." The Senate received a unanimously unfavorable report from the Social Action Committee, Chairman Stephen Walt noting that, after twice hearing the tape of the event, the committee concluded that Mr. Humphrey baited the demonstrators by goading them with, "You didn't do so well. Want to try it again?" after he had successfully deflated the first outburst.

Senator Karen MacNutt averred that the "issue is one of freedom of speech. He was prevented from giving his speech." She called upon the Senate to "reaffirm (its) belief in an intellectual community in which there is a free exchange of ideas." The Senate defeated a motion to postpone indefinitely (kill), and an amendment by Vice President Elters and Senator Smith to apologize to the student body for bringing Mr. Humphrey to campus.

The vice-president contended that "Humphrey baited the crowd, and left of his own free will. He tried to be a martyr, and came out a martyr to the majority. He attempted to make happen exactly what happened." Social Action Chairman Walt intends to pursue the matter further, with a detailed report to the Senate forthcoming.

The Senate again took up the black radio station, the Block, appropriating $1,900 for the organization, reduced from an original request of $3,000 because WFCR, over whose frequency the group will broadcast, has agreed to supply technical assistance.

The Senate also approved the Northeast Area Congress Constitution, and voted to ask Dean Field to contribute $750 from Cultural Enrichment to help fund an appearance by Chicago eight lawyer Weinglass and Conspirator Rennir Davis, sponsored at this point by the Orchard Hill Area Government, the Central Area Council, and Greenough House. Mr. William Abbott, co-sponsor of the bill, stated that the appearance was designed to "protest political repression through the courts, and in the streets."

In budgetary action, the Senate heard the first reading of Afro-Am, the Drum, WMUA, and Free University.

Senate Vote Supports Student War Strike

Last night the Student Senate overwhelmingly passed a bill calling a student strike for the April 15 Vietnam War Moratorium. The bill also included Senate support for the building of a University Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam to implement its strike call. The University Mobilization Committee is to include both faculty and students interested in organizing the Anti-War Movement on Campus.

Tuesday night, March 31, the University Mobilization Committee will hold its first meeting to plan the activities of the April 15 Strike. Tentative plans include a Peace Commencement in the UMass Stadium followed by a mass march into town for a rally on the Amherts Common. Suggested speakers for the April 15 Strike included Leonard Weinglass and William Kunstler who were involved in the Chicago Conspiracy Trial.

April 15 has been designated the major day of war protest for Spring 1970 by all three national Anti-War groups: The Moratorium Committee The New Mobilization Committee, and the Student Mobilization Committee. Student Strikes, which were called for by the Student Mobe, will take place at all major U. S. colleges and universities.

The Student Senate in calling for a student Strike sets a precedent on the UMass campus for concrete action towards ending the war in Southeast Asia. The major goal of the Student Senate supported University Mobilization Committee is to bring all the troops home now.

The importance of the April anti-war action is underscored by the escalation of the War in Vietnam into Laos. A smaller turn out in this Spring's anti-war offensive will be considered by the Nixon administration a set back for the peace movement in this country and the success of his policy to lull the American people into a "Silent Majority."

The University Mobe Committee seeks to have a non-violent, legal demonstration on April 15 around the theme "Bring All the Troops Home Now!" It's first meeting will be on March 31 in the evening. The place is to be announced. Everyone interested in building this April 15 Strike and demonstration is urged to come. For further information call 545-2832.

Students Burn Draft Cards

In conjunction with National Anti-Draft day, the Draft Action Committee of Amherst-Northampton has planned a day long protest against the Selective Service System in front of the Northampton Draft Board. The demonstrators will be gin picketing at 11 a.m. with a rally being planned at Pulaski Park in Northampton.

At 1 p.m., draft resisters will burn their draft cards and at the 4 p.m. rally will explain their motivation in burning their cards.

In their statement, the Draft Action Committee stressed that the demonstration will be non-violent and that it includes community people, high school and college students.

The rally, which is part of a nation-wide day of protest against the Selective Service System, is to protest according to the group, "conscription which not only makes wars like Vietnam possible, but basically is a system of slavery. Forcing its young men to choose between killing their fellow human beings and five years in prison is not the mark of a free society. The time has come to say "No" to death and "Yes" to life."

The Northampton Draft Board is located at 135 Main Street at the corner of Center St., where the main focus of the day's picketing will occur.

Central Dorm Agreement Ends Conference Controversy

The Orchard Hill Conference housing controversy came to an end yesterday as Chancellor Oswald Tippo announced that Hills North, Hills South and Van Meter South have agreed to allow the conferencees to use their dorms over vacation.

The agreement came after a meeting between Tippo, Dean of Student William F. Field, Associate Dean of Students Daniel Fitzpatrick and representatives from the three Central Area dorms.

After the meeting Tippo commented, "The University appreciates the cooperative action of the residents of these dorms in helping resolve the situation."

The controversy over the housing of next week's Education Conference guests developed over the weekend when a group of irate Orchard Hill residents protested the Administration's intention to use their dorms as conference housing.

At that time the Administration argued that University policy maintains that the school can rent out student rooms over vacation, providing advance notice is provided. The administration added, however, that with the completion of the Campus Center set for this Spring, no future conference guests would have to be housed in student dorms.

Butterfield Points for Co-ed '70

by RICHARD HANSON
Staff Reporter

The residents of Butterfield House announced their "firm intention" to become a "CO-ED community" by September, 1970.

The final decision as to whether Butterfield goes CO-ED still remains in the hands of the Trustees. But, in the very near future females who wish to participate in a CO-ED dorm will be able to become involved.

Approximately fifty openings for women will be available. All females under twenty-one must, according to Trustee precedent, have parental consent.

The type of CO-ED Butterfield has decided to create will place women on the second and third floors on a fill in the room basis. There will be separate bathrooms for each sex on each of the floors. (Butterfield has two Heads per floor.) Hopefully, this room to room approach wil l be more realistic than the separation of male and female by floors.

Butterfield is also in the middle of an attempt to bring courses into the dorm and eventually run its own food service. The idea overriding the entire Butterfield endeavor, is that a dormitory can become a worthwhile place to live.

Women who are interested should confer with their parents over the Spring vacation. Meetings for people interested in moving to Butterfield next year will probably be held starting right after vacation. For more immediate information contact Butterfield.

The Nation and The World

Passengers, Crew React to Plane Shooting Incident

BOSTON (AP) - Copilot James E. Hartley was shot fatally, but managed to wound his assailant in a wild struggle in the cockpit of a mile-high Eastern Airlines plane, the wounded pilot was quoted as saying Wednesday.

The shooting took place Tuesday night as the plane approached Boston on a shuttle flight from Newark, N.J. with a crew of five and 66 passengers aboard.

Wounded in both arms, Capt. Robert Wilbur Jr., of Fairlawn, N.J. managed nevertheless to bring the plane to a safe landing at Logan International Airport.

The shooting took place as the plane made its final turn over Franklin, Mass., 30 miles from Boston, for the approach to land.

John J. DiVivo, 27, a bearded former short order cook from West New York, N.J., is the wounded passenger, charged with murder in the slaying of Hartley.

A statement issued by the airline said: "Capt Wilbur said that when he banked the aircraft for the turn, DiVivo appeared surprised and began firing his weapon."

The airline quoted Capt. Wilbur as telling State Police Sgt. Edward Gillis as saying he did not remember whether he or Hartley was shot first.

Stewardess Sandy Saltzer entered the cockpit of the mile-high DC-9 after the fatal shooting of her copilot and saw the wounded pilot hit the alleged assailant on the head to keep him subdued while at the same time landing the giant jet with 66 passengers aboard.

Miss Saltzer, 26, of Shortsville, N.Y., six-months in the air with Eastern Airlines, told a news conference in a barely audible voice of her part in the terror-filled flight.

She said she went to the cockpit after she heard shooting and saw Wilbur strike DiVivo on the head "with some object which was light and didn't seem very effective."

"Capt. Wilbur said he was all right when I asked him if he needed help," she said, "and then we started to descend very fast."

"Is there anyone flying this plane?;; yelled several passengers as the big DC 9 jetliner sharply dipped its wing as it approached Logan Airport.

"Yes, there is," replied a young man seated near the cockpit door and the passengers remained calm.

Some of them had seen the cockpit door burst open and they knew the pilot had been hurt. Most of them didn't know that shots fired from the same gun that wounded the pilot had killed the copilot and seriously wounded a passenger who had demanded that the plane be flown "east."

John Austin, dean of faculty at Pine Manor Junior College in Brookline was aboard the flight.

"I was reading when I heard the door of the cabin slam shut. I looked up and saw a stewardess on the intercom," he said.

"I knew we'd been over the city for five or 10 minutes and I knew something was wrong."

"The plane was quite silent. A lot of people were aware something was wrong," Austin said.

"Then I heard 'pop, pop, pop' about three or four shots fairly close together," he said. "The cabin door burst open. I could see the pilot was hit. There was blood on the whole right side of his shirt in back."

"I could see the copilot's legs sticking out of the door of the cabin."

"We've seen it all before, vicariously. We've been through it all before."

Stanley Seletsky of Woburn was seated about two thirds of the way back in the plane, over the wing.

"When the no smoking sign came on, I expected the landing gear to come down with a little bit of noise," Seletsky said. "But this time it came down with such a racket that I felt something was wrong."

Students to Judge Clean Air Car Race

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - An all-student committee has been formed at Massachusetts Institute of Technology to plan and state the 1070 intercollegiate Clean Air Car Race, MIT announced Wednesday.

Contestants will vie against each other over a transcontinental course from Cambridge, Mass., to Pasadena, Calif., in a race beginning Aug. 24, testing vehicle performance, endurance and pollution emission.

"The committee members will not compete in the race but will be charged with the responsibilities of raising money, supervising the judging and administering the rules," said Robert G. McGregor, 22, an MIT graduate student in mechanical engineering from Alexandria, Va.

"With an organization committee to worry about such matter as the route and recharging stations for the electric vehicles, the race entrants will be free to concentrate on their propulsion systems and decreasing the pollution emission levels," McGregor said.

Bomb Threats Plague Boston, Providence

BOSTON (AP) - Buildings in Boston and Providence, R.I., were evacuated Wednesday after telephone callers warned of bomb plants.

In Boston, the federal courts and the U.S. mails ground to a halt for more than three hours when a bomb threat forced the evacuation of the 20-story federal building.

The building houses the city's main post office and federal court rooms. More than 1,000 persons were inside.

The threat was received at the office of John W. McCormack, speaker of the U.S. house. Mc Cormack was in Washington.

Later in the day, a telephone caller reported a bomb in the South Postal Annex, adjoining the South Station.

Hundreds of postal workers were ordered out of the building by firemen who made a search. Post Office trucks were driven away from leading docks as a precaution.

Boston's parcel post is handled through the annex.

The Federal Building in Providence was evacuated after a male caller told the Marine Corps recruiting office that a bomb was planted there.

A spokesman for the Marine Corps said the caller told him, "We want to keep the casualty list at a minimum, so evacuate the building, jerk."

Occupants of the Providence building were allowed to return after a brief stay outside.

Mass. House Rejects Move To Kill War Legality Bill

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts House overwhelmingly rejected a move Wednesday to reconsider its approval of the Vietnam war - legality bill, and sent the measure to the Senate.

The proposal for reconsideration failed on a 128-90 rollcall vote after more than an hour of debate -- much of it similar to the two previous sessions.

The earliest the Senate was expected to debate the measure, however, is next Monday since its Thursday sessions are chiefly informal.

The proposal would make it illegal for a Massachusetts resident to serve in an overseas war zone unless there has been a congressional declaration of war.

It also would require the state attorney general to take court action on behalf of those who object to service under its terms.

The House added an amendment last Monday that would keep the attorney general from filing a second suit until the first is decided, and would require the junking of the law if any part is ruled unconstitutional.

The debate Wednesday was virtually all by opponents of the bill who called it subversive and unenforceable legislation.

Rep. Mary B. Newman, R-Cambridge, urged reconsideration and killing of the bill. "I feel this bill will only deceive our boys in the service and their parents," she said.

Striking Postal Workers Ordered Back to Work

NEW YORK (AP) - A federal judge ordered striking government letter carriers back to work Wednesday, after their illegal walkout halted all mail deliveries in metropolitan New York, the business and financial capital of the world.

Gus Johnson, president of Branch 36, AFL-CIO National Association of Letter Carriers in Manhattan and the Bronx, publicly appealed to his members to go back to work.

But Jack Levanthal, president of the union's 3,900 member local in Brooklyn, said, "I'm not going to appeal to my members to respect any injunction." He said he would wait to hear from Johnson before deciding on a final course of action.

Other union officials reported a defiant attitude among the rank and file and said the tieup threatened to spread across the nation.

The Manhattan - Bronx and Brooklyn locals started the strike at midnight Tuesday.

"The men I spoke to will defy any injunction - they will stay out until hell freezes over," said Herman Sandbank, the branch executive vice president. "If the strike accelerates at the present rate, in 48 hours there will be no mail service in the United States."

In Washington, Postmaster General Winton M. Blount ordered that the strikers forfeit their pay while they are idle. He declined to speculate on further steps that would be taken if the injunction was defied.

Blount told a news conference that he and President Nixon "are deeply concerned about this situation, since the mail system is the life blood of the economy and millions of Americans rely on it for their very survival."

Holy Cross Committee Seeks Open Campus

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP) - The majority of the Educational Policy Committee at Holy Cross College has voted for an "open, unrestricted campus" in on-campus recruiting policies, the college announced Wednesday.

All recruiting on campus was suspended several weeks ago following a confrontation between General Electric Co. recruiters and students.

UMass Priest Founds Campus Dating Service

A chaplain at the Newman Center runs the most efficient dating bureau on campus, but "It started as a lark," says the Rev. Joseph Quigley.

The dating service began about six years ago when the Newman Center held a dance and "a couple of fellows needed dates." Now if a boy wants a date, he need only speak to Father Quigley who telephones the head of residence at a women's dormitory. Matching physical appearance and similar interests, the head of residence finds an eligible girl.

The alternative, according to Father Quigley, is for a boy to come in with a mugbook and say, "I'd like to meet this girl." In that case, Father acts as matchmaker and phones the girl to whom "the whole thing seems a little bizarre."

Most of the dating bureau's customers are boys. Father Quigley concludes that girls won't admit they can't get a date on their own.

Father Quigley cannot estimate the number of date he has arranged. "We fixed up several for Winter Carnival," he said, "But this year has been horrible. We are terribly understaffed."

Two or three marriages have resulted from successful first dates planned by the bureau. Marriage, however, is not the prime goal. The underlying idea of the dating bureau, according to Father Quigley, is "people meeting people, regardless of religious belief."

With an estimated 8000 Catholics in school, the campus community needs to become a little smaller, a little friendlier. The Newman Center has tried by sponsoring dances, offering a dance course, and establishing the dating bureau.

Father Quigley says that a few years ago, when there was no rabbi on campus, Jewish students came to the center for dating assistance.

"We became ecumenical after a while," he said.

Besides the dating bureau and his other duties at the Newman Center, Father Quigley concerns himself with the World Fathers' Association of which he is president. The association's contention is that "most men do not understand their role as husband and father."

Father Quigley and his co-worker Dr. Rodolph H. Turcotte, a noted psychiatrist, have recently set up a "Workshop on Love." The workshop is run by 30 people trained to help others understand themselves and their roles as mature adults.

According to Father Quigley, this "understanding" of oneself through meeting and conversing with people is one of the main goals of the dating bureau.

"There are a lot of lonely, neglected people on campus," he said. "The dating bureau is a field we should do far more in."

Poverty Committee to Visit South Carolina Next Week

The UMass Committee on Poverty is currently making final preparations for a fact-finding trip to Ridgeville, South Carolina, over the Spring vacation to collect further data regarding the poverty conditions among the Black and Indian communities in Dorchester County, the scene of recent violent attempts by whites to prevent integration of elementary and secondary schools in the Harley-ville-Ridgeville School District.

The Committee members will be investigating the effects on minority employment of the present school system, which is virtually segrated; the denial of welfare checks and food stamps for a large percentage of the county's poor Black and Indian population; and the extent of malnutrition among these poor people.

According to a document which the Committee is distributing nationwide to publicize the poverty crisis in Dorchester County, approximately 8,000 of the 9,000 poor people in the county are non-white. The four-page document, containing numerous photographs, is entitled "Dorchester County, South Carolina: A Struggle For Human Dignity."

Copies may be obtained at the Committee on Poverty office, now located on the fifth floor of George Washington Tower in Southwest.

As on past occasions, members of the Committee will on this trip be transporting food, medicines, blankets, and other vital commodities to be used by the Blacks and Indians who are most in need.

In addition, the Committee representatives will present Mrs. Victoria Delee, the Black community leader in Ridgeville, with $300.00 collected at concerts and poetry readings over the past two weeks. Since November, when Mrs. Delee first visited the U-Mass campus to appeal for help, the Committee on Poverty, the Afro-American Society, the United Christian Foundation, and the Freedom Committee (now defunct) have raised more than $2,000.00 for Dorchester County.

The Committee on Poverty has also been largely responsible for collecting and transporting several tons of commodities to the impoverished area.

The Committee on Poverty invites any concerned members of the campus media or the Student Senate to accompany the research group to South Carolina in order to observe the situation firsthand. Any such interested parties are urged to contact Ken Mosakowski, chairman of the Committee, by noon Friday.

Students Can Make Tax-Free Wages

If you are a student who will be working during your school and summer vacations this year to help earn your tuition, buy a car, etc., here's good news for you: You can receive as much as $1,825 completely TAX-FREE in 1970 - as a result of the massive Tax Reform Law which went on our statute books in the closing days of 1969.

You also can generally avoid having any tax withheld on your earnings from your vacation or other jobs.

You won't even have to file an income tax return for '70 next spring is your '70 income is not over $1,700 (unless you have net earnings of $400 or more from self-employment).

And despite the fact that your earnings this year may substantially exceed $600, your parents still can claim a deduction for you as a dependent - assuming you are under the age of 19, or if 19 or over, if you are a full-time student or are pursuing a full-time on-farm training course (and you meet the other usual tests for a dependent).

The weeks when you are lining up (or you should be organizing) your 1970 summer job are here.

Millions of you will be earning as much money as you can during spring vacation, the June-September period, Christmas and after school too, because you must supplement the funds available for your tuition, room, board, clothes, transportation, other school expenses. This tax news if of vital importance to you in helping you plan and figure out precisely how much you'll have.

To be specific:

- You have your own personal exemption for yourself. This is now up to $625 for 1970.

- You are entitled to a new low-income allowance (similar to the minimum standard deduction). This comes to $1,100 for 1970.

- And if you own stock, you are entitled to receive $100 of dividends tax-free. This is the so-called dividend exclusion.

The total comes to $1,825 for 1970.

What's more, your income over the exempt level will be taxed at the very lowest rates. For instance, as a single taxpayer, your taxable income up to $500 is taxed at a bottom 14 per cent rate; between $500 and $1,000 your taxable income is taxed at 15 per cent. Between $1,000 and $1,500, the rate is 16 per cent, etc.

And on top of that, if you're a single taxpayer (which I assume most of you are), you'll get a tax rate break on all your taxable income over $4,000 starting in 1971.

Here's your tax-free status at a glance.

Even if you have no income tax to pay, you must file a return covering 1970 if your gross income is $1,700 or more, however. For instance, you'll have to file in the spring of 1971 if your 1970 income comes to no more than $1,725 (the sum of your personal exemption of $625 and your low-income allowance).

FROM OUR SIDE

Fac-Sen Dragging Its Feet

The Faculty Senate has deftly dragged its feet over the formulation of a Black Studies Department by endorsing the idea of a department but divorcing its approval of the details in the plan presented.

The Black Studies plan proposed was the same plan approved by the Student Senate, the College of Arts and Sciences, etc. It is a plan completely worthy of adopting, a plan impressive in its comprehensiveness, and impressive in its workability.

We strongly urge the Faculty Senate to stop delaying an overdue addition to the University. We urge that the Faculty Senate endorse the plan offered them by the College of Arts and Sciences.

After over a year of work and committee wrangling, this is not time for one group to needlessly halt progress.

Call for Moratorium

A group of students, faculty and administrators are trying to persuade Chancellor Oswald Tippo to call off classes for two days next month so that all members of the University community can get together and work out specific ways in which the University can be improved academically and socially.

This movement, the April 10-11 Committee, deserves the support of the entire University as it attempts to add positive action to the rhetorical clamor for change of the past several years.

The issues which the committee proposes to discuss during the moratorium are the issues which have spurred most of the viable campus protests in the last two years: the grading system, student rights, residential colleges, politics and the University, teacher evaluation, minority group rights and University goals.

Thexe issues must be discussed by the community as a whole if viable changes are to be affected, and only a moratorium can provide the University as a whole with the opportunity to participate in making these changes.

Chancellor Tippo, if he is sincere in his professed desire to include students and faculty in University decision making, should approve the call for the moratorium immediately.

(Reprinted from The Progressive, March 1970)

William L. Shirer, who chronicled the rise of Nazi Germany and the collapse of the Third Republic in France, recently remarked that the United States "may be the first country to go fascist democratically." The Republican Administration and the democratic Congress have been busy, these first few months of 1970, in lending more than a measure of plausibility to Mr. Shirer's ominous warning.

Exploiting to the extreme the widespread (and understandable) public concern about rising crime rates, playing on the profound aversion of many "middle Americans" to the manifestations of radical dissent, taking the fullest advantage of an apparent national craving for "law and order," political opportunists of both parties have mounted a massive assault on the protections of due process and the provisions of the Bill of Rights. Since the first of the year, Congress -- with the full encouragement and support of the Administration -- has taken several long steps toward the abyss of totalitarianism.

The "crime control" bill passed by the Senate late in January probably contains the most concentrated attack on constitutional principles since the Alien and Sedition Acts. If it is approved by the House and signed into law by the President, it will at one stroke:

Undermine the Fifth Amendment's protection against self-incrimination by instructing the courts, on request of Government prosecutors, to force reluctant witnesses to testify in return for immunity not against prosecution but only against use of the compulsory testimony as evidence. A recalcitrant witness, although convicted of no crime, could be summarily jailed without bail until he agreed to testify.

Authorize Federal grand juries to issue public reports recommending the removal of officials for misconduct or misfeasance, even in the absence of evidence sufficient to justify an indictment.

Reverse a Supreme Court ruling permitting defendants to inspect the transcripts of illegal Government wire-taps from which evidence might have been obtained.

Limit to five years the period during which such illegal evidence would be barred from use in the courts. After a five-year interval, the fruit of any illegal search and seizure would be available for unchallenged use as evidence.

Create a new, vaguely defined category of "dangerous special offenders," including persons who have been convicted once of taking part in a "conspiracy," and subject them to arbitrary sentences of up to thirty years.

When the final vote was tallied, only one man - Democratic Senator Lee Metcalf of Montana - was sufficiently perturbed by constitutional questions to oppose the bill. The vote on passage was seventy-three to one. Where were all the "Liberals"?

The Senate compounded its crime against democracy a few days later by giving unanimous approval to a "drug control" bill containing authorization for police officers to barge into any premises without warning if a judge has been persuaded that such a warning would result in the destruction of evidence. Senator Ervin --battled against a patent violation of due process. His attempt to strike the "no-knock" provision from the bill was rejected by a vote of fifty to thirty-five.

The bill empowers the Secretary of Defense to decide arbitrarily who can be employed by any defense project or facility, regardless of whether classified information is involved. It gives the President sweeping powers to order investigations of persons or organizations, whether or not they are under consideration for access to security material. It makes it possible, as Representative Louis Stokes, Ohio Democrat, pointed out, to bar a worker from defense employment "because he took part in peaceful picketing of a chemical company in protest of its manufacture of napalm."

Like the Senate's crime bill, the House security measure has as its prime purpose the reversal of Supreme Court decisions affirming the rights of individuals confronted by unfair and capricious Governmental procedures. Lawrence Speiser, the Washington director of the American Civil Liberties Union, wrote to members of the House that "it is time that Congress ceased to view Supreme Court decisions protecting constitutional rights of American citizens as the actions of an enemy institution. Upholding the rights of American citizens is something to be applauded, not deplored." But when Representative Bob Eckhardt, Texas-Democrat, attempted to introduce at least a measure of due process into the security bill, scarcely a tenth of the House membership turned out to vote him down, twenty-seven to thirteen, and the vote on final passage was two hundred seventy-four to sixty-five. Where were all the "liberals"?

What is most dismaying in all of this is the apparent acquiescence or intimidation of many who should be leading the resistance. The organized bar has been silent. The Democrats have, for the most part, joined with the Republicans in a stampede toward repression. The liberals, with few axceptions, seem to have decided that this is a time to lie low. Perhaps all are depending - as they have depended in the past - on the Supreme Court to pull their chestnuts out of the fire in a year or two.

But in a year or two, when some of today's repressions may reach the Supreme Court for constitutional adjudication, the high tribunal is likely to be in no mood for focusing on libertarian niceties. This, after all, is the thrust of President Nixon's proclaimed intention to "balance" the Court - to shift its weight away from a preoccupation with constitutional guarantees that get in the way of "law and order."

In one of the decisions Congress is now attempting to circumvent, the Warren Court declared: "For almost two centuries, our country has taken singular pride in its Constitution, and the most cherished of those ideals have found expression in the First Amendment. It would indeed be ironic if, in the name of national defense, we would sanction the subversion of one of those liberties - the freedom of association - which makes the defense of the nation worthwhile."

It would be equally ironic if, in the name of combating crime, we were to commit the ultimate crime of establishing a police state. "Things could be worse. They will soon get worse," Mr. Speiser predicted this in the ACLU's recent biennial report.

(The Editors of The Progressive, March 1970)

To discuss its campaign against the unconstitutional provisions of the Crime Control bill, which has not yet passed the House of Representatives, the Human Rights Committee has scheduled a series of meetings on Monday evenings at 8:00 (25 Main Street, Northampton). Anyone interested in participating is invited to join.

Unholy Covenant

The Arab propaganda on the Middle-East conflict has taken recently a new format. The cries for Holy War and for throwing the Jews into the sea has been long forgotten. The new makeup is a war of National Liberation. This new theme was custom tailored to fit the Western audience and to appeal to its sympathy for a struggle for liberation.

In searching for the real motivations and aims behind the Arab nationalism, a careful consideration should be given to the literature directed to the Arabs themselves rather than the rest of the world.

Such a literature is "The Palestine National Covenant," a charter that was adopted by a congress of all Palestinian organizations at their convention in Cairo. The formula of the charter was revised in July 1968. It is of special interest to compare the latest slogans of the Palestinian Arabs concerning the "secular, binational state in which Jews and Arabs will live in equality and peace" after they will rid Israel of Zionism.

Article #1 of the charter explains that "Palestine is the homeland of the Palestinian Arab people and an integral part of the great Arab Homeland and the people of Palestine part of the Arab nation". In Article #3, the charter states that: "when the liberation of its homeland is completed, it will exercise self determination solely according to its own will and choice". Article #6 proposes that "Jews who were living permanently in Palestine until the beginning of the Zionist invasion will be considered Palestinian".

Thus the whole plot is unfolding. Not quite pluralistic but an exclusively Arab state with a strong identification and possibly integration with other Arab countries The Jews are to become a small dependent minority with no right of self expression of their national character since the "new" Palestine will be, in fact, an Arab country, a "part of the Great Arab Homeland". The Jews who came to Israel after the beginning of the "Zionist invasion" will be deported. This determined date was set to 1917 in supplements to the "Palestine National Covenant".

To face the embarassing question about the Jews' right for self-determination and self-expression Article #20 of this National Covenant explains that the Jews, in fact, are not a nation: "Judaism,------is not a nationality with an independent existence. Likewise, the Jews are not a people with an independent personality------".

It is quite obvious that the Palestinian Arabs' ideology has adopted racist motives and by determining that the Jews are not a nation, they may justify their plans to deny them the right for self determination. It is only ironic that the charter does promise a freedom of religion to its future citizens since all Arab states except Lebanon define themselves as Moslem states in their constitutions. Under Arab rule, the Jewish minority was denied even entrance to shrines such as the site of the Holy Temple in Jerusalem and Rachel's Tomb in Bethleem. It is quite obvious that Arab propaganda is attempting to gain sympatizers through deceit; while they speak of a binational state, they are in fact planning to establish an exclusively Arab state.

Arab aggression therefore could not be interpreted in any way but as a chauvenistic war, nourished on jealousy, territorial, racial and religious antipathies. This kind of nationalism has led to the genocide conducted against the black people of Sudan and the brutal war conducted against the Kurds in Syria and Iraq.

Separate and independent Jewish Arab states which would satisfy the national aspirations of the two peoples is still the only foundation for a solution to the Middle East war.

Together

To the editor:

In reply to Billy Rojas' article in Tuesday's Collegian (The Next Target for Student Dissent): I have no doubt but what many of your predictions will come true. You say a good many things that need to be said about the state of education in colleges in this country. But, at the same time, you have allowed a few distortions to creep into your article that detract from the validity of your argument.

First of all, you say that "The older generation of college dons... are academic fascists, almost to a man." You have muddled the issue. It is their AGE that makes them good or bad teachers? Do you mean to say that an entire generation is lost? If so, then OUR generation is going to be lost, too, when WE get to a certain age. Alas, lousy teachers come in all generations and age groups. Throwing out "Those who earned Ph.D's before Kennedy" will inevitably expel a good many good teachers.

Secondly, you imply that "radical student leaders" are the only people capable of reversing the trend toward "academic fascism." Do you realize that you have as much as set up a "caste" system based on age, political persuasion, and psychological orientation? Talk about cataloguing people as if they were numbers! Talk about elitism! George and Spiro would be PROUD of you, Billy.

It doesn't seem to me, however (in my admittedly limited experience) that "radical student leaders" is any improvement over "academic fascists." Granted, the latter must go, but are the former necessary? Having gotten the power to make decisions, are you SURE the young authoritarians will be any more willing to share their power with the student masses than the old authoritarians? People are people, Mr. Rojas. Dividing them into "sucks" and "radicals" might give someone a nice feeling of superiority (I'M not a suck, so I must be in the "in" group!) but it won't solve the problems that you so vividly describe. Would you care to try again?

To the editor:

In his "Classroom 1971" (Daily Collegian March 17), Billy Rojas uses some shock tactics to wake people up. Unfortunately he probably alienates many before they get to some of the well-founded predictions he makes concerning classroom revolution. However, he never really does put words to the real question at issue, "Are universities agencies for service or certification?" As a service agency it would be tuned to the needs of people. As an instrument of certification, it serves as a screening agency for job placement. Certainly service is not presently excluded, but as long as certification is the first responsibility such confrontation as Mr. Rojas predicts is very likely to occur. It seems, therefore, that the time has come to separate the functions of the placement office from those of the classroom.

One could probably anticipate the severity of the storm Mr. Rojas predicts by finding, through a survey, the proportion of faculty and administrators who opt for certification over service.

Law

To the editor:
An Open Letter to Boston Police Commander Edmund L. McNamara

Dear Mr. McNamara:

I am glad to see that you stood up for the men on your force when faced with the demands of the Boston City Hospital's Trustees. They are obviously guilty of "an irresponsible action," as you put it in the Globe (March 12), in demanding the suspension of an officer who, in obvious self-defense, shot two vicious invalids.

I want you to know that I agree with you. A police officer needs a .38 pistol just as much in a hospital ward as on the street. You just never can tell when one of those sneaky cripples will attempt a holdup, or try to run you down with a speedy wheelchair. Your critics wouldn't laugh so hard if they were stabbed with a tongue depressor by a violent invalid.

Yours for Law and Order

I have a daughter which attends your University. I am an officer in the State Police and I think that Larry Fischer's letter is very wrong. Does your paper know that Larry Fischer goes around Amherst singing songs for dimes? He shouldn't feel able to spread lies about the police of Conway. I don't know the facts of the case but I fought in WWII against the Gestapo, and they were a lot smarter than these hippie creeps. Two years in the Army would do them faggots good. The Police are the only thing between us and Communism. I will debate Fischer anytime, anywhere, anyplace.

Power

To the editor:

To Mr. Edward J. Butterworth:

In reply to your editorial of Wed. March 8 cutely entitled WHAT POWER? TO WHO? I feel an obligation as a person to attempt to alleviate your ignorance. I will make this as short as possible because we, the people, have no time to write cute little wordy statements. I must admit that you said exactly what your society would want you to say. I am sure that Mr. Nixon would have really dug it, but never the less you are ignorant. The PEOPLE are the oppressed (mentally, spiritually and physically) of the world. The PEOPLE are black, and yellow and red and white. Yes, we the PEOPLE want POWER. Power to run own own lives. Power to be truly alive. Power to be able to earn enough to eat and feed our starving children. Power to rule ourselves. We the people cannot wait for your benevolent (?) rulers to lay some good things on us. We the people cannot suffer the lies of Amerika any longer. We the people will take the POWER into our hands and destroy oppression and the oppressor Amerika. Power to the people means power to the masses, power to the oppressed. The PEOPLE'S POWER will destroy AMERIKA and all oppression.

Names

To the editor:

One of the main difficulties in discussing sensibly the problems of the Mideast situation is that there are too many people who confuse Zionism with Judaism. In particular, I am referring to Mr. Richard B. Collier in his letter of March 18, who, in response to my ANTI-ZIONIST letter, accused me of being ANTI-SEMITIC. This is highly improbable for many reasons, and mainly two: One, I am Jewish and I love my Jewish family, and Two, Semites consist of not only Jews, but also Christians and Moslems. Therefore, before you go around publicly accusing someone of being anti-semetic, Mr. Collier, you should first understand what Semitism is. Upon making that great discovery, you will be on the road to learning that there is a big difference between anti-Zionism and anti-Semitism.

And what was your point in boasting about "the leading lights in the world" i.e. Jewish radicals, innovators, and creators? Yes, many of them do make this a better world to live in (as do many OTHER people of OTHER religions), but how does that justify Zionism? It sounds very much as if you were justifying the rights of the Jews over the Palestinian Arabs on the basis of cultural superiority. Now who is being PREJUDICED, Mr. Collier! You would also be interested to know that one of these great Jewish "leading lights" Albert Einstein was himself an ANTI-ZIONIST JEW. So are many rabbis, and other Jewish leaders.

So, Mr. Collier, I will not take your unfounded remarks to heart, for I realize that you neither understand my viewpoint nor the basic issues of the war. However, I would strongly suggest that you do a little reading. Then, if you want to call me names, at least they will be the RIGHT names.

Open Letter to Carswell

To the editor:

An Open letter to Senators Kennedy and Brooke, concerning the nomination of Judge Carswell to the United States Supreme Court.

We wish to commend your decision to vote against Judge Carswell's appointment to the Supreme Court and to urge that you launch a filibuster, if it should prove necessary, to prevent his appointment.

We know that historically liberals have condemned the filibuster and have sought to revoke the Senate rule which makes this tactic possible. The tactic has been employed almost exclusively by a coalition of Southern Democrats and Northern Republicans to block progressive legislation, and, significantly, to block the appointment of a liberal as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. We face now, however, a situation in which a white supremicist with a less than mediocre judicial record is about to be appointed to one of the very most important positions in American public life; his decisions will affect the rights and burdens of American citizens for at least a generation. ANY LEGALLY SANCTIONED METHOD TO PREVENT HIS APPOINTMENT IS NOT ONLY JUSTIFIED BUT OBLIGATORY. Indeed, opposition to Carswell's appointment is mounting as citizens become aware of his judicial record of insensitivity to the just claims of black Americans. A filibuster would help to focus attention on the deficiencies of his record and to mobilize further sentiment against his appointment.

We realize too that the filibuster is typically a more strategic tool for conservatives than for liberals because its invocation forces the Congress to delay consideration of urgently needed legislation. But we see little likelihood of many progressive programs emerging from this session of Congress and, anyway, no current issue before the Senate carries more serious implications for the future of racial relations in the United States than the proposed Carswell appointment.

There are other considerations, to be sure, which bear upon a liberal's decision to employ the filibuster: Southern conservatives are better equipped to sustain a filibuster and can count upon more unified constituency support; and a filibuster by liberals now might undercut future efforts to revise rule 22 of the Senate. We suggest that such considerations are not compelling in this case. For the stakes involved in this are too high to stop short of pursuing any and all legally permissible means to defeat the Nixon nominee; and it is even possible that a successful filibuster by liberals in this instance would soften conservative opposition to an early reform of Senate rules.

For some time now liberals have advised radicals to adopt strategies which remain within the "rules of the game," and radicals have replied that the existing rules are stacked against those who seek to promote desperately needed social change. In this case, though, a written rule of the Senate makes it possible to stop the Carswell nomination by legitimate methods of only a coalition of liberal Senators can agree to adopt the needed strategy. The burden of responsibility now falls upon liberal Senators to pursue the required course.

Free University
Yesterday and Tomorrow

It's been several months since the Free University "Domes" fell, and campus interest in Free U. has been limited since those days. Now, with Free University building and planning for next semester, it is a good time to relate what has happened since then and what wicked/freak projects are planned.

With the destruction of the domes many of the people involved decided to end their involvement with the University entirely. In order to stem this suicidal rush, Tim Ney and Bob Buckner designed and executed Program 1--the Magic Silver Bus-- in order to involve students with education without forcing them to stay in beautiful downtown Southwest. Program 1 will explore the idea of mobile learning, where $20 million Campus Centers and 28 story libraries are not necessary (they're irrelevant).

Other Free U. members have been making attempts at forming a "Drop-In Center" in Northampton for the area high school students. They've met the Mayor, been arrested for loitering, and become deeply involved with the students.

Tom Spriggs (Grayson) has been involved with writing an experimental College proposal for UMass which at this moment is being considered in the Provost Office somewhere.

The rest of Free U has been hiding on the third floor of South College planning future action. Giving up the idea of organizing around a "crisis", we have decided to try to become a service organization for all students on campus. We are going to collect data on independent study projects and other educational reform ideas from Free U's and experimental schools across the country. We are going to set up a reading room/library in South College, where the atmosphere will be distinctly different from Goodell Library. Finally we are going to set up "Community Centers" in several locations on campus. This semester the prototype will be established, in a traditional structure (not a dome) rumored to be a log cabin, on the Mall in Southwest. It will sell student produced goods (paintings, ceramics, etc.), flowers, fresh baked goods, books, and whatever else students want.

Activities of a wide variety are planned to involve a large segment of Southwest. John Hunt and the Southwest Assembly are providing considerable assistance. Many people are needed to make this effort (which we consider a major opportunity for students) work however. We want students to operate and control these "Community Centers" in their area (in contrast to the "campus center"). If interested leave your name and address at the Free U. Office--3rd floor, library side of South College. Service--Involvement--Community-- Student Power--Control of YOUR life.

Engineering Hall Dedicated to Former University Dean

George A. Marston, former Dean of the School of Engineering at the University will be honored in day-long exercises, Saturday, April 18, when the University's main engineering building will be named for him.

As part of the ceremonies, the School of Engineering is sponsoring a symposium on "The Role of the Scientist and Engineer in Public Affairs." The program will begin at 10 a.m. in the morning with the formal naming of the building as Marston Hall. This will be followed by an address by Dr. Eric Walker, President of the Pennsylvania State University. Following a luncheon in honor of Dean Marston, a group of distinguished speakers representing a spectrum of scientific and engineering interests will discuss the symposium theme.

President Walker, who worked closely with Dean Marston for many years in the American Society of Engineering Education (ASEE), is a member of the National Academy of Engineering and a former President of ASEE. He is widely known for his accomplishments in the areas of engineering and education.

Dean Marston joined the UMass faculty in 1933 as an instructor in mathematics and four years later was appointed assistant professor. When engineering expanded into a School of Engineering in 1947, he was named the first Dean. He remained in that capacity until his retirement in 1963. During that time, enrollment in engineering grew from approximately 350 engineering students to 900, and the School expanded to include chemical, electrical, mechanical, civil and industrial engineering.

A native of Montague City, Dean Marston received his B.S.C.E. degree from Worcester Polytechnic Institute (W.P.I.) in 1930 and his M. S. from the State University of Iowa in 1933. He later received a Professional Degree in Civil Engineering from W.P.I. He was honored by his alma mater in 1958 when he was awarded the Honorary Doctor of Engineering Degree.

Allen to Lead Seminar At Draft Drop-in Center

Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Education, will be in the Drop-In Center attached to Moore House at 4:00 p.m. Thursday to talk in "seminar" fashion about the psychological effects of the military upon those who have been in, those who are going in, and those who won't go in.

Dean Allen's visit is only one out of many events that Frances Crowe, a draft counselor from Northampton, has planned in conjunction with the Drop-In Center.

Previously there has been films, discussions with each other about how we feel about conscription. Women, as well as men, are urged to come, because like it or not, the draft and the institution that supports the draft affects everyone regardless of age or sex.

Informal draft counseling and discussions take place every Thursday from 4:00 - 6:00 p.m. in the Drop-In Center, and the center has received books and pamphlets from the Midwest Committee for Draft Counseling concerning different methods of confronting the draft i.e. conscientious objection, going to Canada, resistance.

Five College Course Program Praised

"UMass has a totally different atmosphere, it's more friendly," according to one Five College student.

Mary Leslie is a Smith College junior from White Plains, New York, who has participated in the Five College Co-operative Program of exchange classes for two semesters. She hopes to go on the Recreation "Block" of accelerated course s at UMass in her senior year.

The addition of men to classes at Smith doesn't make much difference, Miss Leslie said, "There are only 38 men from the Ten College Exchange now at Smith, really not enough to tell. Being at a place that is totally coed, like UMass, makes a difference."

Miss Leslie encourages other students to take advantage of the Five College Co-operative Program.

"It is a valuable opportunity to be exposed to different educational ideas and different academic concerns."

The procedure for taking a course off campus is not very involved, according to Miss Leslie. "All you need to do is get your advisor's permission, and per - mission from the instructor in whose classes you wish to enter. You can register through your own school."

Miss Leslie admits there are problems with the program.

"The main hassle is with buses: they don't run often enough. Scheduling is hard to arrange, too, because Smith's classes meet consecutive days, while university classes meet alternate days."

Mr. Popper's Penquins Give Premier Performance Today

Capt. Cook leads his brood of newly-hatched penguins on a tour of the house and icebox, with Mama Great bringing up the rear.

The movers don't know how to remove the play equipment from the Popper home when all the penguins are doing their best to keep the fun fixtures where they are.

"Gork???" . . . Penguin Greta takes a look around, seems to ask if the family approves of her antics, . . at left.

They arrive with a waddle and a "GORK!", and are sure to captivate the hearts of all who see them, young and old alike.

They're Mr. Popper's Penguins, and they can be found performing on the stage of Bartlett Auditorium this week. In real life, the penguins are schoolchildren from the Amherst area who have rehearsed their penguin walk and noises in preparation for this afternoon's opening performance of "Mr. Popper's Penguins".

Mr. Popper, more commonly known as Doug McKinley, and the Popper children (Chris Garrow and Judy Jacobs) love the little creatures on sight, but Mama Popper (Mary O'Connor) has her doubts. Penguins are expensive to feed, and have to have a cold climate, to name just two of the problems which face the Popper family.

In spite of all the financial problems, the Poppers manage to get by somehow, and have lots of fun in the process. And the audience, especially children, will enjoy the animals' antics -- and those of the "adults" in the cast.

This play, which is produced as part of the University Theatre's Children's program, is a real family show. The plight of the Poppers, and the final outcome is bound to be enjoyed by all.

The set is one which lends itself to the imagination - with platforms and stairs in the least expected places, just the sort of place a child would love to live.

Mr. Popper's Penguins by Albert O. Mitchell, will be presented at the following times: Today, March 19, 4:30 and 7:30 p.m.; Friday, March 20, 7:30 p.m.; Saturday, March 21, 10:00 a.m. and 2:30 p.m. Admission 50¢ by advance ticket sale (reservation only). Debating Team Seeks National Tourney Spot

Not to be outdone by its performance during the first semester, the UMass Debating team continued its winning ways in a number of recent tournaments.

This weekend two switch side teams will be competing at the district championships held at the University of Vermont, to earn a spot in the National Debate Tournament in Houston, debate's equivalent of the NIT. Competing for UMass will be the team of Phil Doyle and Steve Daggett and the team of Mike Farrell and Tim Hynes.

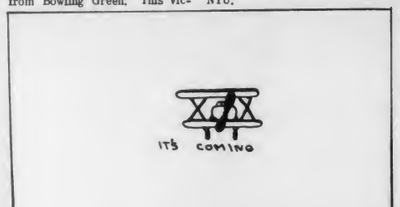
One of the more successful week ends of the 1969-70 debate season was the weekend of March sixth, as awards were compiled in a variety of events.

The novice team of Dave Mc Caffrey and Roger Legendre captured the first place trophy at the Wayne State novice tournament, one of the toughest tournaments in the country. In six preliminary rounds, the team defeated Detroit, Indiana State, Michigan, Central Michigan, Northern Illinois, their only loss coming against Bowling Green. This moved them into quarter-finals where they defeated the very highly regarded team from Bowling Green. This victory moved them into the semi-final round where they beat the top-rated novice team from Ohio University. Placed into the final round, they won first place, defeating Augustana on a 3-0 decision.

McCaffrey was also awarded a silver tray as the first place speaker. Legendre won the second place speaker tray.

The same week end traveling to neighboring Southern Connecticut State College, novices Alan Kantrowitz and John Day were the only undefeated novice team in preliminary competition. This moved them into the quarter-final rounds where they lost to Brown on a 2-1 decision. They were awarded a trophy for their fine showing here. Also in the novice division at Southern Connecticut were Carol Pollard and Paul Drager who went 3-3. They defeated teams from Loyola-Baltimore, Central-Connecticut, and Mansfield State.

Both varsity teams representing UMass also compiled three-three records. Tim Hynes and Marlene Fine defeated teams from Georgia State, Norwich, and Boston College. Their losses went to Marymount, St. John's-Brooklyn, and NYU.



THERE WILL BE NO COLLEGIAN ON MONDAY, MARCH 30.

Scott Shot, Lahoud HR Pace Red Sox Win, 6-5

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - Reserve outfielder Joe Lahoud continued his heavy hitting with a homer and a game-deciding single with the bases loaded Wednesday in lifting the Boston Red Sox to a 6-5 exhibition baseball victory over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Lahoud, who is locked in a bitter fight to keep his utility job with the Red Sox, lined his single just past rightfielder Oscar Gamble in the eighth inning. The ball was hit so hard that only one run scored, but that was enough, breaking a 5-5 deadlock.

George Scott his his fourth exhibition homer, a two-run shot in the first inning, and wue in the first inning, and went on to collect two more hits. Lahoud followed Scott's homer with his second scoring shot in two days.

Johnny Briggs had a two-run homer off Boston starter Sonny Siebert in the third inning.

Playing with the liveley ball being tested in designated games for the first time, the Red Sox banked out 12 hits. Mike Andrews Dick Schofield and Russ Gibson had two apiece.

The Red Sox, who blew an 8-0 lead in a 9-8 loss to the Yankees Tuesday, jumped out in front quickly against the Phillies.

With one out, Andrews lined a single to right. After Carl Yastrzemski flied out, Scott drilled a home run off the left field screen and Lahoud followed with his homer to right. Billy Conigliaro came close to making it three homers in a row, but was robbed when Briggs leaned over the left field fence and made a fine catch.

The Phils picked up a run in the second and tied the score 3-3 on Briggs' homer in the third.

Although the Red Sox had plenty of scoring chances, leaving the bases loaded in the third and fourth innings, they were unable to break the deadlock until the seventh. Scott then launched a two-run rally with a line single to center and took second on Lahoud's sacrifice.

Schofield, playing shortstop as Rico Petrocelli was rested after suffering a slight attack of woodiness, scored Scott on a single. Then Gibson, a veteran catcher fighting for a job doubled, scoring Schofield.

Southpaw Bill Landis allowed only two infield hits in three innings of relief. Then the Phils tied the score 5-5, capitalizing on the wildness of the young Rogelio Moret in the eighth.

Gibson and Lahoud saved Moret from additional trouble. Gibson picked off a runner with a rifle throw to second and Lahoud fielded a single cleanly and uncorked a tremendous throw to the plate to cut down a runner for the third out of the inning.

In the Boston eighth, George Thomas, Don Lock, and Mike Derrick, walked, setting the stage for Lahoud's decisive single. The Red Sox then left the bases loaded for the third time.

The victory was Boston's fifth in 11 Grapefruit League outings. The Phillies have a 7-4 mark.

Bouncing Back Over Basketball-Part Two

Leaman Reflects Over Great Season

Coach Credits Contributions of Four Seniors Sights HC, Iona, and URI As Biggest Wins

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

"The achievements have just proved to us that our program is progressing in the right direction," said a reposed head coach Jack Leaman in reflecting back over the basketball season just completed five days ago in New York City.

"This year we've set standards that will be hard to match, let alone overtake, in the future," he commented as he thought about the accomplishments of the 1969-70 Redmen: the tie for the Yankee Conference hoop title, the UMass record of 18 wins, the number one ranking among New England cage teams and the selection by the National Invitation Tournament.

Yes, the coach was relaxed and at low key. He had time to spend in looking back over the season that will not soon be forgotten. Leaman reiterated about the role the seniors, Ray Ellerbrook, Dennis Chapman, Jack Gallagher and Dick Samuelson, played in making this team what it was.

"Their role to the overall basketball program is infinite," Leaman assured. "They've won three Yankee Conference championships, they've been first in New England and they've been to the NIT. No other group will ever make the same contributions to the progress of a basketball program," he pointed out.

Ellerbrook's role as captain of the Redman squad came under the mentor's consideration, "his leadership took over around the middle of January when we decided we had to play a whole lot better, up to our potential and, down the stretch, he led us by example." Leaman made it explicit that, over the last ten games of the season Ellerbrook played better than at any other time in his four years at UMass.

Pondering the winter on a game-by-game basis, Leaman concluded that the turning point of the campaign was the second half against Iona when the Redmen scored 51 points in that half to overtake an eight-point deficit at intermission for an 86-82 conquest.

"The game that actually put us over the hump was Holy Cross," Leaman stated. "This convinced all of us that we were a good basketball team. It put us in the right state of mine."

The biggest win for him was the UMass victory over Rhode Island at Kingston. It was vital for Leaman and his team because it assured them of at least a share of the YC crown.

The Redmen's toughest loss, in Leaman's mind, was the one-point failure against Fordham. UMass had the lead, played perfect defense to maintain that lead, but saw it dissipate on a last-second freak shot that came out of nowhere. The coach's comment, "We were begging for wins at the time."

What was Julius Erving's contribution to this team's success? Answers Leaman, "I don't think we could have done what we did without Julius Erving, and I don't think he could have done what he did without us." The head man describes Erving as "a tremendous team player", and adds, "Our kids rallied around Ellerbrook and Erving."

John Betancourt's job as a sophomore was praised by Leaman who liked the manner in which Betancourt always came through with the big games against the big teams. He further pointed out that, when Betancourt was off, Mike Pagliara was able to come in and take up the slack.

Leaman doesn't look for much support for nex t year's squad from the present crop of freshmen. He realizes that the 1970-71 unit will derive its strength mainly from veterans Ken Mathias and Bob Dempsey, soph notables Erving, Betancourt, Pagliara, Rick Vogeley, Bill Keegen and Chris Coffin, reserves Bill Greeley and Sam Provo, and sophomore redshirt Tom Austin.

The coach related, "I would say offhand, we'll play basically with the same kids we had this year." He believes that his present talent is good enough to replace the departing four seniors.

About the NIT and the loss to Marquette, Leaman had this to say, "We were disappointed first, the entire team; if we had given the top performance, we would have won." He thought about it a little longer and spoke, "The overall performance by the team and the fans made me proud that I was connected with the University of Massachusetts."

As for next season and the prospects of another NIT venture, Leaman warned about the challenges of five New England quintets, Connecticut, URI, Holy Cross, Boston College and Harvard, but his last words went like this: "I feel maybe we have developed the confidence, the desire and we have the ability to compete on all the levels and we will be ready and able to defend our New England championship."

HOOP NOTES - Erving was selected by the UPI as New England's top basketball player yesterday . . . One last HOW ABOUT ???! . . . How about the managing editor of the MDC getting hustled out of a quarter when asked directions to the Madison Square Garden bowling lanes? . . . Card Burning Highlights Anti-Draft Day

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

The Northampton Draft Board was the site of a day long protest to the Selective Service System yesterday as 12 draft cards were burned by students and other demonstrators. There was no police action taken against the draft card burners and the day's events were nonviolent and without incident.

The draft card burning and accompanying rally at Pulaski Park highlighted a "National Anti - Draft Day" coordinated by members of the Draft Action Committee of Amherst and Northampton.

At 1 p.m. the Selective Service cards were set aflame as a crowd of over 100 area college and high school students, Northampton citizens, police and other spectators looked on. As the cards were burned there was a "Call for resistance" by the participants and a plea for anti-draft action to continue "beyond today."

A previously issued statement by the Draft Action Committee stated their rationale for burning the cards as follows: "Conscription not only makes wars like Vietnam possible, but basically is a system of slavery. Forcing its young men to choose between killing their fellow human beings and five years in prison is not the mark of a free society. The time has come to say 'No' to death and 'Yes' to live."

After the draft card burning the protestors conducted a march along the Main Street sidewalk in front of the Draft Board building and adjacent businesses. Many carried signs which read "Hell No We Won't Go," "Make Love Not War," and "Burn Draft Cards, Not Children." Others chanted "Hell no we won't go," "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh," and "Free Huey-No more brothers in jail." Leaflets concerning anti-draft action were also distributed.

One youth who burned his draft card and described himself as former UMass student stated the reasons of his actions as a protest to the "slavery of the draft, continuation of the Vietnam war and expansion into Laos." "The government has no right to classify my conscience," he concluded.

Professor G. Putnam Barber of the University Sociology department said that "I think the draft is outrageous!" But he also pointed out that he does not believe draft action such as yesterday's will be too successful.

An owner of one of the businesses adjacent to the Northampton Draft Board was visibly upset with the day's actions and said that "If they want a parade let them go down to the fair grounds!"

One gentlemen, a nine year veteran in the U. S. Navy, said of the draft protestors that "Most of them don't know what they're doing. I think they are wrong."

And one irate woman spectator exclaimed, "It's disgusting! If they don't like it here let them go over there and find out what it's like. What have they accomplished anyway?"

A Northampton police officer described the day's events as "peaceful" and said "Everybody wants a free country, there's nothing to be said about that."

At Pulaski Park several individuals spoke to the crowd to explain the reasons behind the day's actions.

One youth who had burned his Selective Service card said he had done so because "I don't want to be a hypocrite. I don't like the draft. It twists and channels people. It drags people into a system and can bleed other countries." He was applauded as he finished his remarks.

Another described the burning of draft cards as an "internal thing" and "symbolic."

There was a call for a "revolution of life-styles" and for draft resistance to "keep going," and "Don't let it stop."

The park rally was concluded with a shout of "All power to the People!" and the passing out of 24 miniature white wooden crosses with the names of those drafted from Northampton and killed in Vietnam.

Ecologist Panel Discusses Diversion of Conn. River

The proposed diversion of the Connecticut River to supply water for Eastern Massachusetts was the subject of a Distinguished Ecologists Panel Discussion last evening in Bowker Auditorium. Approximately 150 persons attended the discussion entitled, "The Environmental Peril in the Connecticut River Diversion."

Included on the panel of noted ecologists - environmentalists were educators and writers from the Connecticut River Basin. The panel moderator was Dr. Peter Steve, Ecologist at Greenfield Community College. The panelists included Dr. Lincoln Brower, Ecologist and writer of Amherst College; Dr. John W. Brainerd, Ecologist and writer of Springfield College; Dr. Ward S. Motts, Environmental Geologist, and Dr. Stuart Ludlam, Ecologist of UMass.; Dr. John F. Shontz, Ecologist of Mt. Holyoke College; Dr. William Niering, Ecologist and writer of Connecticut College, New London; and Prof. J. Kenneth Taylor, Ecologist of Westfield State College.

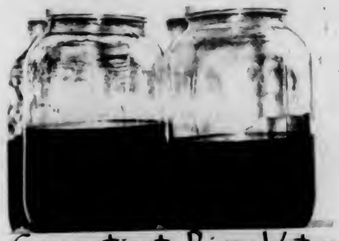
The Metropolitan District Commission proposal calls for a diversion of flow into Quabbin Reservoir to supply a projected 1976 need for water in Eastern Massachsetts. Each of the panelists recognized the fact that to continue to expand, the Boston area must find new supplies of water. In examining the plan, the various ecologists exposed some ways in which it may be ecologically detrimental to this area.

The discussion centered on such topics as the effects that the pumping of large quantities of normally flowing, polluted river water into a standing reservoir would have on the ecology of both the Quabbin Reservoir and the Connecticut River. The panel pointed out that in reducing the volume of water in the river, the overall temperature would rise, to a level which would exceed the limit of tolerance of certain organisms and would increase the viral concentration, a potentially harmful health factor.

Another problem discussed was the fact that Boston would demand more and more diversion of water in the future, beyond the level provided for in the present proposal. The ecologists feared that Boston may exploit this method of water diversion due to poor planning of water needs.

Possible alternatives to the M. D.C. proposal were also presented by the panelists. They suggested that Boston has the obligation to investigate sources of water in the immediate vicinity such as the Charles River. Purification of this water, plus the recovering and recycling of water already in the system would decrease the burden which diversion would place on the Connecticut River Valley. These alternatives would be more expensive, but would be a great savings ecologically for this area.

Each of the ecologists emphasized the fact that the factors in an environment are all interrelated and that in changing one segment of the eco-system, all others will be affected. Diversion of water from the Connecticut could have harmful effects on an area extending as far as Long Island Sound.



Samples of sewerage laden water collected from the Connecticut River at Sunderland were on display last night in the lobby of Bowker Auditorium. They were viewed by the approximately 150 people attending the CEQ panel discussion. (MDC photo by Steve Schmidt)

Barrus Resolution Declared Invalid

Senator John D. Barrus, who sponsored the resolution requesting an investigation into the conduct of students who refused to allow former V.P. Hubert H. Humphrey to speak here last month, announced yesterday that his resolution has been declared invalid.

Apparently the Senate Council informed Senator Barrus that the Joint Rules Committee stated that there is no precedent for a legislative request for an investigation by the State's Attorney General's office.

"Legal council has ruled that the Legislature can adopt an order calling for investigations of state agencies by the legislature itself, rather than the Attorney General's office" Senator Barrus said. He added that he would oppose any legislative - oriented investigation and although the matter is still under study it was his understanding that the UMass resolution will not come to the Senate floor for action.

Sen. Barrus explained that the state legislature should not conduct an investigation into the question since legal questions are involved and that such matters should not be undertaken by laymen. He added that the university administration could request an investigation by the Attorney General into the incident, if they wished.

But UMass officials this week claim that no such request is contemplated. Rather students and faculty members are drawing up guidelines in an effort to prevent a recurrence of the heckling of speakers on campus.

Sen. Barrus had previously charged members of the UMass faculty for "engaging in a conspiracy" to silence Humphrey during the Distinguished Visitors Series lecture.

However, UMass officials said this week that their informal inquiry into the incident has failed to uncover any "conspiracy" by faculty members or outsiders. They also denied reports that a student who had defended Humphrey's right to speak was "so badly beaten that he required hospitalization."

A spokesman for UMass announced that "we have determined that the demonstration against H. H.H. was spontaneous, arising from a meeting protesting the Chicago 7 trial held on campus earlier that afternoon," and that there is no indication that anyone consciously brought in outsiders to disrupt the meeting.

Union Plans to Employ Students as Reporters

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION will employ students from UMass writing courses to report of the education conference that will meet on campus next week, UNION political writer Neil L. Perry said yesterday. He discussed this arrangement during a presentation on feature story writing made at a meeting of English 337, Advanced Expository Writing.

Students aided by Perry, by a professional photographer and by the editorial staff in Springfield will provide "saturation coverage" of the week-long conference which will feature an appearance by Senator Ted Kennedy on Tuesday night.

Perry defined feature story writing as "gut writing," limited only by the need for interest on the part of the writer. "It is anything that makes a little old lady say 'oh, for heaven's sake,' " he added.

More Draft Protests

Demonstrators and those demonstrated against sought to avoid violent confrontations Thursday as a week-long nationwide protest against the military draft limped through its fourth day with generally small turnouts.

In Syracuse, N.Y., police and 2,000 demonstrators cooperated in a careful orchestration of the nation's largest protest allowing those who wanted to be arrested to do so without violence. In New York City protestors lined up for their arrest by police.

Draft board offices in San Francisco and San Rafael, Calif. New York City and San Antonio, Tex., were closed, but except in New York officials said the closures were ordered to catch up with paper work.

In Grand Rapids, Mich., a token group of five demonstrators was allowed in the federal building to block the entrance to draft board offices while two dozen protestors remained outside. In Dayton, Ohio, Selective Service System officials let 50 young men and women conduct a peaceful occupation of their offices while work continued.

Hundreds of persons were arrested, mostly for peaceful obstruction, in activities spanning the nation, but violence colored fewer than a handful of the incidents.

During the day protests were reported in nearly two dozen cities, but only about half a dozen drew more than 100 people.

In Washington, D.C., a crowd estimated by police at about 350 blocked the entrance to the national headquarters of the Selective Service System carrying a black coffin they said contained draft cards.

In addition to scattered burning and turning in of draft cards, the day's protests also found three ministers handing out flowers in Indianapolis, Ind., sit-ins inflating balloons at Dayton, bags of what police called blood splashed against an induction center building in Raleigh, N.C., and marchers wearing hoods and death masks in Pittsburgh.

In Syracuse, protestors visited Police Chief Thomas Sardino in advance to ask what was the least they could do to get arrested. He said he advised them simply to block an entrance to the induction center and refuse to move when a citizen asked to be admitted.

About 100 persons were arrested there as they sat around a bus of inductees, with Sardino himself asking the first one to leave and then placing him under arrest when he declined.

The New Cambodian Gov't. Recognized by United States

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States recognized the new post-Sihanouk government in Cambodia Thursday while worried officials feared that troubled land might slide into civil war and become Southeast Asia's "second Laoe."

The decision on recognition was announced by the State Department which used a formula designed to evade the issue as much as possible. A spokesman announced that "for constitutional reasons the question of recognition does not arise."

This means the United States holds that the continuity of government in Phnom Phon lies in the constitution and is unaffected by the ouster of Prince Norodom Sihanouk as chief of state and the designation of Chen Heng, leader of the National Assembly, as his successor.

U.S. officials expect, in fact, that the new leadership will be more friendly than the old and that its efforts to do something about the North Vietnamese troops in Cambodian territory along the borders of South Vietnam should clearly benefit U.S. interests.

Sihanouk himself, who is now in Communist China, probably holds one key to whether his nation will be plunged into new violence or given a chance to develop political stability. But others also have decisive choices to make, including the Khmer Rouge, the Communist party of Cambodia and the associated North Vietnamese.

One of the immediate effects of the removal of Sihanouk, authorities say, is some interruption to the flow of supplies to North Vietnamese forces in the jungles of eastern Cambodia along the border of South Vietnam. How serious a pressure this may be on these forces is unclear in Washington but if the logistics impairment continues for very long, it could put them in hazardous circumstances.

From the U.S. military point of view this is a byproduct benefit of the political upheaval in Cambodia which is obviously welcome.

An estimated 40,000 to 60,000 North Vietnamese troops have used the border jungles of Cambodia for several years as sanctuaries from which to strike against U.S. and allied forces in South Vietnam. The jungles have been reported to hold North Vietnamese headquarters, supply centers, hospitals and rest and training areas.

These regions have been under the complete control of the North Vietnamese and closed to Cambodians. One of the charges against Sihanouk and the National Assembly was that he had some responsibility for allowing such things to happen. U.S. officials have claimed the North Vietnamese would not have been able to establish their positions and maintain the flow of supplies, which moved along the waterways, without Sihanouk's neutral government at least pretending to look the other way.

2 Day Mail Strike Affects 17 Million

NEW YORK (AP) - An illegal two-day strike of government letter carriers spread from New York Thursday, halting all postal service to an estimated 17 million persons - from corporation presidents swinging million dollar deals to pensioners living for the postman's arrival with their next check.

Even the United Nations was affected, as members of the striking AFL-CIO National Association of letter carriers continued their defiance of federal court back-to-work orders.

Private sources in the securities industry said the stock market might have to close Monday if the strike continued.

No end appeared in sight before Saturday, when New York letter carriers are scheduled to vote on whether to end the first such walkout in the 161-year history of the U.S. Post Office Department.

"We'll be out until the membership says otherwise," declared Vincent Scollo, vice president of the union's Brooklyn local.

The United Nations post office was closed, cutting off a flow of documents and publications to 103 countries around the world. However, vital correspondence moved by means of diplomatic pouch.

Mail from abroad was diverted from Kennedy airport, where postal facilities were tied up by the strike

The New York Commerce and Industry Association said its 3,500 members reported "serious disruption" of day-to-day business affairs. Association President Ralph Cross added: "The insurance companies and the banks who depend so heavily on mail are the hardest hit. But there's no company so small that it's not affected."

Western Union reported its telegraph business up 20 per cent. Messenger services found a heavy demand for their facilities, especially to deliver checks and perishable items.

William Carroll, deputy director of the New York postal region, was asked what would happen to a perishable item marooned in a struck post office. He replied: "Well, it will just have to perish."

A New York Stock Exchange spokesman, surveying efforts by financial and other firms to circumvent the mail tieup, declared: "All it takes is a little ingenuity."

In the Wall Street community, Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. trucked proxy statements and dividend payments outside the strike area for mailing, and flew foreign mail unstamped to London for distribution.

The big brokerage house of Bache and Co. said it was shipping securities and correspondence by air and truck to branch offices.

Draft Resister Deportation Upheld by Board of Appeals

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Board of Immigration Appeals Thursday upheld the deportation of a young Georgia man who fled to Canada to avoid the draft and then renounced his U.S. citizenship.

In a 4-1 decision, the board held that Thomas Glenn Jolley, 26, of Atlanta is an alien who voluntarily chose to abandon his native land in 1967, even though he returned two months later.

It gave Jolley 90 days to leave the country. Although the young man established residence in Canada, he did not become a Canadian citizen.

The case marked the first to be considered by the board since hundreds of young men began an exodus to Canada four years ago to avoid induction into the Army and being sent to the Vietnam war. An estimated 3,000 American youths are now in Canada.

Jolley went to Canada in March 1967. He renounced allegiance to the United States in an oath sworn before the American consul at Toronto the following May 16.

Report of President's Comm. on Room Rents and Fees

The President's Committee on Room Rents and Fees has issued a report on the results of its investigation. The report details several alternatives to Treasurer Johnson's initial report on next year's rent increases. It contains several proposals which would reduce the amount of the originally announced increase, mainly by achieving fuller occupancy rates. One suggested measure included in the report calls for the initiation of a student deposit system, an issue of much controversy last year. The text of the committee's report follows:

On February 17, 1970, President Lederle issued a statement concerning the proposed room rent increase. In the statement this committee was established having as part of its charge:

1. To coordinate the various student, faculty, and administration groups that are studying rent rates; and

2. To submit recommendations to the Chancellor and the Board of Trustees.

The committee met weekly to coordinate the information culled during the intervening period. At its first meeting the committee divided into three subcommittees. One subcommittee was to deal with the alternatives to the administration's proposal. The Faculty Senate's Budget Committee along with members of the Rent Committee assumed this task. It is with the results of this subcommittee's investigation that we are herein concerned.

At the first meeting of the alternatives subcommittee, "Treasurer Johnson informed the group that the original document prepared by the Treasurer's office was intended to serve as a basis for discussion of next year's rent rates. It was not intended to be the final statement on the matter. However, inasmuch as the initial report did not explore alternatives in terms of their effects on the level and structure of rent rates, the student -- perhaps rightly so -- interpreted the initial report as the final word on rents. This was unfortunate.

The subcommittee identified several areas in which analysis might lead to actions and/or policies that ameliorate the current rent problem. These areas are:

1. Avoiding principal repayment on short term loans. The Treasurer has reported that the Building Authority is in agreement with this recommendation.

2. Reducing the "Furnishing Reserves". It is recommended that the Treasurer's office carefully reconsider the assumptions underlying the "Furnishing Reserve" with a view toward minimizing these expenses in the coming year. (i.e., lengthening the period over which the reserve is built up.)

3. Achieving a lower interest rate on short term loans. In the few weeks since the Treasurer's proposal was made public the interest rates have dropped to below 6 1/4%. It is recommended that the 6 1/4% figure or a lower one be used as a more accurate estimate of rates of interest.

Measures for increasing income.

1. Achieving fuller occupancy rates.

a. Enforcing existent regulations for moving off-campus.

These rules are:

1. A married student is eligible to live off-campus.

2. Seniors and other students who will reach 21 years of age during a given academic year may request permission to live off-campus. Intention to request this option must be initiated with the Area Coordinator, prior to room choosing for the next academic year.

3. Other students, not included above, may request permission to live off-campus. Requests are to be initiated with the appropriate Area Coordinator prior to the beginning of a semester and by the dates indicated in 2 above. The Area Coordinator, the Director of Housing, and their student personnel staff will consider each case on an individual basis, and grant or deny such requests.

4. Students within commuting distance may, if they wish, commute from home.

b. It is recommended that wherever a counselor is located in a room designed for double occupancy, the University shall make payments to the appropriate dormitory account equal to the cost of the unused bed space.

c. It is recommended that student rooms occupied by faculty, Heads of Residence, Area Coordinators, and other be paid for either by the occupants or by the University at the same rates charged students for double occupancy.

d. It is recommended that when all or part of a dorm is removed from student occupancy, the University shall make payment to the appropriate residence hall account equal to the remaining debt service plus any Net Cash contribution that would have been derived from residents' fees.

e. It is recommended that the number of transfer students admitted second semester be increased. Perhaps a January admission for some Freshmen could be designed, or an increase in the swing shift enrollment could be realized.

f. It is recommended that no major renovations or refurbishing be undertaken until the end of the academic year 1970-1971.

g. A student deposit system should be instituted to guarantee students a room choice and to guarantee the University occupancy of bed space. The Student Senate has already endorsed such a policy beginning fall semester 1970 for incoming freshmen and transfers and Spring Semester 1971 for all other residents.

2. Charging higher rentals on Project 12 than on previously built dorms. It is recommended that this differential be 90 dollars more than projects 1 - 10.

It is also recommended that the differential between traditional dorms and authority dorms be 60 dollars. All dorms that have been refurbished should be charged at the same rate as Projects 1 - 10.

3. It is recommended that the charges to conferences be raised to at least equal the rents charged students who remain on campus during vacation periods.

The committee has also discussed the idea of petitioning the State Legislature for assistance for the dorms but decided that this course of action is unwise at the present time. However, it is recommended that the University's fiscal 1972 budget provide some subsidy for the dormitories.

The President's Committee on room rents and fees proved that students, faculty, and administration can work together for a common goal. The ideas and proposals of each of these segments were well respected, ensuring that no decisions were approved without full consultation and concensus of the committee. The committee cites its operation as a model for a more governance system for the University.

Project Ten to Establish Coed Dorm, Study Program

A student initiated study program and coeducational dormitory has been proposed in conjunction with Project 10 and the Southwest Master's Office.

Students in the Program of Supervised Study would live in a coeducational dormitory, Moore House, for either a semester or for a full year. The Program would be under the supervision of the College of Arts and Sciences if approved.

Supervised by an advisor, the student would follow a program of his own design. This might include explorations of different fields, reading programs, traditional of classes with supplementary work, research with other students or with a faculty member, travel off-campus, work-study, seminars, or other student-initiated studies. Dr. John Hunt, Master of the Southwest Residential College, emphasized that "anything is possible."

The Program of Supervised Study would not satisfy any University requirements, except to count as credit for graduation. Negotiations to satisfy individual department requirements are possible.

The Program would be open to anyone in the University, including incoming freshmen, provided that the student submit an outline of what he intended to study. "The outline," said Dr. Hunt, "need not be a detailed day-by-day syllabus, only a general one, and one that would probably be modified as the student progressed.

A meeting for all those interested in the proposal will take place on Thursday, April 2, 1970, at 8:00 p.m. at the Hamden Dining Commons in Southwest. If a student is unable to attend, he may contact Dr. Hunt in his Coolidge Tower lobby office.

Doomsday Machine

The Pentagon announced on March 10 that it was going to deploy the Mirv system starting in June of this year. We wish in this letter to summarize the immediate and calculable effects of this deployment.

Mirv is an acronym for Multiple Independently-targeted Reentry Vehicle. In essence, it replaces a single warhead on a missile with smaller warheads that can be individually aimed at widely separated targets. At this time, the total United Missile force consists of 1710 individual warheads. After Mirving, it will consist of a minimum of 7000 warheads.

Although the simple numerical expansion of the warhead force increases the likelihood of an accidental nuclear war, the immediate effect is to de-emphasize if not scuttle the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks (Salt) involving this country and the Soviet Union. Our action could only be interpreted by the Soviets as an attempt to expand the arms race rather than to contain it. It would tend to strengthen the position of the hard line military and political leaders in the Soviet Union who feel the Salt talks are a device to weaken the Soviet military posture. The military decision to deploy Mirv has bypassed and negated the diplomatic efforts at arms limitation.

It should be noted that once we Mirv, it is technically impossible for the Soviets to determine how many warheads are contained in one of our missiles. When the Soviets Mirv, the same situation will apply. Mirving therefore injects a tremendous amount of uncertainty into the arms race. Both sides will know how many missiles the other has (by means of satellite reconnaissance) but will have no idea how many warheads they contain nor will they be able to determine whether these warheads are designed to destroy cities or missile sites. (It is important to differentiate between the two and we will return to this point later.) Only by means of on-site inspection could one side definitely know the type and number of warheads the other side has. In any arms limitation agreement, the uncertainty of Mirv necessitates on-site inspection, something the Soviets have opposed for decades, and therefore makes any arms limitation that much more difficult to achieve.

The most critical aspect of Mirving, however, is the effect it has of converting our strategic deterrent to an offensive threat. We presently have sufficient missiles such that enough would survive a Soviet first strike to inflict "unacceptable damage" on Soviet industry and civilians. They also have this capability. Presently, neither side can wipe out ALL of the other's missiles. Therefore, each missile system is a deterrent to an attack by the other side. If one side Mirvs, however, the mathematical probability that the Mirv system can wipe out the other's missiles with a first strike increases. It increases to the point where it is much more advantageous to attack FIRST. One should attack first because ONE of our Mirv missiles can destroy THREE of theirs. They will, therefor, have no missiles left to attack us. Note that the Soviets can reason in the same manner. The overall effect of Mirving is to give the advantage to the side that attacks FIRST, and therefore injects a destabilizing factor in the arms race that did not exist before: it encourages a pre-emptive first strike by either side in any crisis situation.

The degree of destabilization can be see by examining in detail the Mirv system. We presently have 656 Polaris Missiles. We will fit 496 of these with 10 to 14 warheads of 40 to 50 kilotons of destructive force (the Hiroshima bomb was equivalent to 20 kilotons of TNT). We will therefore have a total of 5120 to 7104 warheads on Polaris submarines alone. These are considered to be low yield weapons suitable for use against Soviet cities and not against hardened missile sites. 500 of our 1054 Minuteman missiles will be fitted with 3 warheads of 200 kilotons destructive power, each of which can be used against hardened missile sites, for a total of 2054 warheads. If the Minuteman warheads are only 50% reliable, then we could attack 1000 land-based Soviet missiles with a probability of 75% that we could destroy them completely provided we attack FIRST. The more missile killing warheads we install, the better the chance for "success." The more missile killing warheads we install, the greater the pressure to attack first.

Any Soviet planner would have to take these calculations into account in determining his response to our Mirving. He is forced to conclude that the United States is attaining a first strike capability and will decide to Mirv his own missiles. He will also expand the number of Soviet submarine and land-based missiles. The arms race will therefore enter a new phase of reciprocating expansion and mutual uncertainty.

In summary, the Mirv system will encourage a first strike while impeding any attempt at an arms control agreement. It upsets the detente that exists between the United States and the Soviet Union while initiating new weapons systems such as ABM and more sophisticated versions of Mirv. Militarily, we will be less secure WITH the Mirv system than we were WITHOUT it.

The tragedy of the situation is that Mirv is being made operational by the Executive Branch with little opposition from the Congress. It and future weapons systems will serve as a drain on our national resources for years to come, possibly creating a situation where because of unchecked pollution we cannot breathe, but we can destroy the Soviets ten times over.

Our conclusion is that the deployment of Mirv lays the groundwork for a doomsday machine that neither side can control or turn off.

Help Cure Water Pollution

Our world dies a little every time you wash out a batch of underwear in the bathroom sink with one of the high phosphate detergents. These phosphates are the chief cause of our present water pollution problem, according to a recently completed five-year study of pollution in Lakes Erie and Ontario by the International Joint Commission, the U.S. - Canadian water regulating agency. The phosphates speed up the growth of algae. The algae in turn rob the water of oxygen which fish and plants need to stay alive.

Only national awareness and immediate action by every concerned citizen can stem the tide of pollution until such time as detergent formulas are changed and improved sewage systems constructed.

Individual efforts must be directed to switching back to the old methods of laundering . . . using soap flakes or powders in combination with water-softening washing soda. According to laundry product testing by United States environmental engineers, soap products and washing soda each contain less than one percent phosphates, and when the two are used together they produce a good wash.

The major hang-up is locating the soap and soda. Although both are staples on supermarket laundry supply shelves, they're so vastly outnumbered by the high-phosphate products that it takes some searching and reading of package ingredients to find them. To further add to the confusion, those who have grown up in the detergent generation do not realize that a detergent is not a soap. So check labels and buy only products that won't pollute our waters.

Ahhhhh!

To the editor.

Miss McCaffrey: The sentence "Power to the WISE.", is found at the end of your letter of March 18. I'm not sure yet whether it was misplaced; it doesn't seem to fit. Your idea of "the new silent majority" intrigues me, but I see no difference from the old silent majority.

I shall assume that you have been alive for the past six years, but I won't venture to say to what extent. If my assumption is correct, then you must be aware that the U.S. has been involved in some sort of conflict in Vietnam. I know this because I find articles about it in the newspapers every day. Furthermore, I have a certain opinion about that conflict because I read the newspapers and have for sometime in the past. I've even read books written about Vietnam, and after six years of "mature, rational weighing of all possibilities", by some strange twist of fate, I've formulated a definite opinion, and I expressed it by voting.

As for you, it seems that after six years, you still don't know which way to vote. All I can deduce is that either your non-apathy is a recent development or you can't read. If the former is true, I congratulate you; but, please, before you write another letter, do some reading.

To the editor:

The emotional debate on the Middle East has been ensuing on these pages for some time now. However, precisely because it has been emotional, there has been little focus on primary issue: Palestinian citizens and their homeland - or lack of it. Israeli protagonists continually harp on other issues: "racism" in Syria and Iraq; war statements by Nasser; murders in Sudan.

This, however, is no defense for the facist policies perpetrated by the Zionist influenced government of Israel. I see as racist Golda Meir's claim that Palestinians are merely "southern Syrians." I see as racist the inability of many Jews (and non-Jewish supporters) to distinguish between Palestinians and other Arabs in the area. I see as racist Ben Gurion's statement that Israel must become "an outpost of Western Civilization" in the Middle East. I see as racist the building of agricultural centers and holiday resorts in occupied territories.

And to Leora Baron from Israel: I have in fact been there. The experience did provide me with a number of insights, one being that Israeli nationalism is so pervasive that it is difficult to ascertain a clear picture of exactly what is happening to the Palestinians. I suggest a visit to Jordanian - or Lebanese-based refugee camps, where one can see first-hand the human degradation that Zionist imperialists have imposed upon the Palestinians. Another insight discovered in Israel: regardless of how many groups "Black Jews" refers to, they are in fact objects of blatant discrimination.

Arie Sadovsky is concerned about the latest Arab propaganda. Surely he could not complain, with the U.S. government and the mass media daily expounding the Israeli viewpoint, making it virtually impossible for the Palestinian side to be fairly presented. Many people today are finally attaining some degree of empathy for the Vietnamese. Cannot the Jews shirk off some of their ethnocentrism and empathise with the Palestinians? Can they not see that for many Palestinians, whose parents and grandparents have lived in Palestine, the situation is one in which a constant flow of Europeans have taken over the land, forcing them to leave their homes? And from an objective viewpoint, it is rather absurd for a religious group, of all things, to claim sovereignty of an area of land at the expense of the people already living there.

The burden clearly rests with the Israeli's to take the initiative, to see for the sharing of Palestine, to recognize the Palestinians for what they are - a separate and sovereign national entity - and to demonstrate the magnanimity that they have always claimed to possess.

To the editor:

Nowadays, many conservatives when confronted with the question of war and its value to society, bring up the fact that "Look at your fathers who have died to give you the freedom which you now possess. Men who gave their lives!"

It is like they can't be noble and clean about it. They continually bring up spilt milk. They can't let old favors lie (and I suppose we have to take these old vets' word that it was a favor). Could you see Richard Burton clad in toga, in an ancient picture at the height of Roman society saying: Look! they died so you could have this freedom! There seems to be something sick about this cornyness. Yes. . . . to die gung-ho for one's country is like running out in front of a speeding ambulance just for the rush. And it's organized kosher bonafied suicide too. Don't knock what you don't dig, even if it's mass masochism . . . true . . . but phony justice is the canvas for all satire. Who knows (to mention Hitler again on the editorial page), Hitler's bones may be secretly fertilizing Flander's Fields; a catastrophe! Some good men are lying out there. Investigate the graves immediately!

Better look at present addictions like the military-industrial complex and the sellouts who sit in Congress to vote funds for death-addiction. Surely that is the whole act to the deodorant-jar side of America . . . spraying little cans of deodorant to freshen the polluted air. Better check the source. Here! spray this friends romans countrymen . . . lend me your money.

Placement Office Suggests Prospects for Summer Jobs

By WILLIAM T. WOODS
Staff Reporter

The Office of Placement and Financial Aid has stated in a recent interview with the Daily Collegian that they can help undergraduates with the problem of summer jobs; if not in actually placing students, then at least in offering valuable advice as to where to look for employment.

The key point to remember is that since students are seasonal workers, then the best places to look for jobs are in seasonal industries. The first thing to come to mind here, of course, is the resort industry. The resort and tourist areas, especially the Cape, offer an abundance of seasonal jobs, particularly service jobs, like waiters and bar maids. This is ideal for a person going away for the whole summer except the pay is not too great. Selling ice cream around Boston could be a more profitable venture. Try Brigham's or Friendly's.

An exception to the rule of seasonal employment is a program used by several large companies to get juniors who want to serve as trainees. The emphasis is, of course, on future permanent employment, but the pay is good and the experience can be invaluable. There are about 200 to 300 agencies offering this program, mostly in the technical fields. NASA, Kodak, and Bethleham Steel are but a few. For more information see Mr. Emery in the Placement Office.

The interest in summer camp counseling jobs has increased greatly in the past few years. The pay may average about $500 for the whole summer, but this includes room and board, and it can also provide experience for social science majors as well as a hell of a lot more fun than working in an office. There are positions available to both sexes, but it must be mentioned that NOW is the time to apply.

If you are thinking of a job in retail sales, remember that the summer is not too profitable for places like Jordan's and Filenes. Also, forget about Amherst, which is dead during the summer.

A good place to work if one doesn't mind hard work is in a factory. Places like rubber or textile factories need people to take up the slack of vacationers. The pay here can be really good.

The best pay around is in construction, but one has to know someone. It has been found that over 50% of the summer jobs are available only through "connections". This includes jobs like MDC work or jobs with different municipalities.

Stores like Stop and Shop or First National could be good except that they tend to favor high school juniors who can work after school come September.

If you think the prospects of a summer job look dim, you can blame it on Nixon's war on inflation, or you can see the Placement Office. Good Luck.

WFCR's Call-in Discusses Program for Model Cities

This Sunday evening at 9 o' clock WFCR's CALL-IN program will feature a prerecorded interview with David Nesbitt, Director of the Springfield Model Cities Agency. The interview, conducted by Art Cohen and Mark Mills, includes an explanation of how the Model Cities program works, what problems it must over come, and how Mr. Nesbitt's department plans to achieve success.

The final portion of CALL-IN will be a discussion of the Connecticut River Diversion Project. Springfield attorneys Victor Gagnon and Jim Coyle will explain their opposition to the project. Listeners can speak with Mr. Gagnon and Mr. Coyle on the air by calling collect at 545-0100 (413).

Senior Job Placement Affected by Inflation

By WILLIAM T. WOODS
Staff Reporter

It seems that the overall decline in senior job placement at this university can be traced almost exclusively to President Nixon's attempts to control inflation, rather than to the disruptive tactics of radical protestors. According to the Office of Placement and Financial Aid, many companies and industrial concerns in this country are currently caught up in a general business slowdown, and their internal personnel adjustments have caused a decrease in demand for college seniors.

The office commented further, saying that recent demonstrations against defense related industries have not caused an abnormal number of students to absent themselves from interviews, nor have they caused considerable disenchantment towards UMass on the part of the companies, as even Honeywell said that they would return next year.

Some "school systems" however, have been less than pleased with the lack of "ordinary operation of interviews." The Faculty and Student Senates have responded to the protests by establishing advisory commissions that are on hand to observe the demonstrations and then meet with the Chancellor to recommend what action, if any, should be taken.

The general business slowdown is reflected in figures released by the College Placement Council's Salary Survey. The Survey reports that "there is a substantially smaller number of offers being made to college seniors" - in fact, they have dropped 20% since last year. "In average dollar value of offers, the averages have continued to go up at a slower rate than in recent years." Non-technical fields are up from $711 a month last year to $746 this year, largely due to the rapid gains of accounting majors. The average for technical disciplines has gone from $819 to $846.

Here at UMass, engineering majors have traditionally been the most sought after graduates. Although they continue to remain on top in both offers made and salary average, their bargaining position has been weakened slightly. Accounting positions have registered an enormous growth rate in recent years. On the other hand, the demand for liberal arts majors continues to decrease.

Each year about 200 to 300 different companies make arrangements with the Placement Office to visit the campus. Prospective candidates then arrange with the office for an interview with the company, government agency, or graduate school, keeping in mind the published requirements of the particular agency.

In recent years UMass has had an average graduating class of about 3200. The office usually places about 700 of these with various companies across the country, with about 400 students going on to graduate work in 25 to 30 mostly eastern schools. The average salary has run close to $8000 for arts and science majors, while engineers and accountants have received a starting wage of $10,000.

Oversupply of Teachers: A Demand for Counselors

"The trend is now toward an oversupply of teachers," Robert C. White, Educational Placement Officer of UMass at Amherst, said in a recent interview. "The national trend in the 60's has gone from stabilization in teacher-supply-and-demand to oversupply," he said. The outlook for this year is that fields such as English and Social Studies will be deluged by applicants, and there will be fewer positions available than applicants.

"Demand for secondary teachers is still great in fields such as Math and the physical sciences," White said. "One demand now and for the future in education is for specialists," he added. Current demand is for guidance counselors, both high school and elementary, reading specialists, and teachers of speech, audio, and emotional defects.

White succeeded Charles Smith to the post of Education Placement Officer. Upon graduation from the University of Maine, White taught in secondary school for three years and was a guidance counselor for seven years before he went on a sabbatical leave which brought him to the University. He said that he accepted this particular position because his interest has always been in counseling and in affecting legislative changes in public schools.

"I just kept going from position to position as the need and opportunity arose," he said.

As Educational Placement Officer, White said he has three main duties: (1) to supply credentials from students to employers; (2) to help facilitate state teacher certification; and (3) to help students find jobs. He is concerned about the students at the University who come seeking help.

"I see the main duties of my position going beyond that of a director. Besides placing students," White said, "A director is also a counselor." Students must be made to realize where the demands of the professionals are and should in turn, try to apply their skills to meet the demands.

"My job is to make these students aware of where the demand is," he said.

"Demand for specialists, today, is as great as demand for teachers was several years ago." White said. As to whether the need would be filled by the time freshmen were ready to graduate, White said that it was "possible". He summed up his feeling by emphasizing the fact that education, today, must be a training for change.

UMass to Institute Course Evaluations

Course evaluations may be instituted in the College of Arts and Sciences and the School of Business Administration next fall, according to Louis Morrell, Director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies.

A questionnaire has been sent to faculty members of CAS, sounding them out on the possibility, while SBA is trying to devise a course evaluation form which will serve for questioning both students and faculty, Morrell stated.

The adoption of the practice is probable, the remaining problems being mainly of the content and format for the evaluations, he said.

Course evaluation Mr. Morrell pointed out has been a practice long used by Harvard. UMass had had no evaluations since the discontinuance of the student magazine critique.

The director also believes that more attempts will be made at establishing student feedback and participation in the governing of the university, and probably through that office. He mentioned the possibility of student-faculty committees and the use of questionnaires and surveys to study the attitudes and profiles of students.

UMass Gymnasts: 4th in Eastern, 2nd in NE

Review of Gymnastics Season Highlights Seniors' Roles

By JOE PARNAR
Staff Reporter

Enjoying a successful season this past winter, the Redman varsity gymnasts finished fourth in the Eastern League with a 5-3 record, beside placing second in the New England Championships. The UMass success is due largely to the contributions of the four graduating seniors, co-captain Mike Kasavana, Joe Reed, Joe Godwin and Frank Dean.

Kasavana, who came to UMass with relatively little experience in gymnastics, began his career on trampoline as a sophomore. In the span of two years, he developed into a strong performer and placed seventh in the event at the Easterns.

The following year trampoline was discontinued and Kasavana started working floor exercise. His natural ability and hard work in gymnastics is evident by the fact that he has scored as high as 8.9 in this event this past season. He also finished second on the trampoline (conducted as a special event) at the New Englands this year. Kasavana's skill as well as leadership ability will be missed by the Redmen next season.

There is hardly a UMass gymnastics fan who has not heard of Joe Reed. Reed literally wrote the UMass record books during his career as he accounted for more points than any other gymnast in the history of the school. He has been the high all-around performer since his sophomore year and recently finished sixth on rings and eighth on high bar at the Eastern championships.

Godwin and Dean have made major contributions to the Redmen by supplying depth, one of the most important factors in winning team. Godwin was a stylish performer in floor exercise, scoring in the mid-eights throughout the season. Dean proved a valuable asset on side horse for UMass, accounting for valuable points in some of the Redmen's closest meets.

The Redmen started the season in strong fashion, scoring a one-sided victory over Syracuse and winning close meets from Southern Connecticut State College and Army.

In its fourth meet UMass ran into a Penn State team that was still fuming from a close loss to Springfield College, its first at home in 13 years. Although the Redmen performed admirably, they came out on the short end of a 162-156 score.

UMass then went on a two-game winning streak, downing Pittsburgh and Navy. The Navy win was especially pleasing for the Redmen in that the outcome could have gone either way. UM came through with an outstanding team effort to win, 159.65 - 157.00

Redman dreams of a tie for the Eastern League title came to an end when UMass met undefeated Springfield College. Springfield won easily in what had to be the most disappointing meet of the season for UMass. The score of the contest was Springfield 159, UMass 157.

In the last regular meet of the year, UMass ran into an outstanding Temple squad that had suffered a .10 loss to Springfield early in the season but had defeated Penn State, 160-156. The Redmen lost and finished the regular season with a 5-3 record, Temple later placed first in the NCAA Eastern qualifying meet to win the right to represent the Eastern League in the Nationals.

The Redmen closed out the season by finishing second at the New England Championships, losing to Springfield by .7 and beating Southern Conn by .5.

In order to fill the positions left by the graduating seniors, the Redmen will be counting heavily upon their returning lettermen and personnel that have seen only limited action this past season. In floor exercise Bob Nelligan and John Calabria will be likely candidates to fill the vacancies left by Kasavana and Godwin. Both did an outstanding job at the New Englands. Another promising performer in this event is Bill McCauley who has a great deal of potential.

On side horse the Redmen have a number of performers who will be competing for starting berths. They are John Walsh, Wayne Bell, Ed Jones and Dana Hastings.

In the long horse vault and parallel bars, Bob Henry and Dave Genest will be heavily counted on. Genest was a UMass starter in the early part of the season but sustained a knee injury which put him out of competition. His recovery will greatly strengthen the Redmen in both of these events next year.

The high bar event appears to be one of the brightest spots for the Redmen in the future. Returning from this year's squad will be Tom Mysliicki, Scott Stover, Tony Vacca and Norm Vexler. Mysliicki, Stover and Vacca combined for a 9.0 average in the event at the New Englands last weekend.

With the experience gained this past season the Redmen could very well have the strongest high bar team in the League next year. Added depth is provided by Doug Salisbury who has made excellent progress.

In the all-around event Vexler and Vacca will carry the load. Vexler, an all-around competitor who has no weak event, is capable of 9.0 or better on side horse and rings. He scored a 9.2 in the rings event at the New Englands.

Vacca appears to be a strong candidate to replace Reed. In four of the six events he has, on occasion, scored 9.0 or better. He also has received eights in the fifth event, the rings. Vacca's only weak event is side horse. With steady improvement here, he could very well be one of the top all-around performers in the Eastern League.

Another returning letterman who has helped UMass throughout the season and who will be counted on heavily next season is co-captain Steve Cary. Cary scored in the nines in the long horse vault all season and also scored in the same range on parallel bars. He placed fifth on long horse at the Eastern this year.

Erving Unanimous All-NE

BOSTON (AP) - Julius Erving of UMass and John Fultz of the University of Rhode Island were both near unanimous selections on the 1970 All-New England basketball team named Friday by The Associated Press.

The two Yankee Conference players were joined on the first team by Greg Hill of AIC, Jim O'Brien of Boston College and Bob Kissane of Holy Cross.

Erving, a sensational sophomore, led major college players in New England in both scoring and rebounding. The 6'5 forward from Roosevelt, N.Y. averaged 26 points a game and 21.2 rebounds, second best in the country.

Fultz, a senior, averaged 21.5 points and ended his career as the third highest scorer in Rhode Island history. He was a second-team All-New England selection last year.

Redman Lacrosse Seeks to Fill Gaps, Retain NE Crown

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Filling the gaps left by the graduation of 14 seniors and three All-Americans and preparing to defend its' New England title will be the major goals of the UMass lacrosse team as it heads South for a week of scrimmages against some of the finest competition in the country.

The stickmen, led by co-captains Tom Malone and Bill De Vore, face Lowell Tech and the Conn. Valley Lacrosse Club at home this weekend, before travelling to the heart of "Lacrosse Country", New Jersey and Delaware, next week.

The Redmen will be at Princeton for two days, scrimmaging Princeton and Lafayette and will then travel to Delaware where the competition will be the U. of Delaware and Bowling Green U. On Friday, they will head home, stopping at Long Island to play Nassau College, which has become a feeding ground for UMass lacrosse players.

Coach Dick Garber, one of the most successful lacross mentors in the country, has the biggest gaps to fill at the midfield position. The attack is still strong, despite the loss of All-American Kevin O'Connor and Gary Vassar. Tom "Rodent" Malone, himself an All-American, will be the heart of the attack and the offense will be built around him. Tom led the team in scoring last year with 88 points in ten games (the scoring is equivalent to hockey) and holds most UMass scoring records after only one season.

Paul Wickman, another senior, has been moved from midfield to attack in an attempt to boost the offense. Wickman missed most of last season with an injury, but coach Garber feels he has a great deal of potential. Junior Steve Herschopf is in contention for the third position, but is receiving stiff competition from Sophomores Paul Rich and Bob Waters.

Defense should be the Redmen's strongest point this season. Johnny Orr, who Garber considers in a class by himself as a goalie, will be in the nets and hockey netminder Bruce Crawford will back him up. Veteran defensemen Al Ruggiano and Joe Smith, along with co-captain DeVore are returning, and Fran Bositis is also doing a fine job. Roy Condon, who was a starter until he got injured last year, has broken his ankle and may be out for the season. Sophs Bill Walsh and John Lindsay are also in contention for starting jobs.

Garber is fairly optimistic about the midfield, but he admits the team will feel the loss of last year's seniors, who gave the Redmen the best set of midfields in New England. Gone are All-American Steve Connolly, Steve Chambers, Jerry Forgit and Steve Anderson, but Garber hopes the current crop can do the job.

Seniors Bob LaChance and Bob Florin saw a lot of action last year as did Junior John Gannon, and they will probably be prominant in Garber's plans. Jim Mc guire, Larry Diamond, Kurt Moore and Dale Basukas are also returning and they will be joined by sophs Dana Stone, Al Alessi, Paul Schachter and Karl Leuders. Nassau transfers Paul Sheridan and Lew Maranacci will also help out.

The Redmen have two scrimmages after vacation before opening the season at home on April 15 against Middlebury.

Kasko's Job. Mending The Red Sox

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - - "I always go under the assumption that they are pros and know what they have to do."

Eddie Kasko, rookie manager of the Boston Red Sox, summed up his philosophy in those words. He is stepping into a delicate situation as successor to Dick Williams, who won the "miracle pennant" in 1967 and was fired last year because of "a communication breakdown between the managerial staff and the players."

A fringe player with the Red Sox in 1966, Kasko spent some ten years in the majors as an infielder at St. Louis, Cincinnati, Houston and Boston. He has been managing the Sox's top Triple A farm clubs for the past three years.

"I don't know what went on here last year," Kasko said. "I know the spirit is great this spring."

Pitching was the big headache last year, largely because of an epidemic of injuries and sore arms. Early reports are encouraging on Jim Lonborg, Ray Culp and Sonny Siebert, who were hurting in 1969.

The addition of Gary Peters, twice and earned-run leader with Chicago, has to help.

Ken Brett, a young lefty who was with Kasko in Louisville part of last season, may be ready to take over a starting job.

Siebert and Vincente Romo, both acquired from Cleveland last year, will either start or do long relief. Mike Nagy, the 12-2 rookie flash, is in service until late March, but is due to start. Al "Sparky" Lyle developed into a fine bullpen stopper and he will have help from Lee Stange and possibly Jose Santiago.

The big experiment in camp is the shift of Luis Alvarado, rookie-of-the-year and most valuable player in the International League, from a shortstop to a third baseman.

If it works, George Scott will play first, Mike Andrews second and Rico Petrocelli will be back at short.

'69-70 Grapplers Termed "Finest"

Non-Senior Wrestling Squad Achieves Best Mark at 16-4

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

The finest wrestling team in UMass history. This was the label earned by the matmen this year as a completely non-senior squad compiled the school's best wrestling record, 16-4, and its second place finish in the New England tourney was the best showing for the Redmen in that event.

Coach Homer Barr, who has taken the wrestling program from one of mediocrity and transformed it into one of excellence, was apprehensive about the season last December. The squad consisted of the members of the freshman wrestling teams which had won the frosh New Englands two straight years. Barr knew he had the material but, because of a tough early-season schedule he feared that a few losses might demoralize the team.

The first part of the season went just as he predicted, when he expressed his hope that the team would be .500 at Christmas. The Redmen started quickly, romping over Rhode Island and Tufts and increasing their record to 3-0 with a 29-1. win over Amherst.

At this point, however, the Redmen traveled to Pennsylvania and received a lesson in wrestling. They lost to Bloomsburg State, Ohio U. and Indiana (Pa.) State and won only six matches in the process. Tom Young was the only bright spot for UMass as he scored a win and a tie in three matches.

The Redmen, however, didn't get demoralized and showed great promise in an impressive 26-13 win over Harvard. This left the Redmen at 4-3 and they faced a five-week layoff before coming back to meet three tough teams after vacation, Coast Guard, Central Conn. and Springfield.

At this point, the basketball team was starting its move toward New England supremacy and the wrestlers became just as hot. Winning 13 out of their last 14 and the final ten in a row, the matmen compiled a 16-4 record and earned a all won for a 22-11 victory. This seemed to pick up the Redmen, ranked third at the time, and they climbed one notch in the standings the next day, defeating second - ranked Central Conn., 26-11. Sheldon Goldberg tied Central's finest wrestler, Henry Marchetti and the Redmen coasted from there.

UMass had a chance to move to the top of the rankings when it faced Spring - field, but unlike the basketball team, it just couldn't do it. The Chiefs won all the close matches, while the Redmen had to settle for an Andrewes decision and draws by Goldberg and Jester in a 27-7 loss.

The team went on to win its final ten meets, but because the competition wasn't of Spring - field's calibre, it had to look toward the tourney as a means to revenge. The Redmen scored routs over Williams, Monmouth, Maritime, UNH, WPI, MIT and BC in the streak; only UConn, Kings Pt. and Dartmouth could hold them under thirty points.

Barr was optimistic about the tourney, because he felt the team was much better, with several of the wrestlers going at lighter weights. Once again he predicted right, saying seven UMass matmen would place, but, of the seven, in reality only two won. Young and Goldberg, both top-seeded in their weight classes, had little trouble winning. Dave Reynolds came within a whisker of joining them, but a last-second takedown made him settle for second place.

Zguris made a strong bid to repeat as champ of the 190-lb. class, but Gary Sklaver of Amherst proved to be too much and Zguris was also a runnerup. Close losses in the semi-finals by Jim Godkin, Jester and Buckbee hurt the Redman chances and the team finished second to Springfield for the second time in the season.

Individually, the team members had successful seasons. Nick DiDomenico, wrestling the entire season at 118 lbs., had a 15-4 record and lost only once in New England. Reynolds and Rick Tyma split the chores at 126 and both did a fine job. Reynolds ended up at 10-5-1 and a second place in the tourney while Tyma was 4-1.

Goldberg and Phil Davis wrestled at 134. The former had a 12-2-3 record, many of which were at 142, and he was undefeated in New England and tourney champ. Davis finished with a 6-5 record and was a very valuable man to have, because Coach Barr was able to use him at several weights.

Jester wrestled at 150 and 142in compiling an 11-4-1 mark. He also finished unbeaten in New England until he finished fourth in the tournament. Godkin had an 8-7 record at 150, but came on strong to place third in the New Englands. Mike Brauner was another wrestler who went undefeated in New England, and he had an overall record of 8-3-1 at 158.

Young, who didn't wrestle until mid-season, came on to win the tourney. He finished at 8-3-1. Kent Mignocci also wrestled at 167 and finished with a 4-5 mark.

The 177-lb. class proved to be the Redmen's finest weight class. Andrewes, wrestling for the first part of the season, had a 6-0-1 record and Buckbee, who didn't wrestle until second semester, compiled an impressive 12-1 mark and a third in the New Englands.

Zguris, splitting duty between 190 and heavyweight, was 10-5-1 and second in the tourney. Chris Hodson wrestled at the latter part of the year and finished at 6-2. Other wrestlers who contributed to the cause were Barry Godowsky, Steve Jones and Tim Perkins.

Young, Goldberg, Reynolds, and Zguris will be rewarded for their fine efforts in the New England tourney when they head out to Northwestern University in Evanstown, Ill. next week for the NCAA University Division championships.

Baseballers, Hurt by Graduation and Draft, Open Season

Redmen vs. Richmond as 1970 Campaign Begins Tomorrow

We're District One Champs and we'll still be until someone can beat us." This is the feeling of the 1970 edition of UMass baseball, which opens its season tomorrow against the University of Richmond, in the first game of a southern trip that will see the Redmen playing seven games in eight days, the last six games to be played in the University of South Carolina Tournament against the likes of Princeton, Duke, Toledo, Yale and the host team, South Carolina.

Redman baseball has been confined to the Cage since the start of practice and this will pose some problems for the team on this southern trip. There is a big difference between playing in the Cage and playing outdoors.

Pitchers will be experiencing problems with the difference of the air and coach Dick Bergquist sees this as the major problem for his team. Playing on a regulation diamond is a far cry from playing on the dirt floor of the Cage and could pose problems for the fielders.

The Richmond game will be the first time the team has been outdoors and, as Bergquist put it, "we'll have to get out onto the field an hour earlier to find out what it's like playing outdoors."

The coach plans to use all of his pitchers during the trip and will experiment with some of the other positions to find the winning combination to bring back North.

The Redmen were hurt by both graduation and the major league draft last year. John Kitchen, who pitched so well in the College World Series last June, was drafted by the St. Louis Cardinals, and Bob Hansen and Joe DiSarcina were drafted by the Seattle Pilots and San Diego Padres, respectively. The loss of the power-hitting Hanson and the steady .300 hitting of DiSarcina, along with the graduation of Tony Chinappi and Dick Pepin, has left a big void in the number two, three, four and five positions in the batting order.

With these hitters the Redmen could count on the big inning during the game to ice the victory. But this year's team will have a different style of play. There will be more bunting, more hit and run and more speed on the basepaths. The team is very enthusiastic and coach Bergquist is looking forward to the up and coming season with the same amount of enthusiasm and spirit that his team has displayed so far during the practice sessions.

Redman pitching will have more depth this year than it did last year. Junior Don Anderson, who posted a 7-2 record last season, good enough for all-New England and all-Yankee Conference selections will be the top starting right-hander for the team.

Lou Colabello, also a junior, gives the Redmen a top notch left-handed started. He pitched well in the College World Series and Bergquist is looking for him to continue this type of pitching this season. After a year lay-off senior Rich Rapolli will step to the mound as a starter for the Redmen. Rapolli is a senior right-hander and, along with Anderson, should give the Redmen good right-handed starting pitchers.

Jack Bernardo heads the relief pitchers this season. He will be joined in the bullpen by sophomore Tom Austin, and Bob Fishera, a senior transfer student from Nevada Southern. Tom King, a left-handed pitcher, has had arm problems during practice and Bergquist is hoping that the warm southern weather will help his arm.

Chuck Newell will be starting behind the plate this year. He's a good defensive catcher and can control the game very well. Backing him up are Mike Sawyer, Bob Williams and Paul Sulzicki.

The UMass infield is a solid defensive unit with good speed and agility. Ray Ellerbrook, dur to the long basketball season, has had a slow start but, as soon as the season is a few games old, he will return to the form which made him all-YC last season.

Speedster Hosea Kelly, a sophomore, gives UMass a solid performer at second base, due to the running will be a big asset to the team this year.

His double-play partner at short stop is Joe Gugliotta, who will be filling the gap left by DiSarcina. He has big shoes to fill and coach Bergquist feels that he can do the job that is expected of him.

Rounding out the infield at third is captain Tom Semino, who was all-YC as a second baseman last season, but has made the move to third to strengthen that position and still have his former position strong with Kelly taking over.

Backing up these infielders will be Warren Mason, Jim Saracino, Tim Berringer and Jack Conroy.

The outfield has two sure starters and one other starter, pending the examination of his operated-on arm. The two sure starters will be Brian Martin, a sophomore who is a good, solid hitter. Steve Rogers is the other starter. He's a senior and is coming back after a year lay-off. Mitch Salnick is the other starter, pending examination of his arm. He hit .281 last season and would be a solid perseason.

Coach Bergquist will be counting on Ellerbrook, Semino, Rogers and Martin to carry the big offensive load this season. He sees the defense as a key in holding the opposition down throughout the schedule. And he sees the pitching depth as a big factor in another bid for top honors in District One.

On return from the southern trip the team begins an intense northern schedule, playing twenty games in just five weeks. "But that's New England baseball," isn't that what the other coaches at Omaha said last June?

Mayor White Leads Boston's Campaign Against Pollution

Man is threatening his own existance, in urban centers, by constantly adding poisons to his environment. Pollution, from noise and air to sewage, has left the available natural resources largely unsuitable without scientific treatment.

To date, few American city administrations have answered the rising pollution levels with concrete actions. Actions aimed at curbing or stopping present and future polluters by setting standards and enforcing these strictly.

Boston's Mayor Kevin H. White is reputed to lead such an action-oriented city administration. In a recent interview, Mayor White discussed some of his environmental quality improvement efforts.

He first talked about his recent establishment of a "Clean Air Zone" over Boston. This program, unprecedented in the United States, was accomplished by issuing an Executive Order. He said, "This 'Clean Air Zone' will be achieved through strict enforcement of new regulations that ban or rigidly control the use of all high sulphur fuels."

"These new regulations will eliminate at least 50% of the dirt and dust in the air and 80% of the sulphur dioxide in Boston's atmosphere," he added. Without exception all industries, businesses, commercial installations, public facilities, and large apartment houses that now burn heavy fuel oil must switch to alternate heating methods. Further, those places where high suphur fuel is used have until October 1, 1970 to find a different, less polluting fuel. Homeowners mostly burn a distillate oil and will not be affected."

Automobiles contribute much carbon monoxide, and other deadly gases, to Boston's "Air Zone". Approximately two thirds of all air pollution comes from this source.

The Mayor reiterated his frequest request for immediate curtailment of all highway construction in Boston. Quoting from his December 17 letter to Governor Francis Sargent, Mayor White asked, "Many public officials--in - cluding yourself--have cited housing and air pollution as two of the gravest problems facing our area. How then can we contemplate going ahead with a program (of building highways) which will seriously aggravate both these crises before we have developed solutions to these problems?"

"Your interest in controlling emissions from automobiles is solidly based on the evidence that these emissions are the greatest single source of air pollution." White then asked, "Why then should Boston be asked to cooperate in the building of a highway system which will facilitate the entry of vehicles into this city and further pollute an already dangerously poisoned atmosphere?"

Three months have passed with no response from the Governor. No reply has been offered yet. Then officially, Sargent declared a moratorium on all highway construction in Boston.

The Mayor spoke of the necessity of adequate public transportation as a viable alternative to the private automobile. He termed unacceptable what the city had to offer for public transportation. He stated that part of the reason for this is the heavy traffic resulting from Boston's position at the end of the busy Northeast aia corridor. Legislation he filed in the State General Court last January would, if enacted, rechannel money from highway construction programs into building facilities to accommodate this heavy traffic. "This shift of construction priorities is the only sensible policy for both Boston and the Commonwealth," he added.

A recent study reveled that roughly 40% of Logan Airport's passengers are going to the New York area. Even three airports there cannot handle this traffic easily. The need to develop alternatives, such as a high speed ground transport system, is urgent.

Addressing an investigating Congressional Sub-Committee recently, Mayor White said that such a high speed system "would be the heart of an efficient transportation network for all New England." He estimated that half of Logan's passengers would utilize such a facility if offered, re - ducing Logan's use by about 20%.

Mayor White then mentioned some of his lesser known activities aimed at controlling pollution in Boston.

The idling, parked MBTA buses recently drew sharp criticism. In a letter (Dec. 27) to Leo Cusick, General Manager of the MBTA, White suggested that the seemingly simple act of turning off buses not in use, would aid substantially in reducing blue clouds of exhaust near the terminals.

A long-standing battle over noise pollution has continued be - tween Mayor White and the Department of Transport, specifically over Logan and Port Authority. This has recently climaxed by the Mayor, on behalf of the City, bringing a law suit against the DOT to have them release a study on noise standards at Logan International Airport, The Mayor called the present levels "intolerable."

The Mayor also pointed to some of the restrictions he faces in his efforts to imporve Boston's environment. Air pollution drifts into Boston from surrounding communities. Metropolitan actions are thwarted to some degree by the addition of this pollution, where only State-wide legislation would be effective. Also, the Governor has an executive order available to move against polluters and speed up the governmental process by setting new standards. "The Governor's lack of action," the Mayor quiped, "has put Boston in a very uncomfortable position."

Optimism for a cleaner Boston environment was obvious in the tone of the Mayor's dialoge. He anticipates City Council and citizen support for his new programs and feels that a strong, positive start has been made.

Speaking on the many environmental programs advanced and the very few followed through, White said, "Promises, gone up in smoke, contribute to air pollution."

Where and When to Find The Mayor

Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston will speak on "The City is the People" at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst Wednesday, April 1, at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

His talk, open to the public without charge, is sponsored by two UMass student groups: the Urban Affairs Organization and the Young Democrats.

Mayor White's afternoon itinerary will include a coffee hour in Lewis House from 4:00 - 4:30 p.m. The public is invited. After the coffee hour he will tour the Northeast Area and visit the Northeast Dining Commons and the Campus Center. Prior to his speech, the Mayor will meet with the press in the Student Union.

In his 18 months in office, Mayor White has emphasized the importance of decentralizing city government, bringing it close to the people and making it more responsive to people's needs. To this end he has established and staffed 12 "Little City Halls" at strategic points throughout Boston.

Before his election as mayor in 1967, Mayor White was Secretary of the Commonwealth, first elected to the post in 1960 and re-elected in 1962, 1964, and 1966 by increasing margins. From 1965 to 1960 he was assistant district attorney for Suffolk County.

Special Summer Courses For Credit-Short Seniors

Some students needing only one or two courses to graduate have requested that a Special Session be arranged offering certain basic courses as early in the summer as possible.

The Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee polled the student body in the fall and arrived at a list of six courses. Arrangements have been made now to offer them, but they have not been scheduled.

Students may sign up for TWO COURSES; when sign-up is complete, the courses will be scheduled to minimize conflicts, since we have no idea in advance what combinations of courses will draw the most interest. MINIMUM ENROLLMENT IN EACH COURSE IS 12: if 12 people do not sign up for a course, it will not be offered.

Dates: June 1 to July 10
Final Date to Sign up for Special Session: APRIL 10, FRIDAY
Where to Apply: Registrar's Office, Mrs. Cogswell
Housing and Dining: Southwest
Priorities: Seniors needing courses to graduate first, others in order of date of application.

Open Meeting Hears Comm. Recommendations

By DENISE MAGNELL
Monday Issue Editor

At a specially scheduled open meeting of the Student Senate last night in the Union Ballroom, Treasurer Kenneth Johnson presented the revised recommendations of the President's Advisory Committee on Rents and Fees.

In opening, Johnson stated that he finds "recommending any increase very unpleasant, but the University has exhausted all alternatives under the self-liquidating plan of the resident halls."

The new figures for the rent hike are as follows: $250 per semester in the traditional dorms (not including renovated Lewis House in the Northeast area), $280 per semester for Projects 1-10 (Southwest, Orchard Hill), and Lewis House, and $325 per semester for Project 12 (new suite-type dorms being constructed behind W?PE).

On a yearly basis, the revised amounts are $50 less for traditionals, $40 less for Projects 1-10, and $80 less for Project 12 than originally stated in the first proposal for a rent hike.

The three saving factors responsible for lowering the rent hike are projections of (1) a 95% occupancy rate in resident halls next year for both the fall and spring semesters, (2) the deferment of a $200,000 per year payment on loan debts, and (3) the lowering of the interest rates on bank financing from 7% to 6%.

Following the Treasurer's speech, a question period was made open to Senate and non-Senate members of the audience.

Asked about the University's policy of fees in comparison to the national average, Johnson replied, "Our policy is to keep tuition and fees as low as possible and certainly not above the national average."

Associate Treasurer Robert Brand gave, too, the revised repair figures for resident halls. They were $213,000 for Project 1-10, $50,000 for Project 12, and $6,600 for traditionals (necessitated by the need for extensive repair and refurbishing within these older dorms).

Area co-ordinator Bill Idol stated in rebuttal that "student damage is not significant in the rent increase and if considered as such, is misleading."

A motion to g o into special business was made by Senator Daniel Madden concerning the Student Senate's acceptance of the President's Report.

Debating for the Senate's disapproval and non-acceptance of the study, Madden was joined by Senator Larry Woods who said, "We are not saying that the committee did a bad job, we are just saying they did not do a good enough job."

A meeting of the Board of Trustees Committee on Buildings and Grounds will be open to the public tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. in Hampden Dining Commons (#7), Southwest, at which time the first in a series of final measures will be take n concerning the revised rent hike.

WFCR Wins Award

WFCR, Five College Radio in Amherst, Massachusetts, has won top prize in the Music Category, Non-Commercial Division, of the 1969 Major Armstrong FM Awards for the program "Carlos Montoya: Flamenco Guitarist."

The National "Major" Armstrong Awards are made for excellence and originality in FM Broadcasting and are sponsored by the Armstrong Memorial Research Foundation and administrated by Columbia University. Presentation of the award to WFCR, $500.00 and a bronze plaque, will be made April 4, during the National Association of FM Broadcasters Convention in Chicago.

The "Carlos Montoya" program was produced by Fred Calland, Director of Programming for WFCR, and host of the weekday afternoon program, FRED CALLAND PRESENTS. Mr. Calland talked with Sr. Montoya and his wife Sally in the WFCR studios, and played examples of out-of-print collector's recordings by Sr. Montoya and those of an earlier Flamenco artist, the legendary Nina de los Pelines. The resulting comments and reminiscenses by Montoya served to define the elusive essence of the Flamenco tradition.

Sr. Montoya came to the University of Massachusetts in December of 1969 under the auspices of the Concert Association and the Fine Arts Council at the University.

This is the second Major Armstrong first prize award for WFCR. In 1967 WFCR received the award in the Educational Programming category for the documentary on "Cystic Fibrosis."

Tippo Appoints Littlefield Director of Planning

H. J. Littlefield has been appointed director of planning at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, Chancellor Oswald Tippo has announced.

Mr. Littlefield, a UMass staff member since 1964, was promoted from planning officer. He now coordinates planning for the expansion of the University physical facilities to meet the needs of present and future University growth.

In the construction of new academic buildings, the planning director and his staff are coordinators for the many individuals and processes involved in taking a building project from the initial estimates to appropriation of funds.

The process involves working with faculty on space and other needs, working with the University's Master Planning Committee, establishing priority for buildings, formulating the capital outlay requests, and in general filling a coordinating role for projects until the preliminary design is completed and the construction appropriation has been made.

As planning director, Mr. Littlefield also has responsibility for developing five to ten year capital outlay requests for construction. He has additional responsibility for filing U.S. Office of Education grants for academic building construction. In the past five years the University has received approximately $7.5 million in such grants.

The planning director and staff also initiate utilization studies of existing space on campus and have the responsibility for general space assignments and allocation. The office also coordinates programs for academic renovations and improvements to existing buildings.

A recent project of the office was the implementation of the University's married student housing development off North Pleasant St. The office is now engaged with consultants on a study of future housing for single students.

Also announced by Chancellor Tippo is the addition of a new staff assistant in the Planning Office. He is John McDonough, a graduate of st. Anselm's College with M.A. and Ph. D. degrees from Catholic University. He has been a social worker and teacher in Holyoke, a research intern for the state Board of Higher Education and a congressional intern in the U. S. House of Representatives.

". . . an American politician can still be a leader. He can still be imaginative, resourceful, quieting, attractive, and in many ways an educator. In a recent interview with Kevin White I found him all that."

"A city is not a collection of buildings and homes and shops. It cannot be measured in miles of pavement, the size of parks, or the ledgers of tax collectors. It is a place for people to live and work and raise their children. It is not walls and borders to confine the citizen, but an instrument to liberate his talent and imagination and energy. It is not a fixed and frozen construction of land and concrete, but a living thing constantly changing under the impact of clashing desires. It is not only shaped by us, but it shapes the quality and nature of our own lives. It is a place not only to pursue existence, but, in the oldest American phrase, to pursue happiness."

Tufts Students Protest Bust, Occupy Hall

MEDFORD, Mass. (AP) - About 175 Tufts University students Monday invaded the University administration building, Ballou Hall, protesting calling of police to the campus for drug raids.

The students said they would continue the occupation until the administration gave substantive responses to demands made by the students in the aftermath of the drug raid on the campus early Saturday morning in which 12 students and four other youths were arrested.

A Tufts spokesman said university administrators planned to remain in the building past normal working hours and possibly through the night. University officials did not plan to call in police except "as a last resort," the spokesman said.

The occupation capped an all-day "mill-in" at Ballou Hall. Dean of Men Alvin Schmidt, whose office coordinated the drug raid with police officials, met with some 35 students early Monday but refused to agree to their demands.

Government Threatens Action Air Controllers Remain 'Sick

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government moved Monday to punish absentees with suspensions and reward with cash and promotions those who have stayed on the job in the continuing air controllers' work stoppage that is creating turmoil in commercial aviation.

There seemed to be no end in sight for the work stoppage as the absentee rate continued to run about 25 per cent for the sixth day in the 21 centers that guide jets on high-altitude flights.

In addition, there were signs that absenteeism was spreading among controllers in individual airport towers.

To make up for the shortage, the Federal Aviation Administration continued to restrict traffic in and out of New York's three airports and Chicago's O'Hare to half the usual flights.

There were delays of up to four hours at some airports on a day when thousands of travelers were returning home from Easter visits.

In Los Angeles, Trans World Airlines cancelled 13 of 37 flights, United cancelled three, and American cancelled four, all to Chicago and the Northeast. The San Francisco airport was accepting only six flights an hour from Southern California.

In 16 control centers, including all but the Far West, 384 controllers out of a scheduled 1,361 reported they were ill, the FAA said. The trouble spots remained the centers at New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Kansas City.

John A. Shaffer, FAA administrator, warned in telegrams to individual absent controllers last week that the government would take prompt action against those who continued in "an illegal strike." Federal employs are forbidden by law to strike.

That action came Monday in a form of "proposed letters of termination." These letters constitute 30 days' notice of dismissal. Under Civil Service Commission regulations, an employe is given opportunity to reply and has rights of appeal to his agency and then to the commission.

Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe said Monday striking controllers will be suspended without pay for a number of days equal to those they were on strike. Controllers who have remained on the job, he said, will receive cash bonuses and preferences in future promotions.

The warnings were contained in the letters mailed Monday to all striking controllers.

Volpe once again minimized the number of controllers on strike, saying 90 per cent remained on the job. Volpe's figures differ markedly from those of the union.

Volpe said the government is planning no further actions on the strike until at least Wednesday when hearings are set in federal courts on a government request for injunction against the strike.

Federal employes get 13 days of sick leave each year and they can accumulate unused leave year by year.

The absent controlers are members of PATCO, The Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, which claims to represent 7,500 of the country's 14,000 controllers.

Rival unions like the National Association of Government Employes and the National Association of Air Traffic Specialists have issued statements opposed to the stoppage. These two unions claim to represent 2,500 and 4,000 controllers respectively.

Missing Link Turns Up in NY

NEW YORK (AP) - An AWOL sailor described as a "missing link" in the investigation of the deaths of a young woman and three youths in Enfield, Conn., turned himself in Monday to city police. He was immediately remanded to the custody of the Armed Services Military Police.

The sailor identified himself as Joseph D. Morin, 25, of Thompsonville, Conn. Enfield, Conn., police said he was wanted for questioning in connection with the slayings last Friday.

Police said Morin walked into the Old Ship Station at the foot of Wall Street and told them he was AWOL, from the Navy in Boston.

He was picked up by the Military Police, and with the permission of city police, placed in a station house detention cell and "held for other authorities."

Connecticut police said Morin allegedly attended a party in an apartment where the slaying took place. They quoted Trevor Senie, 19, of Enfield, as saying Morin was still at the party when he left at 2 a.m. Friday. According to the medical examiner, the slaying occurred around 6 a.m.

Enfield Police Chief, Walter Skewer termed Morin a "missing link" in the murder case, and said Morin, in addition to being AWOL, was wanted on a larceny warrant in connection with another case. He did not elaborate.

The bodies of Linda Edmon 21, and her fiance, Peter Donovan, 19, were found in the apartment.

Found in the living room were the bodies of Paul Vasseur, 17, and David Gurtin, 18, both of Enfield. In the living room, police said, they found a 22-caliber rifle which they presumed to be the murder weapon.

SALVADOR, Brazil (AP) - A rich farmer in northeastern Brazil put an ad in the local paper offering "15 cows, a big house, money and prestige" to any man who would marry his daughter. Within days the young lady had 86 choices.

This is what is commonly known in the vernacular as a "white space." Its use is necessitated by a lack of news to fill a space on a page. Do the news media a favor - go make some news.

Conscription Corner

EDITOR'S NOTE - This is the first appearance of a semi-weekly column on the Selective Service from The Valley Peace Center and The Committee to Repeal the Draft. Any questions or comments on the column should be directed to:
Committee to Repeal the Draft
Fifth Floor Lounge
Washington Tower

It is rather evident that the draft must end and it must end now. Peacetime conscription has proved itself to be ineffective, inequitable, inefficient, undemocratic, and most of all, unamerican. But how can and how should it be ended? What will be necessary to achieve a termination of the draft system? It appears that there are only two remaining tactics which can be used to realize this goal - either Congressional repeal or mass civil disobedience. Either means would probably successfully eliminate the draft system; but, although Congressional repeal would be the easier of the two, apparently both tactics will be essential.

Since the report of the President's Commission on an All - Volunteer Armed Force (the Gates Commission) in February of this year, the possibility for draft repeal in favor of a volunteer armed force has been increasing. It is significant to note, however, that there has been a proliferation of Defense Department statements concerning the infeasibility of a totally voluntary armed force since January and continuing into March of this year. The Commission report has received scant publicity since February, presumably as a result of an administrative effort to keep the report out of the public's view and on a low priority. President Nixon has even had the audacity to challenge the Gates Commission with a review of its findings, even though he personally selected the Commission members himself last year.

The complete selective service structure will be presented to Congress for renewal by June 1971, when the present system expires. Hearings on the draft will begin yet this spring in the Senate Armed Services Committee, chaired by John Stennis, (D.-Miss.), with possibly more reform hearings in Edward Kennedy's Sub - committee on Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is difficult to determine how Congress will react to repeal of the draft and the Gates Commission report; however, several Senators have already taken the initiative to introduce comprehensive repeal legislation, the most notable being S503, sponsored by Senators Hatfield, Goldwater, McGovern, Nelson, Cook, Dole, Packwood, Prouty, and Schweiker. Much greater support will be required. It is imperative NOW that ALL Senators and Representatives be made aware of the importance of immediate draft repeal.

Mass civil disobedience, our only remaining alternative, must also be seriously considered, although it can only be successful if thousands of individuals participate. Even though violating a draft law is a personal decision, encouragement and support remain vital in expanding the movement to encompass large numbers of participants. One result of this mass civil disobedience hopefully will be to hasten draft repeal by making the system even more ineffective and confused than it is now. An extremely critical element of this movement must be high school students, who should be encouraged to consider refusing to register before they feel required to at age 18.

In conclusion, we must realize that draft repeal will not take place without diligent work, especially during the next fifteen months. There must be determined action from draft age youth, from Congressmen, and from all concerned citizens.

Poll Indicates UMass Students Disagreeable

The typical white, middle-class UMass student tends to disagree with the majority of white middle-class Americans in assessing social conditions in the United States, according to a recent poll of students here.

The study, conducted by Barry W. Wendell, a UMass senior, compared the results of a recent NEWSWEEK poll with the results from a similar poll Wendell conducted on campus.

The research yielded the following conclusions:

--UMass students reflect greater optimism for the future of American society than does "Middle America"; 54% of those questioned here disagreed that the U.S. is likely to change for the worse in the next decade, as compared with 19% of the NEWSWEEK sample.

--UMass students indicate less concern with law and order; only 29% said that police should have more power, as opposed to NEWSWEEKS 63%.

--UMass students show less disapproval of the handling of black militants and college demonstrators.

--UMass students conceive of blacks as having more trouble than whites in securing basic living conditions. NEWSWEEK's sample thought of blacks as having less trouble.

--President Nixon does not receive as favorable a rating (39%) as he does on a national basis. (over 50%).

UMass students closely agreed (43%) with NEWSWEEK's sample that the area of foreign policy, including our involvement in Viet Nam, was the most pressing concern in today's society.

The campus sample also felt that job training, pollution control, crime control, medical care for the old and needy, school improvement, and better housing for the poor should be appropriated more money than they now receive.

Building highways (which NEWSWEEK's sample favored to receive more money), defense expenditures, space exploration, and foreign military and economic aid all were marked to receive less money by the UMass sample.

The percentages in NEWSWEEK's poll were based only on those respondees with family incomes of $5000 to $15,000 a year. Wendell also kept his research confined to this segment of the UMass population.

The UMass study included 126 respondees, 100 of which fell within the rage of middle-class as defined by NEWSWEEK.

University Mobe Organizes

Members of the University community met last night to discuss the organization of the University Mobilization Committee. The University Mobe was set up to plan the activities for the Spring anti-War Moratorium of April 13-17 and to implement the strike called for by the Student Senate. The UMC will meet tonight in SBA 120 at 8:00 to plan the student strike scheduled for April 15th.

Tentative plans for April 15 include a Peace Commencement in the UMass Stuadium followed by a mass march into town for a rally on the Amherst Common.

The University Mobilization Committee seeks to have a non-violent , legal demonstration around the theme "Bring ALL the Troops Home Now." To have a demonstration as large and as peaceful as possible much help is needed.

The UMC welcomes and encourages the participation of everyone who opposes the war and is willing to work with the UMC on its projects. Its aim is to continue broadening the movement, not to narrow it by imposing irrelevant requirements upon those who would join. Everyone interested in building this April 15 Strike and demonstration is urged to come to tonight's meeting. For further information call 545-2832.

April 15 has been designated the major day of war protest for Spring 1970 by all three national Anti-War groups: The Moratorium Committee, The New Mobilization Committee, and the Student Mobilization Committee. Student Strikes, which were called for by the Student Mobe, will take place at all major U. S. colleges and universities.

Associate Provost Jeremiah Allen will hold the regular Tuesday coffee hour in the Colloni al Lounge today from noon to two. All member of the University community are invited.

April 10-11 Committee Plans For Shut-Down Of University

At a meeting Sunday night the April 10 - 11 Committee continued preparations for the upcoming shut-down of the university.

According to committee coordinator Allen Davis, "The purpose of the shut-down is to make clear that is time now for the university to redirect itself. Recent events on campus such as the Mills House incident, the Humphrey disruption, the rent hike protest, seem to be symptoms of a serious, perhaps terminal illness. The university has become fragmented into many groups, many of which view themselves as competitors in a contest rather than constituents in an educational community. It is the very disturbing events at Berkeley, Buffalo, UConn, and CUNY that make it imperative for us to re-examine our functioning as an educational community."

Plans for April 10 - 11 call for prepared proposals for change to be presented at many different meetings on Friday. Saturday is intended to be used for planning strategies of implementation. Strategies now being proposed range from a campus-wide referendum to a campus-wide rent strike.

Topics already scheduled for April 10 - 11 include the following: The Size of UMass; Off-Campus Student Housing; The Quality of the Student Living Environment; Coed Living (Russ Munday); Dorm Autonomy; Black/White Relations; Black Studies Programs for Whites (Bill Plumstead): Redefining the Role of Student Personnel Workers (Bill Idol); Residential Colleges (Tom Clark, John Nelson); Joint Student-Graduate-Faculty Senate (Herman Cohen); The Draft and Manpower Channeling (Bob and Tucker): Teacher Evaluation and Training (Harry Schumer, Richard Kofler); Grading (Sid Simon); Faculty Reward Structures; Student Involvement in Course Planning; New Forms of Faculty Behavior in Classroom Learning (Gary Stuart); Nobody Cares - Dignity for the Individual within the Institution; Can Students and Faculty Ever Relate? (George Levine); Do the Humanities Have Any Future at UMass?; Freshman Curriculum; Registration without Lines; Summer Orientation; Freedom of Speech; Faculty Presence in Campus Crises.

Tom Lindeman of UCF is coordinating this task group phase of April 10 - 11. He describes his role as "helping individuals who share concerns get together. Anyone - and that means anyone connected with this university in any way - who wants to participate in The same is true for anyone who wants to set up a task group not yet in existence."

Barbara Heron of the Speech Department has taken on the job of "getting faculty, staff, and students together. We need faculty who will visit dorms, participate in Tom's task groups, recruit other faculty, and help students man our tables in the dining commons and union. We need students to help with the student petitions, pass out pamphlets, man tables, organize. Anybody who wants to help us should call me at 5-2043 or 5-0385. Anybody who needs help should call me too, so I can get the helpers and those wanting help together."

Jay Savereid, who is one of an April 10 - 11 group meeting with Chancellor Tippo on Tuesday to request his official support for the shut-down, explained his involvement: "We believe that the time has come to redirect ourselves. It is quite clear there are many issues which face us which we must consider openly, fully and as a total community. If we fail to face these issues with the resourcefulness demanded, we may expect further disruption, repression, and polarization."

The Beatles when asked this morning said, "Come Together."

Woodrose Ballroom Brings Suit Against Rock Group

The Woodrose, a group of people who have been producing rock concerts in the Springfield, Mass., area for over a year, is filing suit against Spirit, its booking agency, Creative Management Associates, and its record company, Ode Records, for the last-minute cancellation of a show set for March 21st. The suit seeks $100,000 in compensatory damages for the destruction of the Woodrose's business, and $900,000 in punitive damages for the willful and wanton manner in which the date was broken.

According to Steve Nelson of the Woodrose, Spirit's management and C.M.A. offer completely contradictory accounts of why the group refused to appear. "I told them all that we had worked long and hard to get to the point where we could afford to book acts of this calibre, that we had all our money on the line, and that we were in a particularly precarious position after the Kinks (also booked by C.M.A.) cancelled out three weeks ago. I told them that if Spirit failed to appear we would be on the street flat broke. Between our date and their Atlanta date the next night (also cancelled), Spirit stood to take out at least $10,000. Both shows looked like they would be sell-outs, but no one seemed to care about the people paying for the whole thing. C.M.A. blamed Spirit, and Spirit blamed C.M.A., but we're not getting caught in the middle. Let them fight it out in court and in public. And just for good measure we're attaching Ode Records, and, if necessary, Columbia, which distributes Ode. $17 million disappeared from M.G.M. in a year, so we're not taking any chances."

Nelson, a 28 year old resident of Cambridge, Mass., and a graduate of Harvard Law School and the John F. Kennedy Graduate School of Government at Harvard, formerly managed the Boston Tea Party and was involved in changing the format of WBCN-FM in Boston to progressive rock. Ironically, he later booked Spirit to open "The Ark" in Boston, but left that organization before its opening, and warned the booking agencies in New York of the Ark's unprofessional operation. The Ark sank in six months, losing several hundred thousand dollars. The Woodrose was begun in March 1969 on less than $2500, and since January 1st has operated in the 2800 seat Paramount Theatre in downtown Springfield. Last fall, Nelson ran unsuccessfully for City Council in Cambridge and was described in the collegiate and underground press as "Cambridge's Radical Rock'N Roll candidate."

Scheduled to replace the Spirit Concert is a free meeting of the Springfield-Hartford community to discuss how the music business cheats young people and what can be done about it.

University of Massachusetts student Scott Ridley of 7 State Street, Taunton, is among the undergraduate poets whose work has been selected for the fourth issue of "Alkahest," published this month by the Wesleyan University Press.

Ridley's poem "Early Afternoon Along the New Jersey Turnpike" was among 32 poems by 29 authors selected from a field of 882 poems submitted by 265 poets.

"Alkahest" was begun in the Spring of 1968 as a semi-annual publication of undergraduate poetry. The selection of poems for each issue is made by an editorial committee of undergraduates - each distinguished in his own institution as a poet or critic.

"Alkahest" was the name of the "universal solvent" for which the medieval alchemists searched in vain.

School of Ed Works On Training Program

Due to a small group of concerned individuals at the University of Massachusetts School of Education, a teacher training program to prepare undergraduate students to work with the mentally retarded is developing slowly at the School of Ed. The training program will, if implemented, certify individuals as Special Education teachers according to the certification requirements for the state of Massachusetts.

The need for specialized instructors of the disadvantaged and youngsters with physical and mental handicaps is critical in the U.S., and a recent U. S. Office of Education national study predicts that the shortage will continue. The School of Ed. group realizes the urgency of initiating this Special Education program, and they now need STUDENT SUPPORT.

A table will be set up in the Student Union Lobby Tuesday and Wednesday from 10:00 to 2:00 in order to assemble a list of students who would be interested in this field of study, if such a program were developed and offered.

The survey is headed by Bob Andrews, the Undergraduate Chairman of Special Education. If you have considered Special Education as a career, or would enter such a program, please stop at the table and make yourself known. We need your help!!

The Family That Publishes Together...

A general on the losing side in the American Revolution gets a new perspective in the book "Cornwallis: the American Adventure" by Franklin and Mary Wickwire of the University of Massachusetts Amherst history faculty.

According to historian Allan Nevins, the book "does much to close with admirable vigor and graphic style one of the great gaps in modern historical literature on the Revolution. It is scholarly, accurate, and written with unflagging interest; a notable contribution to historical knowledge, and a compelling piece of portraiture."

The publisher, Houghton Mifflin Co. of Boston, calls the book "a new approach to a great commander's early years."

As the British commander whom General Washington defeated at Yorktown, Charles, Second Earl Cornwallis, lives in the minds of many Americans as a figure of infamy, the instrument of King George's wish to suppress the Americans' will to freedom. This book, which follows the Earl's career from his early years through Yorktown, shows that Cornwallis was a man of courage and honor, a soldier and officer true to his calling, and a servant of the noblest traditions of British aristocracy, the publisher notes.

Franklin Wickwire is an associate professor and his wife Mary is a lecturer in the UMass history department. Both hold Ph. D. degrees from Yale University. Mr. Wickwire is the author of the book "British Subministers and Colonial America 1763-1783."

Armenian Course Offered

A course in the Armenian language will be offered starting April 2, and continuing until finals.

The course will be taught by Vahram Vahramian a 26 year old senior microbioloby student. Vahramian was born in Teheran, Iran and attended Kodshesh Armenian school for 12 years then after working a while in Persia, he moved to Paris for about a year, studied French and taught Persian to Harvard Professors who intended to go to Persia.

The class will be held Thursday nights from 7:30 to 9:00 in Mach W-22. The focus of the course will be on speaking and writing the Armenian language. No texts will be used by the students since Armenian text books are rare. A grade school text supplied by Vahramian's brother in Persia will be used by the teacher. Mr. Vahramian will conduct most of the classes in Armenian even though it is an introductory course.

Student Mobe Supports Postal Workers' Strike

The Student Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam has announced it supports the strike of the postal workers "for better wages in the face of spiraling inflation caused by the war in Southeast Asia," and it "will help these striking workers in any way it can."

After giving themselves a 41% increase in salaries in 1969 members of Congress "are now howling when the postal workers strike to provide a decent standard of living for themselves and their families," according to Carol Lipman, SMC Executive Secretary. In New York City, for example, 7% of the postal workers are forced to take welfare to support their families, she said.

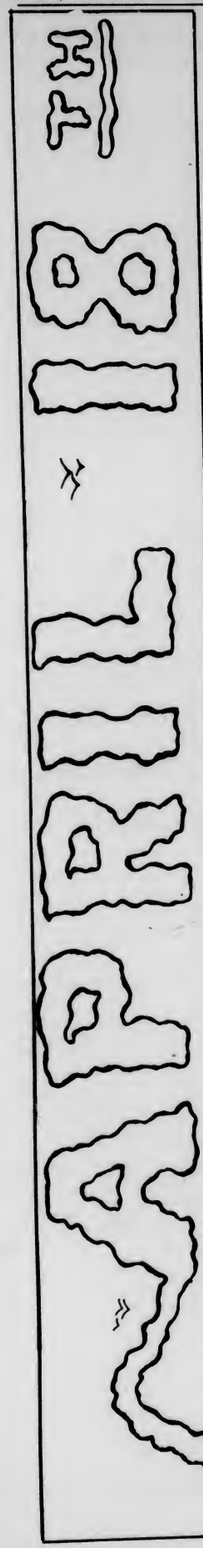
The Student Mobilization Committee demands that our government use the billions of dollars to spends for war in Southeast Asia to meet the needs of the working people in this country and right now that means the postal workers," she said.

The 1969 pay increase for members of Congress raised their salaries $12,000 to $42,000 a year. Postal employes receive a maximum after 21 years of $8,442. They start at $6,176.

The employes seek a salary scale ranging from $8,500 to $11,709. The highest paid post office employe, under this salary, would receive less annually than the raise of $12,000 each Congressman received last year.

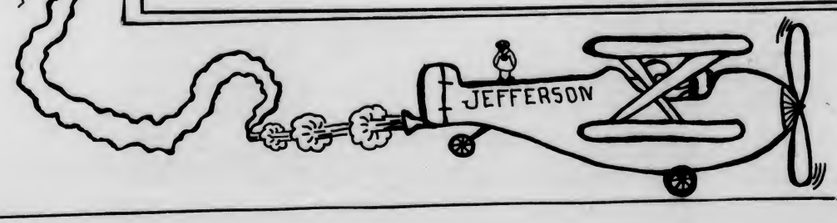
White a national postal union leader James Rademacher has accused SDS for instigating the strike, an SDS spokesman in Boston told CPS, "Such claims show tremendous contempt for the workers" by implying they only would strike to win their demands at the urging of radicals.

The spokesman said he only knew of one SDS member who was employed by a post office.



ALL PROSPECTIVE CLASS OFFICERS

Nomination papers are now available in the Program Office, upstairs in the Student Union. They will be due Friday, April 3rd and primary elections will be held Thursday, April 9th. Any questions may be directed to Leo Clark, S. G. A. Chairman, in the Student Senate Office.



Intimidation

In 1735 when John Peter Zenger was acquitted, the precedent of freedom for the press was established within the thirteen colonies. In 1787 that precedent became law, in the first amendment to our constitution. Today that right, which is one of the important checks that separates the United States of America from many distatorships, is being threatened by the policies of the President Nixon - Vice-President Agnew-Attorney General Mitchell triumverate.

Silently, but swiftly, the Justice Department has been subpoenaing the source files from major magazines such as TIME and NEWSWEEK, and important columnists such as Jack Anderson. When the flow of material which leads to valid criticism of our government and its policies is effectively stifled or even stopped, how effectively and potently can we disagree or even know of the dealings by our leaders?

This activity is being done entirely through legal means, while many Washington officials are aghast. But many were aghast during the Joseph McCarthy Senate hearings and the resultant purging of our State Department. At his press conference in Lord Jeff's former Vice-President Humphrey voiced his concern with this policy. The thing that must be realized is that by finding out how the discrepancies and shortcomings of our government are known, President Nixon can in time eliminate the "tattlers." And at a time when developments in Laos and such, make the point explicitly clear that we know all too little about our government's activities, it seems abhorrent that we will soon know less.

Here is an example of how the government takes the flies: Upon Drew Pearson's death, Jack Anderson took over for him. However, unlike the former, he has never been to my knowledge sued for slander or libel. His recent articles include embarassing secret testimony concerning several senators, the means General Dynamics used to make a greater profit in building U.S. submarines, and the meetings going on as to whether or not we will help drive the Communists out of Cambodia by air attacks. His chief investigator Leslie Whittan was subpoenaed for his files because of a civil suit involving PLAYBOY magazine. It is needless to say what would happen if the files ever came into government hands over a civil, not a criminal, suit. Anderson has said that he will defy the subppena.

However, it is becoming extremely clear that the government is not stopping with just the sources. Last November before a regional Republican conference in Des Moines, and national television, Vice-President Agnew castigated newsmen for their biased and unrepresentative reporting of the news. He said that this "Small and unelected elite" was a "tiny, enclosed fraternity of privileged men" who were restricted to the "geographical and intellectual confines of Washington, D.C., or New York City" and therefore were not representative of the national outlook. Agnew then invited viewers to write in to the networks and voice their opinions, which was mostly favorable.

Dr. Frank Stanton, president of C.B.S., charged Agnew with an "unprecedented attempt" to "intimidate a news medium which depends for its existence upon Governmental licenses," while N.B.C.'s president, Julian Goodman said that Agnew had delivered an "appeal to prejudice" in an attempt to "deny television freedom of the press." Nixon called Agnew's remarks a "dignified and courageous" criticism of the news media.

What has happened since is that while the news media still attacks the policies of our executive, their focus seems to be moving away from controversial topics like poverty and discrimination, to ones which almost everyone, black or white, see eye-to-eye on, such as pollution. Agnew did in fact intimidate the news media to a small extent.

However the point of this column is now how much he or the administration has intimidated the reporting of the news, but that it is attempting to regulate the news we hear through the above mentioned and an unofficial policy of finding out who is revealing what the administration would rather remain secretive. Just like the frog who stays in the pot of water until it is too hot to jump out, we will wait until it is too late to prevent an unofficial control of what we read and hear in the way of news.

Population Crisis

Recently a publication entitled "Birth Control Handbook", published by the Students' Society of Mc Gill University, was distributed in quantity to undergraduates at the University of Massachusetts. Unfortunately the "introduction" of this publication, on page 2, contained numerous, fundamental inaccuracies. It was wrong that people published opinions on subjects about which they were apparently ignorant. Furthermore it was wrong that different persons distributed this material on campus, and that others provided funds and permission to do so, without insuring that it was accurate. In so doing all of these people demonstrated lack of sincerity and scholarship.

In the first paragraph of the "introduction" it was claimed that "....the horror of the Population Explosion is largely a media fabricated myth." Following are some quotes and the reader should determine whether these quotes represent the so-called "media." (1) "Unlike plagues of the dark ages or contemporary diseases we do not yet understand, the modern plague of overpopulation is soluble by means we have discovered and with the resources we possess. What is lacking is not sufficient knowledge of the solution but universal consciousness of the gravity of the problem and education of the billions who are its victims." - Martin Luther King, 1966. (2) "If population growth is not stabilized, all our efforts in health and welfare will go for naught." - Dr. Roger Egeberg, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, September, 1969. (3) "We are facing one of the great crises in the history of man. There are, almost everywhere, too many people." - Margaret Mead, Anthropologist, Redbook, October, 1969.

I wonder if the apparently uninformed authors of the "introduction" were aware that the world's population is doubling approximately every 37 years (statistics published by The Population Reference Bureau, Washington, D.C.), that by the year 2000 we may expect over 7 billion people in the world, and that between 1968 and 1969 the world's population increased by 72 million people or approximately one and a third million people per week. I wonder if they realized that, at our present growth rate, one can extrapolate that in merely 2,000 to 5,000 years the visible universe would theoretically consist of a ball of people growing in all directions at the speed of light.

The "introduction" also claimed that "The population explosion is only a threat to the supremacy of white nations..." Yet in North America, Europe and the USSR - which are predominantly white - United Nations projections indicate that, assuming constant fertility, the percent increases in population will respectively be 72%, 25% and 67%. On the other hand in Africa and Asia - which are predominantly non-white - projections indicate that by the year 2000 there will be population increases of 150% and 127 % respectively. In Latin America, similarly, projections indicate a population increase of 174% by the year 2000. A "Population Profile", published by the Population Reference Bureau, indicates that "The big difference between high and low birth rate nations, according to demographers, is ...whether they are economically underdeveloped or advanced... In the economically depressed regions of Asia, Africa and Latin America... illiteracy remains very high, and in many countries the number of illiterates is actually growing."

The third paragraph in this "introduction" indicated that "there is more than enough food in the world." Yet according to facts this is not true. Georg A. Borgstrom, professor of Food Science and Geography at Michigan State University, wrote the following: "If all food in the world were equally distributed and each human received identical quantities, we would all be malnourished. If the entire world's food supply were parcelled out at the U.S. dietary level, it would feed only about one third of the human race. The world as a global household knows of no surpluses, merely enormous deficits. YET THERE IS IN THE WELL-FED NATIONS A GREAT DEAL OF NONSENSICAL TALK ABOUT ABUNDANCE." (from - Zero Population Growth National Reporter, March, 1970). In his book, "The Population Bomb", Dr. Paul Ehrlich stated that "Everyone agrees that at least half of the people of the world are undernourished (have too little food) or malnourished (Have serious inbalances in their diet)". In their book, "Famine 1975", Paddock and Paddock quoted Dr. Raymond Ewell as saying "The world is on the threshold of the biggest famine in history. If present trends continue, it seems likely that famine will reach serious proportions in India, Pakistan and China in the early 1970's...Such a famine will be of massive proportions affecting hundreds of millions." Paddock and Paddock also included a quote from Chester Bowles, United States Ambassador to India, who said that the approaching world famine threatens to be "the most colossal catastrophe in history."

The fourth paragraph of the "introduction" contained this priceless sentence: "There is plenty of room left for man. Deserts have not been reclaimed, the jungles stand untouched, and northern forests support only wildlife and a few thousand human beings". Yet the contention that much arable land remains has been challenged by several writers, including H.F. Osborne (in "Our Plundered Planet") and Dr. G. Borgstrom who

A Few Second Thoughts

I am beginning to have second thoughts about recent statements in the MDC.

Speaking of the Humphrey incident, Lance Reidy said in the February 26 issue that "the man was not allowed the use of free speech. This certainly is undeniable. Further, there was considerable sentiment for planning the demonstration to this end."

For justification he offered the dehumanizing aspects of our culture, "the system, which through its mishandling of the man-to-technology relationship, so eloquently stated by Galbraith, Marcuse, Brown, and more recently Roszak, has brought man his ... STATUS QUO of racism, alienation, blind materialism, nuclear blackmail, depersonalization , etc."

In another age, one would invoke the deity. Today all he needs to do is drop the names of Galbraith, Marcuse, ET AL.

It is true that modern technology has been a mixed blessing. Over a century ago, Marx noted that industrialization was alienating the worker from his products.

As the modern industrial revolution has unfolded, this nation has employed technology to achieve the highest material standard of life known to man. However, it is debatable whether the modern American is proportionately happier than his 19th century counterpart. By many measures, modern happiness is at best uncertain.

What Reidy proposes is technological nihilism. "It is not to say," he wrote, "that the establishment doesn't wish to do what's best for humanity. I do not doubt their sincerity. But I do condemn their ability to manage, even recognize their rampant technology."

It is nihilism because it seeks to tear down the technological society while proposing no viable alternative. And if he has in mind a new society, does it recognize the rights of man? Freedom of speech? For all men? Or only for those whose views are acceptible?

Certainly one of the responsibilities we face is to redefine the man-to-technology relationship. There are dehumanizing aspects to our society. But we must ask which is the more insidious dehumanization: Abject poverty, common to an underdeveloped economy, in which the best minds are dulled or stilled by starvation and disease; or dehumanization of the beer-can sort, too much affluence with too little understanding of how to live with it?

We must come to terms with technology because there appears no other hope of feeding, clothing, and housing the world's people.

We must also deal with the institutions which have grown to enormous scale. We can begin by enforcing the anti-trust laws, by closer regulation of the labor unions, and by strengthening the role of state and local government.

In the final analysis, however, solutions to the problems of alienation and dehumanization lie with the individual man. A man is something above culture and above technology. Given a decent standard of life and some time to think, he is capable of coming to terms with his milieu.

There was another writer whose profoundness was just shattering. "The Greeks," wrote Robert Ganley, president, Beta Kappa Phi, "do more for this campus than any other individual group.... The senior class and the Revelers would be without presidents because both persons are Greeks. It is my opinion that the more energetic persons GO Greek and the apathetic people stay in the dorms. I am proud to be wearing my fraternity jacket on campus and if it wasn't for a certain Greek, the Collegian would be minus one wrestling reporter."

No wonder some of the world's best logicians have been Greek.

In reply to Mr. Sadovski's letter I would like to clarify the following points. The Palestinian Arab struggle for national liberation is not a "new theme custom tailored to fit western audience." If Mr. Sadovski knows anything about western audience he would realize that a war of national liberation does not appeal to it. Mr. Sadovski shows ignorance of the history Palestine, because since 1920 the Palestinian people resorted to armed struggle against British occupation forces and later Zionists who came to colonize and create a "Jewish settler state". The Palestinians waged revolts and rebellions in 1936, 1939 and throughout the 1940's and more than ten thousand Palestinians died fighting this foreign invasion. Today's liberation movement is a continuation of the long Palestinian struggle for self-determination and freedom. The phrase "holy war and throw the Jews in the sea" is a Zionist fabrication. The French settlers in Algeria made the same allegation when the Algerian people revolted and fought for their freedom. Jews, Muslims and Christians lived together in Palestine throughout the ages. The Palestinians resorted to armed struggle, like all other peoples in the third world, against British occupation and Zionist colonization.

The Palestinian Charter was written in 1964 at a time when traditional leadership controlled the Palestine liberation organization. Today al-Fateh heads the Organization and it has clarified that it recognizes the rights of the Jewish people in Palestine. "All Jewish Palestinians - at present Israelis - have the same rights provided they reject Zionist racist chauvenism." Al-Fateh is struggling against a Zionist state, based on exterminating the identity of another people. In the liberated Palestine, Jews, Muslims and Christians will enjoy equal rights. Mr. Sadovski must understand that it is not the responsibility of the oppressed people to reassure the oppressors. He and other Israelis know very well why and who the Palestinians are fighting; Zionism as a racist militarist movement that has amputated the Palestinians, and the Zionist European ruling elite as an extention of Western imperialism in Asia. Mr. Sadovski mentions "Arab aggression, chauvenistic war, territorial, racial and religious antipathies." He misrepresents history. In 1920 Jews were less than 5% of the population. As a result of Zionist invasion, European Jews occupied by force of arms all of Palestine, went to war in 1948, 1956 and 1967, and today they occupy territories of Syria, Egypt and Jordan. They are resettling the newly occupied territories. Zionists insist Israel must remain a "Jewish State", and the laws of the State give automatic citizenship to any Jew. Arab lands are confiscated by law (land acquisition law of 1953). Who then is racist, religiously fanatic and territory hungry? Is it the Palestinians who were reduced to a nation of refugees, and who today are fighting for a secular democratic state for Jews, Christians and Muslims?

The problem of many American Jews is that they make themselves experts on the Middle East and make all kinds of judgements about the Arabs. We invite him to read not only about the Middle East, but about the great Jewish philosophers like Ahad Haam, Martin Buber and Magnes who recognized the rights of the Palestinians and stood against Zionist oppression of the Palestinians. We also want to assure Mr. Sadovski and his friends that the struggle for liberation will continue, not only in Palestine, but in all the Third World, until imperialism, colonialism and racism comes to an end. The oppressed nonwestern majority of mankind will not tolerate any more domination and exploitation by the western minority. Revolution until victory.

To the editor:

It is interesting to observe how frequently groups and individuals of high moral purpose are led to advocate measures which restrict the free choice of others. A case in point is the recommendation of the April 10 - 11 Committee to cancel all classes on those days so that people can participate in meetings and discussions. This seems to suggest that those who do not wish to participate not be given the alternative of attending classes should they choose to do so. This recommendation also ignores the possibility that teaching or attending classes may also be a service to the university community. It may also be observed that the creation of a community is a rather delicate and complex process that is unlikely to be accomplished by mass meetings or by shutting down the university or any other administrative measure or symbolic gesture.

PAUL HOLLANDER

Don't Go!

To the editors:

In a letter entitled "Don't Go!" printed in Wednesday's Collegian, P.F.C. Martin Everett communicated his dismay at having to go to Viet Nam. Not only that, he advised all others to resist the draft in order to escape his own predicament. His lament is a perfect example of what Peter Berger (in his book INVITATION TO SOCIOLOGY) terms "bad faith"; the pressure on him to go serve in what he calls an "ugly, unjust, and unnecessary . . . " war is no greater than the pressure on a potential inductee. If we should take his advice and resist the draft initially, then he should take to heart the logical extension of his own argument. P.F.C. Everett: Don't go yourself! The option the Army dictates is not the only option open to you - the option of resistence also applies to those who wear the uniform.

To the Editor:

After reading the editorial in the March 19 issue of the COLLEGIAN condemning the Faculty Senate for allegedly "dragging its feet" in approving the proposals for a Black Studies Department, I quite simply do not know what you are talking about. As a member of the Faculty Senate I was present at the meeting on March 17 at which these proposals were discussed and voted on. All questions were approved substantially as presented (I am not sure that ANY changes were made), without dissent. I had the impression that Professor Theiwell, Professor Wilson, and other leaders of the black community were completely satisfied with the result.

I think the editors of the COLLEGIAN should either explain and substantiate the charge of "foot-draggin" or else publish a retraction.

To the Editor:

My Dear Miss Kaminsky: Your didactic on anti-Semitism is very instructive, but hardly accurate. Had you done your homework better, you would have discovered that common usage and Merriam Webster canalize the linguistic construct "anti-Semitism" to refer to acts and animosities directed at Jews. This may strike you as inequitable and inaccurate, but it is fact. Rather than excoriate the ramifications of this issue, I'll just add that there has been extensive debate on the nuances of connotation one can confer on the term. You might enjoy reading some of it.

I must confess my predisposition to confuse anti-Zionism and anti-Semitism, for the big difference YOU find between them becomes less distinguishable as polemic flies and animosities grow. The terms are easily interchanged by various anti-elements, and their emotions seem to follow their linguistic lapses. (for example, follow the rhetoric of the guerrilla movements prior to their becoming public-relations conscious)

I'm glad you love your Jewish family; it's very condescending of you. Among the most rabid anti-Semite, anti-Zionists, and patent fools in general one finds a large number of Jews. I said before that they are human. They are impelled by a distorted concern for justice, or by a juvenile need to escape from collective identity, by a Portnoy complex, or by any number of other irrational mechanisms.

But irrational motivation doesn't strengthen the faulty logic it adopts to justify itself; it only synthesizes distorted dialectic with an element of hysterical intransigence.

At this juncture I am excising a page of my letter so as to fit MDC's limit. To resume, the "Arab cause" has evolved from wrongs perpetrated almost entirely by non-Palestinian Arabs, often at the expense of the Palestinian Arabs.

The UN's ridiculous, complex, geo - political mandate was accepted by both Palestinean Jews and Palestinean Arabs in 1947. But the various kings in the surrounding countries saw an opportunity for self - aggrandizement: with 100 to 1 odds, they thought it relatively simple to march over the newly autonomous countries and annex their territory (isn't that. . .imperialism?) They failed -- and I'm not qualified to write a history text. But issue for issue I support Israel's right to exist, despite her occasional moral peccadillos (war, after all, IS hell), and despite the fact that I certainly am not a qualified spokesman.

One other thing: I don't justify anyone's rights over anyone else. YOU drew that conclusion from my simple references to the fact that Jews are no LESS perfect than any others.

Your original thesis requires that we abrogate the charters of all countries of the world, for each of them is imperfect. That approach to problem solving is a bit overzealous.

Interesting as this dialogue is, I would enjoy it more if YOU did some additional reading. I'm already reading as much as I can. I try to think about what I read, too.

I have no desire to call you names other than Susan Kaminsky, but I would like to see you resolve this ambivalence to your own cultural heritage. Then you could support justice in the mid-East, and I could write to MDC about other things.

To the editor:

I must respond to the magnificent epistle submitted by Mr. J. Fran Keenan.

"We the PEOPLE want POWER . . . power to be truly alive . . . power to . . . feed our starving children". Are you falsely alive now, or truly dead? How many children do YOU have starving in your dorm cube?

Most outstanding in your rhetoric, as in that of your fellows', is its dearth of sense. Nebulous ideology may create good propaganda for blind, emotional consumption of the ignorant masses, but how about some really specific answers to some of the specific questions us UMies have. Specifically, WHAT power do you want; HOW will you use this power to make your system so far superior to any other interpersonal norm that has ever been tried? SPECIFICALLY?

You want "power to rule ourselves". Do you exist entirely by yourselves? The single-plural paradox of that statement renders the entire concept absurd. Even without your further elucidation.

Your aim is to "destroy Amerika", you can't accept consensual political action?

There, Mr. Butterworty, is the answer to your ungrammatical question. POWER TO THE PEOPLE . . . WHO AGREE WITH ME (even though I don't know what I think only what I hate). That philosophy will "destroy . . . all oppression"?

was quoted above. The latter has said the following: "The overwhelming majority of the underfed live in countries where the soil has been over-cultivated for thousands of years, where forests have been pulled down in the erroneous belief that this act would best provide for ever-growing populations, and where water reserves have been exploited to the utmost." I wish to know if the authors of the "introduction", filled with supposed idealism and concern, prefer a world loaded with people but also consequently devoid of wilderness, wildlife and scenic beauty. I also wish to indicate that 30% of photosynthesis occurs on land and that continued destruction of vegetation to accommodate people, as well as other population-related factors, may drastically change the composition of the atmosphere. It was recently stated at a Congressional hearing that the world's oxygen supply might not be able to support more than 6 billion people - a population we can expect before the end of the century.

In the fifth paragraph of the "introduction" it was stated that "Faced with such threats to their very existence, some black people totally reject birth control." Demographic statistics show that there is certainly no threat to the existence of black people but this is besides the point. The point is that overpopulation brings disaster regardless of the proportion of any race or religion, of the total population. In fact Perkin (1969 - in the journal "Advances in Fertility Control") indicated that the developing of a population crisis in Asia today is partly due to the fear by some religious groups that they will be outbred by other religious groups. To conclude, all peoples, black white, yellow, and etc. must practice population control now. Otherwise there will be little future for life on earth.

GEORGE WILDER
Graduate Student in Botany

TO: WILLIAM LAMBERT - Physical Plant
FROM: FREE UNIVERSITY/AMHERST WRENCHWORKS (COOP GROUP)

The Great Southwest Complex was designed as the optimum student community, where students and faculty would live and learn together in a warm physical environment. Students, however, have not reacted favorably to the architect's utopia. They have reacted literally, in the form of trying to destroy their own dorms. Student damage figures are not only large, but remarkable. "Southwest as ghetto - Student as nigger."

Many groups have reacted to the problem of Southwest. The allocation of money and resources to have students paint their dorms was one attempt. A staff, faculty, and student group, meeting every Wednesday has been considering others. A survey taken by members of Dr. Appley's Psychology 388 class has lead us to other conclusions.

The survey showed student concern over the impersonal nature of the Area - and its lack of facilities. To them, the idea of a campus center, on a campus several miles long and containing 20, 000 people, was a farce. Southwest, a community of over 5,000 people, had no stores, and no community center (except for the tiny Little Hatch). For these reasons, many of us have been studying the prospect of a Southwest Cooperative Store / Community Center. The Center would sell student produced goods, flowers, books, prints, and whatever students wanted. It would be a meeting/ involvement center for Southwest - a prescription for the psychologic illness of that community.

In exploring the possibilities for a structure for the center we hit on several alternatives. The first would be the takeover the use of at least half of Hampden or Berkshire Dining Commons - the transformation of the Commons to a useful student purpose (we all know what is thought of the Commons, especially after the recent poisoning).

Second, we considered getting Foundation Money for the construction of a prefabricated structure.

Lastly we discovered a Botany class was going to build a log cabin. They have tentatively agreed to build it for the Southwest Area, as a temporary structure for our project. We would like your permission to locate the cabin (approx. 30 ft. by 20 ft.), and possibly a future structure on the Southwest Mall (walkway) in the Area formed by JQA, Crampton, and the Hampden Dining Commons. The Cabin itself will be well built and highly decorated - in other words: it won't be a shack. The location is essential because it would make the building easier, and involve more people, just by its existance there. It will also, give us a chance for study ideas for a permanent community center and gauge the affect a center has on Southwest.

The building preparation has begun, so we await your earliest reply. We hope your involvement with this project will be significant and a stimulus to our center.

Sincerely yours,
LEE SANDWEN

Darity, professor and head of the Department of Public Health, at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, has presented a paper entitled "Opposition to Birth Control: Black Genocide as the Basis" before the 47th annual meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association in San Francisco this week. The paper was part of a panel which dealt with the "Psychodynamics of Health Opposition - Revisited." Appearing on the panel with Dr. Darity were Dr. E. James Lieberman, chief of the Center of Child and Family Mental Health of the National Institute of Mental Health, and Mr. Paul Cook, an educator from Anaheim, Calif.

Dr. Darity received his Ph. D. degree from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He spent 10 years with the World Health Organization, a specialized agency of the United Nations, before joining the UMass staff. He is presently affiliated with several voluntary organizations, including the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, the Sex Information and Education Council of the U. S. (SIECUS), the Society of Public Health Educators, the Massachusetts Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association, the Hampshire County public Health Association, and the American Public Health Association.

Dr. Darity has delivered papers before many different organizations and has had publications in both national and international health journals. His main research area is attitudes and barriers to family planning.

Dept. of Public Health to Hold Conference

The Cooperative Area Manpower Planning System (CAMPS) of Greater Springfield, in cooperation with the University of Massachusetts Department of Public Health, will hold a conference at the University campus in Amherst April 3 on "Partnership for Developing Human Resources."

Over 300 agencies, organizations and individuals with manpower and related concerns have been invited. The gathering, first of its kind sponsored by CAMPS, is to encourage the increased involvement of local groups in the resolution of manpower problems at the local level through planning and coordination.

The luncheon speaker will be Dr. John S. Zapp, acting deputy assistant secretary for health manpower, Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The keynote speaker will be Malcolm R. Lovell, deputy assistant secretary for manpower administration, Department of Labor. Both will speak on manpower problems and the present administration's hopes for solutions.

All conference sessions except a social hour will be in the UMass Student Union. After a registration coffee hour from 9 to 9:45 a.m., William Darity, UMass Public Health Department Head, will begin a 10 a.m. session with a welcome to delegates. The session will include the keynote address by Mr. Lovell.

The afternoon session will center on four workshop panels, each dealing with a specific aspect of the manpower question. The areas are health; business, labor and government; the community; and education. Many of the panel members are experts in their fields and active in western Massachusetts.

The conference will conclude with a summary at 4 p.m., followed by a social hour in Memorial Hall. The conference is open to all interested. Reservations may be made through the University Conference Office. The $10 fee covers all costs.

DER GREMLIN IS KOMIN!

Once upon a time, in the mysterious Forest of Black, lived a family of elves. These industrious sprites made a good living, one might even say a fortune, by making and selling beetles to Americans. Now, the American Elves, called Gremlins in their native habitat, bought lots of the beetles because they were foreign, small and different. They finally bought so many that while they were still small and foreign they were hardly different. One day after his foreign beetle rolled over for the third time a particularly bitter Gremlin bit it. It was a bit crusty but foreign and different. This Gremlin told another Gremlin about eating beetles, and in no time it was a fad. You know how fads go, everyone just had to try one, and that's how, in America, around 1970, all the beetles were replaced by Gremlins. To this day in the few pockets of beetles that exist in the world, the most feared words are 'the Gremlins are coming.' April 1st.

Sign Up Now For Northeast

Dean J. Bruce Cochrane, Associate Dean of Students, has emphasized the necessity for all those who might want to live in the new Northeast Area dorms next year to sign up in room 234 of Whitmore as soon as possible.

Dean Cochrane, who is in charge of room assignments for the area, has been accepting residence applications for the past month. He reports that the three new dorms of eight rooms each have been designed for apartment-style living. "On each typical floor there are two six-person suites, two seven-person suites, and four eight-person suites. This means that people living in these groups will find themselves in a very close living relationship to the other members of the group."

It has been recommended that students sign up in groups of either six, seven, or eight people. "In this way students could choose their own roommates and would be living with people with whom they could be reasonably sure that they could live." To be sure, single students and groups of less than six have signed up and Dean Cochrane has expressed his intention to accommodate these people during room-choosing time of April 13 to 17. However, it must be emphasized that complete groups will be given priority. Incomplete groups may add people to become complete by April 13.

Another factor which enters the picture besides time, is space. With three dorms open there would be 192 suites available. However, it is doubtful that one of the dorms will be complete by September. Also, there is a possibility that four floors of another dorm may be reserved for graduate students or as academic floors. With both of these developments, there may be only 96 suites available with 74 of these already partially or completely full. Dean Cochrane said he will "Try to be as fair as possible, giving every individual a chance to live where and with whom he wants to."

TRYING TO TRICK THE REDMEN-This Duke player had rapped a double seconds before this play occured. An appeal was made at first because the Redmen claimed he hadn't touched first base. As the throw was being relayed to first baseman Ray Ellerbrook, this guy broke for third. An accurate Ellerbrook shot to third baseman Tom Semino nailed the runner in the above action. On the annual Southern trip, the Redmen recorded a 5-2 mark and tied for the Championship of the South Carolina baseball tournament. Details on page 16.

One look says a lot. One drive says it all.

New Camaro.
We didn't make it for just anybody. We did make it for people who like sleek new shapes. Long hoods. And fast fastbacks.
We made it for people who like to drive on a road. Not just ride on it. That's why Camaro has an improved road-hugging front and rear suspension.

Camaro is made for people who like to choose their power. Four transmissions are available. And six engines, up to the Turbo-Jet 396 V8 with the SS version.
It's for people who aren't necessarily fond of large crowds. There are two buckets up front, two bucket cushions in back. And longer doors that make them easier to get to.
We made the new Camaro for people who like the stopping power of front disc brakes. And protection of side-guard door beams. It takes a certain kind of person to drive a car like this. Because it says a lot about the way he thinks.

Mr. Popper And His Penguins Charm Youthful Audiences

Employing distinctive lighting effects and a set bursting with color, "Mr. Popper's Penguins" was a huge pre-vacation success for the University Children's Theatre.

Directed by Dorothy Aldrich, head of the theatre organization, the play was adapted by Albert O. Mitchell from a Richard and Florence Atwater story.

The plot revolves around the Popper family who, in the midst of their financial difficulties, find they have acquired a flock of penguins.

All four Poppers - Douglas McKinley as Papa, Mary O'Connor as Mama, Judy Jacobs as Jane, and Christina J. Garro as Bill - gave commendable performances.

Although a bit stiff at the outset, McKinley soon became a favorite with the audience as the absent-minded father.

Mary O'Connor and Judy Jacobs were very natural in the mother and daughter roles respectively, as was Miss Garro, portraying the Popper's son. Her free-swinging actions especially were such that any 12-year-old boy would be proud to emulate.

Ernie Bettez also deserves special attention for his brief, but comical, appearance as the service man.

Lagging a bit in the opening scenes, the play got its first big reaction from the child-dominated crowd when the first penguin appeared on stage. Children in the Amherst area played the penguins parts and quite effectively.

Accolades must go to Paul Wonsek who handled the superb scenery and lighting. Even before the play started, the children were making comments about the multi-colored stage.

The ladder-type staircases, interwoven between furniture, almost asked to be climbed. Rope bannisters and suspended ceilings gave an added touch of excitement.

In a carnival setting, the last scene (The Royal Theatre) was treated as a show within a show. The audience became actively involved by applauding the cast parading down the aisle onto the stage.

Again the scenery and costumes (coordinated expertly by Karen Connolly) captivated the crowd by creating a fluorescent atmosphere with illuminated clothing and trimming on furniture against a black background.

Noted Professor to Speak On Teacher Evaluation

On March 31, in Thompson 102, Professor Kenneth Eble will address a group of faculty on "Teacher Evaluation." The event is sponsored by the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors and the College of Arts and Sciences Committee on Teacher Evaluation. Although directed primarily to faculty, the event is open to all members of the campus.

Professor Eble, who has written two books and half a dozen articles on the subject, and is currently on special leave from the University of Utah, is in charge of a special two-year project to find out methods of evaluating teaching. What makes a good teacher - and once that is determined, how do you keep a teacher continually effective? How do you judge workloads? How do you help a teacher sustain a high degree of motivation? There are an many kinds of teaching as there are subjects to teach - maybe more. And there are as many styles of teaching as there are personalities in the business.

In the increasing interest in teacher evaluation, which is nationwide, it is becoming increasingly clear that some methods are better than others, and some have a reliability as valid as marking systems for grading students. And it is pretty obvious that if college teachers do not come up with some generally accepted methods of evaluation which the profession can approve, other genius will.

Professor Eble, among the many hundreds of persons working on the subject, has outstanding first-hand experience. He has been travelling throughout this year to colleges in the West and will direct a conference on the topic in Washington this spring. Travel in the East, and a second conference will continue into 1971, after which an action report will propose a program for implementing the suggestions and recommendations which the AAUP's Project to Improve Teaching will propose.

Project 10 Offers Independent Study Option

Project 10, consisting of Moore and Pierpont Houses, was instituted two years ago as a "living-learning" experience for freshmen and sophomores. This year, many Project 10 students, although noting the Project's successes, felt that its educational improvements, smaller and more informal classes, were not sufficient changes. Working with the Southwest Master's Office, Project 10 released the following proposal for 1970-71:

OBJECTIVES

To encourage responsible freedom and to offer students alternatives to traditional educational styles are the goals of Project 10. Pride in one's alma mater, patriotism, love of knowledge, humanism, and community may well result from Project 10, but they are not the objectives. A contribution to Project 10, can only be valuable if it benefits the participant, whether student, faculty, or administrator.

MOORE HOUSE COEDUCATIONAL PROPOSAL - SUPERVISED STUDY

Any student in the College of Arts and Sciences may submit a proposal for a semester (15 credits) or a year (30 credits) of supervised study. . .Proposals may be submitted by individual students or by a group of students who wish to study some common topic. These proposals could be supervised reading programs, regular course work with supplementary work, cooperative research with other students or faculty, travel-research off campus, work-study, or any other program which a student and faculty member agree is equivalent in intellectual rigor and magnitude to the work ordinarily expected of students in a semester or a year at the University. The faculty for the program will be drawn from a variety of departments within the College so that proposals can be interdisciplinary studies of one topic, or a series of various, separate topics. . .

The student's work will be ungraded. He will refine his proposal in collaboration with a faculty member to the point where it can be considered an achievable "contract". . .If the student completes his course of study to the satisfaction of his faculty advisor, he will receive residence credit toward graduation for the work: if he does not, he will receive no credit. . .Credits earned through the Moore House proposal will fulfill no specific University or department requirements. In some cases, faculty might recommend relief from certain core requirements upon completion of applicable individual projects. It will be the obligation of the individual student to negotiate with the departments if he wishes to apply work in the Program toward a major. Faculty in Moore House would assist whenever possible. For students who plan to apply to graduate or professional schools, a copy of his advisor's final written evaluation of his work (along with the original proposal) will be available for mailing to admissions offices. . .

The purpose of this proposal has as much to do with the teaching experience of faculty as it does with the learning experience of students. Project 10 feels that many faculty have ideas about interdisciplinary exploration of a personal interest which could be answered by the mechanism suggested for Moore House, and that if some professional obstacles are relaxed, they will respond. Such interest might include urban affairs, American studies, great books, etc. Hopefully, Moore House will result in a mutally beneficial matching of faculty and student interest to the extent that some faculty might wish to offer particular seminars as an aspect of their work in Moore, and that students might wish to respond to the faculty proposal as an alternative to making one of their own. . .

This proposal is presented with the understanding that the College of Arts and Sciences is able and willing to support a more expensive and experimental educational option on a limited basis.

COEDUCATIONAL PIERPONT HOUSE PROPOSAL

Pierpont House will be similar to the Project 10 of the last two years. No requirements will be waived, but the faculty and the students are encouraged to experiment with their courses, and to explore the flexibility of the system of which they are a part. In the past, classes have been informal and flexible. Student-initiated classes were begun including a Buddhism course, education courses, and yoga. Special events and projects were begun including speakers, the Dropin Center, ecology field trips, and movies.

Above all, Pierpont House will attempt to recognize the individual. Because of its coeducational arrangement, Pierpont House will hopefully become more of a community in which no one is neglected, forgotten, or ignored, unless he wishes to be.

Only freshmen and present members of Project 10 will be admitted to Pierpont House next year. Residents will have living alternatives: normal and quiet corridors, an all male floor, an all female floor, and mixed floors.

All those interested in the Moore House Program of supervised study should attend a meeting on Thursday, April 2, at 8:00 p.m. at the Hamden Dining Commons in Southwest. Those who cannot attend should contact Dr. John Hunt, Master of Southwest, in his office in the Coolidge Tower Lobby.

At this time each year Adelphia, the University's Senior Men's Honor Society chooses its members for next year. They are chosen on the basis of their academic standing, service to the University community, and general character.

Nomination forms are available in R.S.O.

Redmen Open Season Successfully

Baseballers Boast Co-Championship, 5-2 Record On Southern Trip

UMass' annual spring baseball trip to the South can be labelled a success this year for the Redmen chalked up a fine 5-2 record and, more impressively, were co-champions, with Princeton, of the South Carolina baseball tournament as both teams finished tourney play with 4-2 marks.

The defending District One titlests who, previous to the weeklong trip, hadn't held a practice session out of doors as snow and inclement weather confined workouts to Boyden Gym and the Cage, relied on strong pitching in order to come through with the fine 5-2 effort.

Top hurlers for the Redmen included Lou Colabello, Jack Bernardo, Bob Fichera and Brian Martin. Colabello started three games and won them all, against the University of Richmond, the University of South Carolina and the University of Toledo, in that order. The senior southpaw pitched 14 innings, allowing only one earned run for an ERA of 0.64.

Bernardo and Fichera picked up a single victory apiece, both in relief roles. The former's win came over Princeton and the latter's was at the expense of Duke. Bernardo was also involved in a loss but, in 16 innings, recorded an excellent 1.69 earned run average. Fichera, in five and two-thirds innings, allowed no runs.

Martin was on the mound for seven innings, six of them as a starter against Duke, and let up but two unearned runs.

UMass hitting was strong in the first four games as the team batting averages were .429 vs. Richmond (UM won 14-3), .333 vs. South Carolina (UM won 4-2), .379 vs. Princeton (UM won 8-6) and .278 vs. Duke (UM won 6-2). Redman bats slacked off over the remaining three games and could only produce efforts of .194 against Toledo (UM won 5-1), .242 against Yale (UM lost 3-2) and .226 against Princeton (UM lost 4-1).

The best Redman sluggers were Steve Rogers with a batting average of .414 (12 for 29), Martin at .400 (12-30), Bob Willman at .500 (4 for 8), Paul Sulzicki at .364 (7 for 22), Joe Gugliotta at .348 (8 for 23) and Chick Newell at .286 (6 for 21).

SATURDAY, MARCH 21
UMASS VS. RICHMOND AT RICHMOND, VA.

Scoring three runs in the first and fifth innings and two markers each in the fourth, sixth, seventh and ninth innings, the Redmen started their season off right by trouncing Richmond 14-3.

Martin paced all UMass batsmen with four hits but Ray Ellerbrook, Rogers and Gugliotta were close behind with three hits each. Colabello was the winning pitcher although five other Redmen hurlers got into the act as head coach Dick Bergquist gave his mound staff a good workout.

The visitors collected 18 hits including seven doubles, two apiece by Martin and Rogers and one each by Ellerbrook, Warren Mason and Sulzicki, and one home run by Ellerbrook.

MONDAY, MARCH 23 - REDMEN VS. SO. CAROLINA AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

UMass marked its entry into the South Carolina tournament with a 4-2 victory at the expense of host South Carolina as Colabello upped his record to 2-0 with relief help from Rich Rappoli.

Both teams tallied ten hits but the Redmen made theirs count with two runs in the second and single counts in the fourth and the eighth. The best SC could counter with was a run in the third and another in the seventh.

Rogers and Gugliotta each had two hits to lead the UMass attack.

TUESDAY, MARCH 24 - UMASS VS. PRINCETON AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

Behind the fine relief pitching of Bernardo, the Redmen topped Princeton, 8-6, to push their record to 3-0 overall and 2-0 in tournament action.

Bernardo came on in the third inning, after starter Don Anderson had surrendered four Tiger runs in the second, and scattered seven hits the rest of the way for his first triumph of the young season and a 1-0 record.

Sulzicki was the best batsman for UMass with three hits; Newell and Martin cracked two hits each. Willman recorded the second Redman home run of the year, a 350-foot grand-slammer in the second inning.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25 - REDMEN VS. DUKE AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

UMass continued its winning ways by tripping Duke, 6-2, when the Redmen rallied for five tallies in the ninth inning to erase a 2-1 deficit.

Fichera picked up the win by relieving Martin in the seventh inning; additional relief help was provided by Anderson in the last of the ninth.

Pounding out two hits apiece for the UMass cause were Newell and Rogers; Martin collected a two-bagger as did Mike Sawyer.

THURSDAY, MARCH 26 - UMASS VS. TOLEDO AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

Although Redman bats produced but seven hits, UMass was able to register five runs for a 5-1 win over Toledo as Colabello teamed up with Anderson in limiting the opponent to two bingles.

With this victory UM earned a clean 5-0 slate and a 4-1 mark in the tourney. Colabello hurled seven innings of one-hit baseball with the one run coming in that seventh. Anderson finished things up, allowing the only other hit, in the ninth.

Martin had another good slugging day with two hits as did Gugliotta with two. Tom Semino launched the third Redman homer of the year, a key three-run winning-shot in the third inning.

FRIDAY, MARCH 27 - REDMEN VS. YALE AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

UMass went down to defeat for the first time, at the hands of Yale, 3-2, as the Elies' Bryant spaced out eight Redman hits for a complete-game triumph.

Yale totaled but six hits, but a single tally in the second and a two-run homer by Greenberg in the fifth put UMass' opponents ahead, 3-0; Redmen runs in the sixth and the seventh were not enough to make up the difference.

With the loss UMass' record dipped to 5-1; however the Redmen's 4-1 tournament mark earned them the right to meet Princeton, which was 3-2, in the tourney final.

SATURDAY, MARCH 28 - UMASS VS. PRINCETON AT FORT JACKSON, S.C.

A tie for the championship of the South Carolina baseball tournament was the result of a 4-1 loss by the Redmen to Princeton. Bob Wolff went the distance for the Tigers as UMass and Princeton both concluded their tourney play with 4-2 records.

The Redmen could come up with only one run, that the result of a three-hit fifth inning. Sulzicki and Rogers each collected two hits; the rest of the squad managed but three.

Bernardo, who gave up only six hits and one run in seven innings, took the loss. After the game the team struggled back to UMass and, because of the crazy snow storm, didn't arrive until early yesterday afternoon. Next game for the Redmen, their first in New England, will be at home against always tough Connecticut on April 9 at 3 p.m.

PLAY AT THE PLATE-UMass catcher Chuch Newell already has the ball in his glove as he awaits a sliding Duke player in action from UMass' southern baseball trip.

Ron Wayne led a host of Redman runners in two 10-mile roadraces during the spring vacation. On March 22nd, Wayne placed third in the annual Greek Community sponsored race from Lexington to Cambridge leading eight other UMass runners in the over 200 man field. Tom Jasmin and Tom Derderian finished a few steps apart for eighth and ninth places with Larry Paulson and Bruce Blackburn placing 16th and 19th. Rich Tashjian, who just returned to school after a semester of working, finished in 30th place just ahead of Bill Donaldson while Joel Fox and Jack Olsen finished 50th and 100th.

In the other long distance race held in Brighton, Wayne took fourth spot while Derderian ran 12th with Blackburn, Paulson and Jasmin in 18th, 19th and 20th places. Rich Tashjian finished 39th. There were well over 200 runners in this contest also.

These races are held as a tune up for the famous Boston Marathon to be held April 20th. Only Fox, Tashjian and Derderian plan to run the 26 mile 385 yard race. All three finished last year's race.

Lederle's Report Knocks Tight Money

Lack of Money, New Gains Cited in Lederle's Report

A continuing operating budget squeeze for the University of Massachusetts threatens the future scope and quality of university level education in this state, UMass President John W. Lederle said in his Annual Report of the President, released yesterday.

According to Dr. Lederle, "Over the past decade, the University's enrollment has quadrupled, capital outlay has nearly matched the pace, but many of our operative levels of support have remained almost static."

"Given the per student decline in operating budget support, consideration was given as the year ended to cutting back the current allowable quota of 1500 additional students per year for the Amherst campus, unless assurance is given that program quality will not suffer," the UMass President stated.

Another proposal viewed with favor in many quarters, he added, is that an annual growth factor be built into the operating budget. The President explains that for the current fiscal year, that is the year following the one covered by the report, the operating budget was set at $18 less per student for non-salary items than the already stringent budget for 1968-69. "The results include planned curtailment of many student-oriented programs and support areas, including a shortening of Summer Session to one instead of two six-week terms," he adds.

Reporting on the 1968-69 year, Dr. Lederle called progress on the Medical School in Worcester "a major breakthrough." Applications for $35 million in federal funds were approved, additional funds were granted by the state, and plans are going ahead for the admission of the first class in the fall of this year.

Acceptance of Columbia Point as the permanent site for the Boston campus is a similar breakthrough, according to the President. "Creation of a major state university campus in the Boston area took a giant step toward fruition with the acceptance of Columbia Point as the site of the new University of Massachusetts Boston campus," he says.

The President reported these gains for the 1968-69 academic year:

--More graduate fellowships available than in any previous year, those federally funded increasing from 319 to 376, and those from state sources from 23 to 26. Assistantships of all kinds rose from 874 to 1254, also a record high.
--Income for research increased during the fiscal year while individual grants fell off sharply. Overall income was over $5.3 million for 465 grants in 1968 and over $5.7 million for 322 grants in 1969.
--Admission of the first black students under the financial and academic aid program of CCEBS, the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students.
--Addition of three doctoral and three master's programs, bring ing the total to 44 doctoral and 61 master's programs.

Dr. Lederle concluded the report with a tribute to Dr, Frank L. Boyden, who stepped down as chairman of the UMass Board of Trustees during the 1968-69 academic year after a term of service that began in 1943. Dr. Boyden remains on the board and Joseph P. Healey of Arlington has assumed the chairmanship.

Dr. Boyden's appointment to the board chairmanship in 1960 began "a Great Decade of Progress" for the University, according to the President.

Committee on Poverty Studies in S. Carolina

During Spring recess several members of the Committee on Poverty engaged in a fact-finding expedition to observe, firsthand, the extent and effects of poverty in Dorchester County, South Carolina.

Guided by Mrs. Edith Russell, a nutritionist from Ridgeville, and Mrs. Shirley Richardson, an OEO case worker from St. George, the Committee members drove along countless mud-soaked country roads to examine the living conditions of vast numbers of poor, predominantly black families. To most of the Committee observers, the sights they beheld in the black sectors of Ridgeville, Givhans, St. George, and Summerville proved incredible.

Most of the Blacks' ramshackle dwellings literally sagged on their brick or cinder-block foundations. The homes, in general, were dank, ill-ventilated, many smelling of urine and smoke seeping from rusted pipes of small pot-bellied stoves. Among the innumerable shacks covered solely with tarpaper, fist-sized holes in the walls and ceilings were common.

One salient feature of the region which the committee members observed was the contrast between the white and black sectors of the various communities explored. Spacious split-level homes with neatly-trimmed lawns might be seen only a few hundred feet from rows of battered, sagging shacks.

Many of the impoverished Blacks to whom the committee members spoke revealed that they subsisted on diets of grits, corn bread, black-eyed peas, rice, and little else. Outside the dwelling of Mrs. Louise Lindar, near Summerville, committee members drew a sample of drinking water from Mrs. Lindar's well; the well, being only six feet deep, yielded water containing particles of mud and residue from nearby hog pens.

After three days of observations and interviews in Dorchester County, the group left for Washington to meet with another group of committee members in order to plan lobbying strategy on behalf of Dorchester County's poor people.

According to Mrs. Richardson and other local workers with whom the committee members conferred, the local welfare boards, which are controlled by whites, virtually ignore the needs of the resident poor Blacks and Indians.

Based on the findings of the research task force last week, the Committee on Poverty may expand its educational and fund raising activities into two areas: first, participation in a voter registration drive in Dorchester County and campaign work for Mrs. J.W. Robinson, the wife of a St. George minister, who is running as the only black candidate for the post of Superintendent of Schools in Dorchester County; second, establishment of a co-operative store for poor people in Dorchester County.

Apart from these courses of action, the committee is in the process of assembling a pool of speakers to hold discussions in UMass dormitories. One topic proposed is "Poverty, Pollution, and Racial Genocide", another, "Poverty and Malnutrition in the United States."

Interested chairmen of dorm cultural committees are invited to contact the committee office to arrange possible speaking times and selected topics. The committee on Poverty office is located on the fifth floor of George Washington Tower.

Mobilization Comm. Plans Upcoming April Moratorium

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

A group of approximately 100 students representing the University Mobilization Committee To End The War In Vietnam held it first organizational meeting last night and made tentative plans for the upcoming April 13-17 Moratorium.

The two main activities passed on were for the implementation of a campus-wide student strike on April 15 and also a peace commencement in the Alumni Stadium and subsequent march to the Amherst Common. According to Mobilization Committee chairman Sidney Finehirsh these activities and others around the nation should provide for "the biggest outpouring of anti-war sentiment this country has seen." He continued that "We are not operating in a vacuum," and that in New York City, Washington, D.C., Boston and other cities of America there should be similar anti-war activities involving large numbers of people.

Plans were also made to conduct a leaflet campaign on April 13 and 14 prior to the strike.

Shortly before the spring vacation in March the University Mobilization Committee was created by the Student Senate Public Relations Committee for the express purpose of implementing the April 15 strike. The Committee is presently to receive funds from the Student Senate and the Social Committee until it becomes, if possible, self-supporting.

Last night the Committee members passed an agenda dealing with principles for the Mobilization group, structure, as well as the specific action for this month's Moratorium.

The primary aim behind the University Mobilization Committee is "total immediate withdrawal of all U. S. troops in Southeast Asia." According to the Committee's members, "anything less can be coopted and accommodated by the government while the war continues unabated. Anything less is exactly Nixon is already doing." A motion to include the demand of no negotiations as UMC's aim was voted down on the grounds that it might alienate possible membership.

Another aim of the Mobilization Committee is non-exclusion of membership. Finehirsh stated that the group must attempt to "broaden and largen the movement" and thus the UMC "welcomes and encourages the participation of everyone who oppose the war and is willing to work with the UMC on its projects."

The group feels that there must be mass actions independent of all parties and institutions of the government. "Independent mass actions have been the most effective weapon of the antiwar movement. They serve as a constant reminder to the government that there exists a powerful opposition which they don't control and can't be ignored. This is what the government fears most. The fact that we can't be bought and won't shut up means that we will continue to grow, organizing the majority we already represent, until we include in our ranks the forces necessary to compel the Administration to end the war."

The Mobilization Committee will consist in structure of any member of the University community including faculty, staff and students. Each member is to have one vote and the only requirement for membership is that the individual "support the demand for an immediate unconditional end to the Vietnam war."

Sidney Finehirsh was elected temporary chairman for the remainder of the semester.

As a final plan of action for the April 15 strike the Committee passed a motion to call on the Administration to officially call off classes on that day.

To Speak Today

Mayor White Opposes Nixon Drug Policies

Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston who will visit UMass today, recently knocked President Nixon's policies on the nation's drug problem, calling them simplistic and punitive. He said that Nixon's bill falls back on fear and frustration in established institutions now dealing with the drug problem.

Mayor White claimed that the bill puts "emphasis on law enforcement rather than public health which represents a disservice to the nation as a whole, and particularly to our young people."

According to the mayor, Boston needs more funds from federal agencies "because we have 4000 heroine addicts and only 22 beds for detoxification."

Mayor White will speak on "The City is the People" at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

His talk, open to the public without charge, is sponsored by two UMass student groups: the Urban Affairs Organization and the Young Democrats.

Mayor White's afternoon itinerary will include a coffee hour in Lewis House from 4:00 - 4:30 p.m. The public is invited. After the coffee hour he will tour the Northeast Area and visit the Northeast Dining Commons and the Campus Center. Prior to his speech, the Mayor will meet with the press in the Student Union.

In his 18 months in office, Mayor White has emphasized the importance of decentralizing city government, bringing it close to the people and making it more responsive to people's needs. To the end he has established and staffed 12 "Little City Halls" at strategic points throughout Boston.

Before his election as mayor in 1967, Mayor White was Secretary of the Commonwealth, first elected to the post in 1960 and re-elected in 1962, 64, and 1966 by increasing margins.

New Departure

Pilot Program Proposal Says Major Not Needed

By GAYNOR ANDREWS

Tomorrow the Faculty Senate will vote on a proposal allowing a limited number of students to design their own program of courses without formal affiliation with a department of college of the University.

This departure from the traditional curriculum was conceived as a pilot project by ad hoc subcommittees of the Academic Matters committee of the Faculty Senate and recommended by them. The new course of study will result in a bachelor of art or science "with individual concentration."

Known as the Kinney proposal, after the chairman of the first committee, the bill has already been approved unanimouly by the Student Senate,

A student admitted to this program would design a course of studies tailored to his own individual interests, abilities and needs. The courses must be of a designed coherence--for example, if the student chose to study the Renaissance period, he might take courses in Renaissance history, philosophy, art, and literature.

The student is admitted no later than the first semester of his junior year. For each of four semester, he must choose at least three courses which satisfy his area of "individual concentration." The student chooses a willing faculty member as his personal sponsor and advisor.

The student and his advisor periodically will write joint evaluations of the student's individual program, in which they will discuss the goals and results of the program of study.

To be admitted, a 2.0 average is required. Also, by graduation, the student must complete 120 credits of work. Upon graduation, he will receive a "Bachelor's degree with Individual Concentration."

As stated in the original proposal, the program recognizes the "increased maturity and spirit of independent inquiry among undergraduates students at the University of Massachusetts." It allows the student to determine his own area of study, subject to approval by his sponsor and a three-man committee which will oversee the program.

Professor Arthur F. Kinney of the English Department was chairman of the Committee on Student-Senate Degree which planned the program. Other members of the committee were Charles Moran, English; W. Bernard Fleashmann, Comparative Literature; Anthony Borton, Animal and Veterinary Science; Mark Smith, Student Senate; Celia Mandel, SWAP; Howard Altman, SWAP; and Thomas Clark, School of Education.

Professor Kinney says, "I don't conceive of it as an honors program. It's a program designed for the introspective student who thinks about the correlation between his courses and the particular goals of his own education. Self - evaluation is a very important part of the program."

If this program is approved by the Faculty Senate, it will be submitted to the Board of Trustees and may be in operation for the fall semester of 1970.

Court Okays Removal Of Unruly Defendents

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court endorsed Tuesday the forced removal of disorderly defendant who disrupt their own trials with noisy outbursts.

The decision, by Justice Hugo L. Black, also approved the binding and gagging of unruly defendants as well as their jailing for contempt to protect courtroom decorum.

"It would degrade our country and our judicial system to permit our courts to be bullied, insulted and humiliated and their orderly progress thwarted and obstructed by defendants," Black said.

Except for some reservations by Justice William O. Douglas, the ruling was unanimous. Douglas said the court used the wrong case - that of an evidently mentally dist urbed defendant - to outlaw courtroom sabotage and violence.

The decision has a special impact in the light of a recent spate of tumultuous trials, including the interrupted prosecution of 12 Black Panthers for an alleged bombing conspiracy in New York and the Chicago riot conspiracy trial.

Although Judge Julius J. Hoffman, who presided in Chicago, declined substantive comment, the decision is a green light for trial judges to use at least one of three procedures specifically approved by the high court.

These are binding and gagging a defendant but keeping him in the courtroom, citing him for contempt, or ejecting him out until he promises to behave.

Rev. Abernathy Says
New Military Needed To Reach Black Youths

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - Two years after the assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., the nonviolent organization he led during the civil rights movement's most dramatically successful period is seeking a new militancy.

During the 1970's, says the Rev. Ralph David Abernathy, who succeeded King as head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, "we've got to lift Negroes to a new militancy of civil disobedience through which we can speak to youth."

"Many of the youths have lost hope in the system. And at the same time, we must hold onto the adults who wish to redeem the soul of America without guns and violence," said the 44-year-old Alabama-born Baptist preacher who took over as chief apostle of nonviolence when King was assassinated April 4, 1968 in Memphis, Tenn.

Abernathy, in an interview, did not spell out in detail what he meant by a "new militancy" but gave as an example the necessity for persons "to break their silence" and speak out against what he called "repressive acts and policies in this country."

He made it plain he personally ruled out violence as a weapon for his group.

In a later television question-and-answer program, however, he said:

"I will never lead any program of violence in this country, but honesty will cause me to say that I don't know if people will continue to listen to the nonviolent voice."

Is the SCLC being forced - or will it be - to adopt a more militant attitude in civil rights endeavors because of tougher stances taken by other black organizations?

Mig Shot Down By Navy Plane Over No. Viet

SAIGON (AP) - A U.S. Navy Phantom jet swooped in to shoot down a MiG 21 threatening an American reconnaissance plane over North Vietnam last week, the U.S. Command announced yesterday.

It was the first reported air kill in North Vietnam since the United States halted bombing raids 17 months ago.

There was no report of the MiG firing on the U.S. planes but the spokesman said "undoubtedly it was in some sort of maneuver indicating that it was attacking the reconnaissance aircraft."

Therefore, the Navy escort "took protective action to an enemy threat . . . an inherent right of self-defense."

It was the 11th North Vietnamese MiG shot down during the war but the first since Sept. 19, 1968. Forty-eight U.S. aircraft are listed as having been downed by MiGs in aerial combat, the last on June 16, 1968.

Controllers Urged To Return to Work By Union Leaders

WASHINGTON (AP) - The air traffic controllers who have disrupted flight schedules for a week with mass sick calls were urged by their union leaders Tuesday to return to work unless they actually are ill.

But attorney F. Lee Bailey, executive director of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, said he did not know what effect his "clarifying statement" would have in restoring the tangled air travel picture.

"I do not advocate a sickout," Bailey told a news conference. "It is an inconvenience to the American public and should be terminated at once."

As he spoke, there continued to be mass flight cancellations and delays up to four hours at the nation's airports because of a shortage of controllers at 21 air traffic control centers which handle high-altitude flights.

UMass Prof Publishes Book On Physiology of Movement

The first book of its kind on the physiology of human performance has been published by Dr. Benjamin Ricci, director of the Laboratory of Applied Physiology at UMass.

The book is "Experiments in the Physiology of Human Performance." It details 22 laboratory experiments designed to acquaint researchers with current concepts in the physiology of movement.

The book is illustrated with many charts, figures and data sheets and is published by Lea and Febiger of Philadelphia. It stresses the actual mechanics of experimentation, from literature search to calibration, from graphical portrayal to gas analysis.

Dr. Ricci is the author of two other books and many articles in U.S. and foreign scientific journals. He is a Fellow in the American College of Sports Medicine, a member of Sigma Xi and Phi Kappa Phi and president of the Belchertown State School Friends Association.

Prince International Coeducational House
New Project Proposed

Plans for an international graduate-undergraduate dormitory were recently submitted to the Chancellor for the fall of 1970.

This project is unlike any other presently proposed coed dormitory in that it includes within the same living facility both graduate and undergraduate students. The plan calls for approximately 1/3 international foreign students, 1/3 American undergraduates, and 1/3 American graduates.

The aim of the plan is to permit a mutual adjustment of the interests of graduate and undergraduate students. It also will constitute an unusual model for community living in which graduate and undergraduate students, American and foreign, can develop a social, intellectual, and cultural center unlike any now in existence in the United States.

Dormitory government will resemble a town meeting where all members will have a vote at regularly held dorm meetings. This is especially feasible due to the fact that the capacity of the dorm is 300 residents.

A Head of Residence will exist but not in the manner most familiar to undergraduates. Because the dormitory will house many international students who have problems of special nature, the Head of Residence will serve as their immediate advisor. The Head of Residence will retain its purely administrative and guidance role, having no special authority in the governing of the house.

The project has also been promised special funding, pending the approval of the proposal. This includes classes within the dorm and a miniature DVP. There will be space available for such guests to live in the dormitory thus increasing their contact with the community at large.

Further information and application will be available starting Thursday in the Union lobby during daytime. In the evening a representative will be available for informal discussion and information in the coeducational living office in the Washington lobby.

Freshman Class Invites Hare Krishna Expert

The Class of '73 has invited His Grace, Sriman Satsvarupa das Adhikary to speak on the mystical philosophy of the Hare Krishna people of Boston.

"Transcendental Love" is the topic of the lecture. He will explain the different types of love, both material and spiritual and tell how, by the practice of Bhakti-yogo, one can attain Supreme Love.

A brief series of playlets illustrating various aspects of their religion and an informal question and answer period will also be included in the program to be given in Mahar Aud. on Thursday, April 2 at 8:15. Refreshments will be served and admission to the program, which is open to the public, is free.

The International Society for Krishna Consciousness was founded in 1966 by Prabhupada A.C. Bhaktivedanta Swami who came from India on the order of his spiritual master to preach love of God to the people of the west. It already has chapters in several large U.S. cities as well as in Canada and Europe.

The gist of Krishna Consciousness is that one takes whatever capacity or talent he has and dovetails it with the interests of the Supreme Enjoyer, the Lord, Sri Krishna.

Project 10 Proposal

Project 10, long known for various underground and ambiguous activities, has released a proposal that stretches the System from the inside and says that the University need not be as buchoilic and static as people assumed it was.

Moore House, if the proposal is approved and if enough students show interest, will be coeducational dormitory for those students who wish to follow a program of "supervised study". This is official recognition that knowledge is not divided solely into disciplines, that learning is not limited to lectures, that a student can have initiative of his own, that the role of a faculty member need not be limited to that of a researcher or teacher, but can be redefined as a stimulator, a resource person, and an individual.

But there are still serious problems that remain with Project 10's Moore House proposal. Although negotiations are possible, that sword of Damocles, the core requirements, remain, effectively discouraging freshmen and sophomores from self-initiating their own education. Perhaps most important, the Moore House proposal neglects those students, especially freshmen, who do not have the self-motivation, who, like most students here at UMass, accept traditional methods of education as the only methods of education. The Moore House proposal is a solution to a symptom; it is not the solution to the problem of 20,000 students not interested in anything, except when given positive or negative stimuli like rats in a psychological testing box.

Moore House profoundly hopes to prove that the self-motivated are motivated. It does not try to impart this quality to people who are not. What remains to be done is to encourage and learn from the mistakes of Project 10 and the Moore House proposal, and to apply them to the University at large.

Moore House should not be the only alternative to traditional educational methods at UMass. Neither should traditional educational methods be eliminated. Rather there must be many alternatives and these alternatives must be made known to all, from the newest freshman, to senior faculty members.

UMass must explore how the traditional values of education can be molded to fit a growing population that does not itself wish to be fitted to the traditional values. The University must ask if it cannot resolve the conflict between universal education, and schooling as a tool for the elite of the intellectually bright. It must find the compromise between relevance for the individual and learning for knowledge's sake. It must define its goals, and, having them defined, it must devote its energy to their implementation.

Project 10's Moore House proposal should not be anyone's final answer to the problems that we are facing.

Snow

To the editor:

Snow - I liken today to a peaceful demonstration. It forces people to take notice. It affects power - electric, communicative, and economic. Snow can bring commerce and traffic to a halt.

Falling softly and settling noiselessly on the ground or where it falls, it imposes new limits on man. We are forced to acknowledge and to deal with care and with immediacy with this element or be crippled by it.

No Suspension

To the editor:

I share many of the April 10 - 11 committee's concerns, but I do not endorse the committee's call for a suspension of classes. The April 10 - 11 proposal substitutes the appearance of dramatic action for the reality of the day-to-day work it takes to bring about change. The suspension of classes smacks too much of a symbolic gesture of concern which fails to communicate that concern to most of the University community with sufficient seriousness. Too many individuals will see the days not as a suspension of one educational style (classes) for another (special activities), but rather as a holiday from education. Unfortunately, the April 10 - 11 committee, by not being sufficiently innovative in its proposal, opens itself to this misuse of its well-intentioned program.

The insufficient innovation of which I speak is especially evident with regard to class meetings, an activity in which the majority of the faculty and students have their most frequent contacts. It would be truly innovative if the April 10 - 11 committee devoted itself, not to suspending classes, but to bringing its concerns into the classroom. For example, on April 10 (and on a continuing basis through the year) the committee might help interested faculty members spend the day teaching their courses together with other concerned faculty, relating the problems of the University to their disciplinary and educational goals. This type of activity might take the form of team-teaching, guest lecturers, in-class panels, and special reading assignments. Such an on-going program would very likely reach more students and faculty members than special, one-day gatherings. Certainly it would reach many students who would not attend special gatherings, and unless the April 10 - 11 committee prefers to address itself mainly to those who already share its concerns, the dialogue with the less concerned seems to me, however frustrating that dialogue may be, more educationally valuable than the suspension of classes.

News Analysis

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

The Massachusetts State Legislature is now considering a series of bills which would in effect, prohibit demonstrations, strikes, and moratoriums under penalty of expulsion. The bills would also exclude from the campus any non-students who do not have "permission of duly constituted authorities."

There are a total of seven bills up for consideration in the near future. Summaries of the seven bills are as follows: HOUSE NO. 3245 - "Not withstanding the provisions of any law, striking students at any public institution of higher education shall be dismissed from such institutions."
HOUSE NO. 3451 - Faculty of any institution of higher education who participates in any demonstration, riot or disorderly assembly resulting in the disruption of normal college activity will, upon being told to cease and desist by the proper authority and refusing, be automatically discharged and denied any and all benefits accrued during his or her tenure. Ditto for students, but they will be denied the "privilege" of consideration for admission to any public institution of higher learning in the commonwealth.
HOUSE NO. 3655 - Students who participate in demonstrations resulting in property damage, personal injury or disruption of normal educational pursuits can be suspended or dismissed or can lose all financial aid. Any faculty member found guilty of agitating or instigating any such demonstration, shall be dismissed.
HOUSE NO. 3841 - That a special commission is to be established to study the "waves of unrest and violence" at "certain institutions of higher education within the Commonwealth." The committee shall attempt to determine how unrest and violence prevents normal educational pursuits; what effect it has on the economic and social well being of the residents of the commonwealth; and whether outside influences play any part in "unrest and violence" on campus.
HOUSE NO. 4582 - "No student shall be admitted to any institution of higher education in the commonwealth and no person shall be appointed to the faculty of such an institution unless he signs a contract that he shall be expelled or discharged if he engages in any demonstration which results in a breach of the peace on or near the property of such institution."
HOUSE NO. 4592 - The president of every institution of higher education operated by the commonwealth shall adopt rules and regulation for the maintenance of public order . . . and provide for a program of enforcement thereof. The rules shall provide for expulsion or suspension from the University. The president of the institution has to draw these rules and penalties up within a reasonable period of time or the institution shall lose state aid.

These repressive bills have a very real chance of becoming state law. The immediate effect would be to outlaw any type of activity which somebody with the "proper authority," didn't like and lead to expulsion for any and all faculty and students who participate in any such activities.

If these bills had been passed earlier in the year the University of Massachusetts would never have had a Moratorium, a Rent Hike demonstration, and would eliminate the possibility of every conducting the "April 10 - 11" teacher initiated University re-evaluation effort. Any type of protest whether against G.E. or for better environment would be harnessed by these bills.

The faculty would have to revert to an even more pacific group. Fear for loss of tenure as called for in No. 3451 would constitute a definite re-definition of what educational freedom in Massachusetts actually is.

The real surprise is the strong pressure being put on the presidents of Massachusetts' institutes of higher education to act as policemen. There seems to be a movement to turn the University into "police states."

Some of these bills are going through the legislature for the second time. There are more repressive measures this time round, possibly in reaction to the Humphrey and Black Studies affairs.

Even if the bills are defeated (they were defeated by a narrow margin before), the attitude towards higher education which even allows these bills to come into the legislature is dangerous in any free society.

There is an ancient Chinese saying: The regulations and rules become more numerous as the state is about to fall.

Liberal?

To the editor:

I was disturbed by the recent wire service account of the hospitality extended to former Vice President Humphrey at the University. Considering the thrust of this letter, it would not befit me to make any general condemnations based upon the scant evidence contained in that article. Notwithstanding what was done, or by whom, it is apparently a fact that Mr. Humphrey was not permitted to address interested persons.

I have always derived pride from my attendance at the University and have regarded it as being governed by the best traditions of liberal education. Regardless of the intellectual positions which one takes, he who considers himself educated or even civilized cannot condone such a biased approach to dialectic as was taken on that occasion.

If this is the type of dialogue that future students may expect at the University, they would be better advised to exchange knowledge in a local tavern, the role of which, as Professor Brown used to say, should never be underestimated in American history.

Trustees Eye Woo Woo, Pitts and Olken for Top Post

By TONY GRANITE
Editor-in-Chief

Dean of the School of Education Dwight Allen and Journalism instructor Captain Kangaroo have nothing to do with the above story.

Judge Clement Haynsworth and basketball great Togo Palazzi are among the 18 final candidates being considered by the Board of Trustees for the UMass presidency, the Assachusetts Goozette learned last night.

Seasoned academic watchers agree that the most surprising name on the list is John Quill, the rebel weatherman from channel 22 who placed third.

Quill, coming off a sneak snowstorm, catapulted over such intellectual stalwarts as Zazu Pitts and Mr. Bell, and jumped into serious contention for the position.

Another surprise on the list is incumbent Prexy Jack Lederle, the man who stated last June, "You won't have Lederle to kick around any more." While he is only fifth on the trustees' list, Lederle is the favorite of many administration hacks, and rates as a serious challenger to the front-runners.

Solidly entrenched in the number one slot and the pre-search favorite is Richard Nixon's unsuccessful Supreme Court nominee Clement Haynsworth. He is the favorite of a group of supporters including UMass treasurer Kenneth Johnson and State Senator James F. Burke.

A dark hourse in the search is the number eight nominee, pro golfer Chi Chi Rodregez. Chi Chi gained trustee attention when he defeated Homero Blancas in a Shell's Wonderful World of Golf match in Souix City, Iowa, 68-66, with Jack Wittiker and Cary Middlecoff calling the play by play.

Politician's daughter Julie Eisenhower made number 13, and this strong showing is being attributed to excessive lobbying by State Senator Robert Barrus.

Student Trustee and Student Senate President Cynthia Olken placed tenth on the list, thanks to television exposure gained after her stirring rendition of "Three Blind Mice" at the January 30th Trustee meeting.

Peace Proposal Up In the Air

For the cookie lover, home economists at Fisher Nut Company have developed a basketful of taste treats with the sunshine baked right in. Your fledgling baker can easily turn out "Pineapple Sticky Buns," canned buttermilk biscuits crowned with a nutty sweet topping.

pineapple sticky buns
(makes 10)

3/4 cup drained crushed pineapple
1 /2 cup butter, softened
1/2 cup firmly packed brown sugar
1 t easpoon cinnamon
1 can (9-1/2 oz.) refrigerated buttermilk biscuits

Combine pineapple, butter, sugar, cinnamon and nuts. Spoon into 10 greased muffin cups. Place biscuits over mixture. Bake at 350 for 20 minutes. Let cool in pan 5 minutes; invert to remove from pan. Serve inverted.

Gobblers Gather in Goshen

If you look out your window somday and see what looks like a turkey, you might be right. They're returning to Massachusetts, almost to the point where they are firmly established in areas congenial to their needs.

If you live in any of the towns surrounding the Quabbin Reservoir 55,000-acre reservation; October Mountain State Forest in the western section of the state; the town of Mt. Washington; Mt Holyoke; Barre; and of the towns surrounding Miles Standish State Forest in Plymouth; Middlefield; Douglas, then you might be actually seeing a wild turkey.

What to do about it? Leave the bird alone.

How do you recognize a wild turkey? You might say that he's a slimmed-down version of the domestic turkey you eat on Thanksgiving Day. He has a long neck, long legs, a long tail and a slender body. His general colorization is a dark brown with irridescent bronze and greens and browns. There are other detailed characteristics, but the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Game hopes you won't get that close to this handsome bird because close association to man is its greatest danger.

This is a turkey.

The wild turkey, once a Massachusetts native, was re-introduced by the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Game in March of 1960. The bird had all but disappeared from this state in the early 1800's. The last accurately identified flock was seen on Mt. Tom in Holyoke in 1845.

If you see what you believe to be turkeys near your house, Mr. Cardoza advises, use binoculars to observe them. Avoid getting close to the birds as you may cause flock disruption and excessive stress. The bird is very wary and easily disturbed. And above all, Mr. Cardoza emphasizes, do not feed these birds. It is essential that they establish their own ways. Human intervention only destroys the whole effort.

How wild is a wild turkey? Division of Fisheries and Game personnel said that a flock traded to Massachusetts for 300 raccoons by West Virginia's fish and Game Department were released in Miles Standish State Park.

Eskimos who catch mostly walrus and fish for food have better teeth than Eskimos who buy most of their food in stores, reports Dr. John T. Mayhall, D.D.S., of the University of Chicago in the March SCIENCE DIGEST. In Igloolik, an Eskimo community of 750 persons on Canada's Meiville Peninsula, the average Eskimo who depends on the sea and land for his food has only 2.34 decayed, missing or filled deeth, while his counterpart who patronizes the local stores has 6.47 bad teeth.

From the lofty peak of Mt. Witless has come the following pronouncement of administrative wisdom.

"From this day hence the Wizard of Oz will make it his personal obligation to inform all the happy babes of the Valley of Knowledge when ever a drug bust is imminent.

"It is hereby decreed that in the case of such an intrusion into our kingdom by outside agitators, the bells of the chapel bell shall sound thrice, at five minute intervals. The Wizard asks that each of his subjects commit to memory this royal sign, for the benefit of all of the kingdom."

This newspaper has learned Bless our little pointed heads) that the Wizard, the court magicians, and one domesticated hound spent several months studying alternate warning proposals and harkening to the voices of its subjects before the announcing of the Chapel warning system.

Alternatives which were rejected, according to our Goozette fly on the wall, included the old color-coded - socks - of - the - day routine, radio warnings over WFCR, leafletting in the Kingdom Hall, and telling your next door neighbor.

The announcement of the Chapel warning system comes at a crucial time in the history of the Valley of Knowledge, as the use of Vicks Vapo-Rub, Midol, castor oil, and Milk of Magnesia has soared among its inhabitants.

So remember matey, at the sound of three bells, stash it all.

Slap their Hands

This editorial is to protest the expulsion of four UMass students for picking their noses in the library. We feel that the punishment was too harsh in the light of the recent flu epidemic. After all, with all the runny noses on campus and the strictly enforced law that students cannot put their hands in their pockets in a public building, it is virtually impossible to clear nasal obstructions in order to breathe. When ten students passed out because of lack of air (they cannot breathe through their mouths because of the new muzzle law) it is time to reconsider the law. We are sure the students will adhere to this law when the epidemic passes. We ask that you reconsider the expulsion of the four students, let them back in, slap their hands, and make them promise they won't do it again.

A Ferry Tail

Ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ah aha this is an editorial hahahaha didn't think we could do it hahahahahahahahahahaha we can't.

The following is for your consideration and attention, and post-haste all should read it because it is, in our opinion, what you a few can most readily appreciate and comprehend.

Master Christopher Van Hussen Clump was recently named to the responsible and reverential position of Kaiser of the Universe ity ity ity ity, although according to a respectful conglomeration of haphazard reformers, the product of the procedure, however worthy of the office, was not positioned by a just and noble procedure. Be that as it may, the condition of the Universe ity ity ity ity is such that Christopher Van Hussen Clump is and, from all conjectures, will always be pure Kaiser of the Universe ity oty ity ahhhhh.

And alack, alas the Kaiser called all his court together, from all corners of the Universe. They came to his beck and bowed to his oration. He said that the Universe was a goooooood place and that all therein were worthy of the situation they were presently in. Some people did not like the situation they were presently in. Some people did not like the situation they were in, and proceeded in myriad and interchangable ways to offer everything in toto or a major part thereof. But the rest of the people laughed hahahahahaha and their leaders spoke for them and sang "This is my country, land that I love, stand beside her and guide her la la la la la la la la la la", and ignored the other people.

So a few of the few decided to blow up the royal bathroom. They did blow up the royal bathroom but the Kaiser just built a new stronger and more royal one. A few more of the few were harassed and restricted by the Kaiser's royal guardsmen and royal courts. The Kaiser decreed that anyone speaking out against the situation shall be expelled and/or killed. And a few of the few who were wise, so they say, left by plane by train by horse my rain either all of them in toto or parts of their minds.

And there came to pass and pass that a kingdom rose up in a Kingdom. And the Kingdom did not know it ha ha ha ha and they will continue not to know it because who in their right mind - but the real people- could believe this - this editorial ha ha ha ha. But the good kingdom grew and grew, hidden within. And it grew out until the Kaiser and his people fell under their spell - though it took a long long time. And so that is how it all ends. The kingdom, were everyone is kingly Kind. Well, thats close enough.

A report of milk production levels attained by dairy cows in the area has been received from Holstein-Friesian Association of America. The actual food production output, recorded in the DHIR program, by these local Registered Holsteins is:

Bay State Charioteer Victoria 6415985, a three-year-old, produced 17,610 lbs. of milk and 775 lbs. of butterfat in 324 days. Bay State Lucifer Vera 6023885, a five-year-old, had 20,360 lbs. of milk and 759 lbs. of butterfat in 305 days. Both are included in the herd tested for the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

These new production figures may be compared to the estimated annual output of 8,821 lbs. (4,103 quarts) of milk and 325 lbs. of butterfat by the average U. S. dairy cow, notes the National Holstein Association.

Production testing is made available through the cooperative efforts of the state and local testing associations and Holstein - Friesian Association of America. Dairymen enrolled in the program pay for the service.

Pats Find '70 Home, Erving Contemptates 'Jump'

The Boston Patriots have announced that they will play their 1970 home games on the 12-foot lawn of Harvard University President Nathan S. Pusey. Patriot President Billy(Never Say Die) Sullivan made the announcement yesterday at a press luncheon held at the plush Boston restaurant, Joe and Nemo's. Sullivan commented, "This will be a nice place to play. We will set up 15 chairs to accommodate our fans."

Rumors are spreading that U-Mass basketball star Julius Erving is contemplating jumping to the rival intramural league. Erving, who set numerous Redman scoring records in his sophomore year, is reported to have been contacted by the Grayson Aces, the Powerful Drakesters and the Little Fellas. Erving was unavailable for comment, but UMass hoop coach Jack Leaman sayd, "Please say it ain't so."

Proving conclusively that college basketball players know more about the sport they play than the writers who cover their games, Dean Meminger, the Marquette star who was deservinglu chosen as the NIT's Most Valuable Player, made it clear that the award would not have been his had he been forced to go up against tough defensive guards like UMass' John Betancourt in each of the four tourney games. Although those who voted Meminger to the title completely forgot, "The Dream" was the first to remind them that Betancourt limited the ace guard to only 11 total points, all coming in the first half. Never before had Meminger been held scoreless for an entire half of play.

Las Vegas odds-makers, who have miscalculated the last two Super Bowls by a whopping 62 points, have finally come to their senses and, in an early pre-season prediction release, look upon the Kansas City Chiefs and the Oakland Raiders as the two teams most likely to compete in the 1971 Super Bowl and come away victoriously. Other squads under strong consideration, although the experts don't put them in the same class as the Chiefs and Raiders, include the New York Jets, the San Diego Chargers, the Minnesota Vikings, the Los Angeles Rams and the Cleveland Browns. Sports Illustrated's pro grid scribe, Tex Maule, who thinks that Chuck Mercein is twice as good as Robert Holmes, called the odds-makers' findings "Absurd and unbelievable."

In a recent survey among the fathers of three and four-son families, these dads acknowledged emotions of "shock", "dismay" and "confusion" over the fact that the likes of Richie Allen, Joe Namath, Cassius Clay and Pete Maravich reign as the number one sports heroes among their younger sons as compared to those favored by their elder boys, whose idols were Rocky Colavito, Jimmy Brown, Floyd Patterson and Bob Cousy.

Ray Oyler, beloved shortstop of the Seattle Pilots, was sent to the minors by the team yesterday, creating public furor in Seattle. Irate fans staged huge demonstrations throughout the city protesting the move against their favorite athlete. A little-known sports magazine, "Sports Today", recently conducted its own poll among its own writers as to who should be the Athlete of the Decade, 1960-70. Wilt Chamberlain was chosen as the tops, getting the slight edge on Boston Celtics phenom Bill Russell. In giving its rationale behind the selection, "Sports Today" conceded that Russell was the better clutch player of the two and was a better team performer but, in taking overall ability into consideration, came to the conclusion that, "Chamberlain can do more things better than anyone else in his sport than can any other athlete in his prospective area of play."

Draft Grabs Bruins, Destination is Vietnam, Senators Bench Nixon, Agnew Expected to Start

By MELVIN DURSLAB
Syndicated Cub Reporter

Reports concerning the future military induction of the entire Boston Bruins squad were denied yesterday by the Selective Service in Washington, D.C. Rumor had it that the Pentagon had planned to transport the hockey players to Vietnam immediately with the idea of letting the "big, bad Bruins" intimidate the smaller Vietcong and cause them to submit quickly.

Coach Harry Sinden, when told of the plan, said that his boys could do the job as long as they remembered to hit and the referees kept an eye on the cheap shots that the Vietcong guerillas are famous for taking. There was no response from the N.H.L. office but cheers were heard from such spots as Chicago and Detroit and words of enthusiasm came bubbling forth in New York. "Great idea," the President of the New York Rangers was quoted as saying, "Those animals belong in the jungle."

Pete Maravich, the most prolific scorer in college hoop history, stunned the basketball world today as he signed with the Washington franchise of the ABA rather than Baltimore of the NBA. Many observers believed Pistol Pete misfired with the Caps rather than the Bullets. Will Pistol Pete shoot blanks?

Red Sox star George Thomas was all smiles today after walking away with the A.L. batting title with an awesome .384 average. Thomas, who started the season as a second string catcher at Louisville, a Boston farm club, took only two weeks to break into the starting lineup for the mother club.

After Gerry Moses broke his leg sliding into first base on opening day, and Don Pavletich suffered a dislocated toe when he was struck by a high Hoyt Wilhelm fast ball, and Russ Gibson suffered a concusion when hit by a home run by White Sox slugger Walt 'No Neck' Williams while catching in the Boston bullpen, and Bob Montgomery broke his ankle when he tripped over the third base line while chasing a pop foul, and Carleton Fiske was sidelined with four broken ribs when he was hit by the cart which takes the pitchers from the bullpen to the pitcher's mound, and Tom Satriano, who was driving the cart, was arrested for drunken driving, the witty journeyman got his chance to play. Thomas simply said, "I got lucky. It's a matter of being in the right place at the right time."

Manager Eddie Kasko, recovering from a nervous breakdown in Sancta Maria Hospital, was quoted as saying, "I knew he could do the job all along."

The Washington Senators will go to the bullpen early opening day as it was announced that Spike Agnew will replace Richie Nixon as the starting moundsman for the Nats in their opener.

Nixon, who has had a series of losing seasons before finally becoming a winner in 1968 had developed a sore arm a couple of weeks ago though word of his condition was not released to the press until today. The tricky veteran, who has a history of being strong in the warmer southern climate and weakening when the team starts the regular season up North, sustained the injury when he tried to develop a new pitch, a screwball.

The new pitch, although similar to the curve, a pitch Nixon has mastered, puts an unnatural strain on the arm.

Agnew, a virtual unknown until last season, is greatly respected by the Washington management. "He's a winner, all right," was Manager Ted Williams 'only comment.

It was hoped that Agnew could hold the fort until it was discovered whether or not Hal Carswell can make the team. Carswell, who is considered only mediocre by most pro scouts, is thought of highly by eight of the team's ten other pitchers. What's wrong with having a mediocre pitcher on the team?" asked one.

Pascarelli Snaps Again

In a very special edition of Sport Talk to be presented on WMUA this Sunday evening at 9:30 Peter Pascarelli, noted journalist, bon vivante, and outspoken critic of almost everything will be interviewed by Hal Dash and Ken Horseman. Areas expected to be discussed include the reported offer made to Pascarelli to become director of public relations at St. Anselm's, how to be interviewed on radio and the art of diplomacy.

The interview will also be carried live over Boston College radio, and the station at the University of Connecticut as well as to our servicemen stationed over-seas.

Phone calls will be accepted. The number to call on campus is 5-1515 and off campus it is 462-5375. If you call and there is no answer, hang up and try again. Our switchboard operator is deaf and sometimes doesn't see the phone ringing.

UMass Computers Ease Institutional Worries

UMass is pioneering in university use of sophisticated computer systems to save money, time and space for more effective management of an institution that now has 18,000 students, 1100 faculty, and is growing at a rate of 1500 students a year.

The new techniques became available to the University with the installation of the IBM System/360 Model 40. A major feature of the system is the visual display terminals, which look like small television sets with a keyboard. Through a series of specially prepared instructions, the computer can accept and process data originating at terminals located at a distance from the data processing installation. By the same procedures it can relay back to the remote terminal on its visual screen the information requested or answers to the problems fed into it.

Martha Little uses remote terminal in the Registrar's Office at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst to check information on a student's grades and scholastic average.

"The computer has saved us time and expense by making information immediately available through the use of remote terminals," says Robert Brand, Associate Treasurer of the University. "It has eliminated the need for hard copy files and reduced the space required for filing cabinets in many areas by providing almost instantaneous updating of the information of our master files."

At present, UMass employs 13 remote terminals in its administrative offices, but will be expanding the serive to 16 additional locations around campus in the next few months.

For example, a terminal has been installed in the office of the central telephone switchboard. When a caller asks for information about a student, the operator types the student's name on the keyboard, along with a code, and the computer instantly provides all public data about the person, including his class, campus and home address, campus and home telephone numbers, and other information that is not confidential. The system is designed so that more restricted data, such as the student's grades and scholastic averages, are not available on the operator's terminal.

In the Registrar's Office, however, information is available through the terminal on a variety of confidential data. Ralph Jones, University Regisrar, says, "We now have immediate access to student information that used to fill six filing cabinets."

When a student registers at U-Mass, a card with approximately 100 items of information is punched by an operator and stored in the computer. Whenever there is a change of information, such as a new home address, a change in courses, or even a change in name due to marriage, the clerical staff in the Registrar's Office can instantaneously enter the new data in the computer from the remote terminal, thereby keeping all records up to date.

Student grades, honors lists, student directories and statistical studies on students can all be obtained from computer programs, saving hours of clerical typing.

The computer has probably proved most valuable in the Personnel Office. In the past, it took a number of people several months to compile data from all academic and administrative departments in order to prepare the annual budget. Now with detailed listings of all current personnel positions as well as payroll information in storage, the final budgetary calculations, based on months of work at other levels, can now be completed in a matter of hours by the computer.

As UMass grows, 100 new faculty are needed each year as well as support personnel in administrative, maintenance and clerical positions. The computer now stores all personnel test scores and vital information on job applicants, and can retrieve information as to vacancies in all areas almost instantaneously.

Two remote terminals are used in the Personnel Office; one by Director John DeNyse, and the other by staff members. Instead of having a clerk bring a bulky file on each employee, DeNyse can code the computer to flash all the pertinent information on his terminal screen.

DeNyse says, "It is impossible to estimate the time and money saved by the University through the computer and its instant access to records through the monitors.

"We have had to prepare several studies this year for the State, for example. In the past the typing of these reports alone would have taken several clerks weeks to complete. With the information already stored, we were able to produce these reports in about four days."

Linguistics Professor Given Summer Stipend

Dr. Richard A. Demers, assistant professor of linguistics, has been given a National Endowment for the Humanities summer stipend award for research in linguistics.

Dr. Demers will restudy some traditional linguistic statements concerning the German dialects in the context of a new linguistic theory or model. The model, first proposed in 1957 by Noam Chomsky is called generative or transformational grammar.

"Nineteenth century linguists amassed an enormous amount of data in their study of natural language which resisted analysis because an adequate theory of language was not available. However, the theory of natural language has undergone such rapid development in the last decade that explanations are now possible for some of the intraactable problems of the past," the UMass researcher explained.

The study is intended to evaluate some of the formal conventions of generative grammar and also to serve as a beginning of a description of the Germanic dialects from the standpoint of generative grammar, he added.

Dr. Demers is a 1963 graduate of Oregon State University with M.A. and Ph. D. degrees in German from the University of Washington. He joined the UMass linguistics faculty in 1968.

A National Endowment for the Humanities Award is considered a high academic honor. They are awarded to support research at the highest level of education, strengthen teaching and improve university curricula. Only a limited number are given each year, to approximately one out of every ten applicants.

World's Food Situation To Be Topic of Lecture

Robert C. Tetro will speak on "Population and Food Supply" Thursday, at 3:30 p.m. in the Worcester Room of the Student Union.

The talk is open to the public without charge. It is part of the UMass agricultural and food economics department colloquia. Mr. Tetro has been U.S. liaison officer to the Food and Agriculture Organization at Rome, representative of that organization to the Interim Coordinating Committee on International Commodity Arrangements, and administrator in charge of the Agricultural Attache Service for the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Foreign Agricultural Service.

Origin of April Fool's Day Unknown But Custom of Trickery Universal

By KENNETH SHEA
Staff Reporter

A number of personal experiences encountered on the first day of April have left little doubt in our minds as to what the day stands for, and yet, as for its origin, little is known.

Nobody knows who started the first April Fool's Day, or when, or why. From time immemorial, it has been a day devoted to practical joking, and, simultaneously, has been a time which marked the coming of spring in the pre-Christian times. With spring comes spring fever, and, of course, a bit of mischief in the human spirit.

The custom of playing tricks on the first day of April appears to be universal among the European peoples. The objective is to catch a person off his guard, to pass off unto him something barely possible which has little or no truth in it, and to place him in a position of absurdity in the eyes of laughing on-lookers.

In Scotland, the practice of making fools on this day was sometimes exercised by sending a person from place to place by means of a letter in which was written, "On the first day of April, Hunt the gowk another mile." This was called "hunting the gowk," and the bearer of the "fools errand" was called an "April gowk." The "gowk" is a cuckoo and is used here metaphorically for a fool.

The April fool among the French was termed "un poisson d'avril" (April fish). In one bizarre instance, the joke was carried too far.

In Paris, April 1, 1817, a young lady was arrested for stealing a watch. After being charged with the crime, she said it was an April trick (un poisson d'avril). On denying the watch was in her possession, a messenger was sent to her apartment where he found it, and whereupon the young lady said she had made the messenger "un poisson d'avril" or an "April fool." The pleasantry, however, did not end so happily, for the young lady was sentenced to the house of correction until the first of April, 1818, then to be discharged as "un poisson d'avril."

Still, on this day, vast numbers of people, especially children, practice their innocent tricks up on unsuspecting neighbors. The tricks that the youngsters play are as various as their fancies.

Of course, for successful April fooling, children realize it is necessary to have some considerable degree of coolness and tact in rendering their victim helpless.

Brazilian Catholic Labor Movement Subject of Pamphlet by UM Prof

"The Brazilian Catholic Labor Movement, The Dilemmas of National Development" by UMass associate professor of government Howard J. Wiarda has been published recently by the UMass Labor Relations and Research Center.

In the preface, the author notes that Brazil is currently undergoing a vast transition from a traditional society to a more modern one. "In this transitional period both the Catholic Church and the emerging labor movement have been major actors in the social and political realms.

"But while scholarly work is beginning to appear concerning both the Church and the trade unions in Brazil, there has been no analysis at all of the particular hybrid of the two, the Catholic labor movement," the author says. Dr. Wiarda feels that such a study is valuable, for its own merits, as well as "for what it illustrates concerning the changing social, economic, political and religious system of contemporary Brazil."

While researching the pamphlet, Dr. Wiarda spent time as a "participant observer", sitting in the state and municipal offices of the Confederacao Brasiliera de Trabalhadores Cristaos--The Brazilian Catholic Labor Movement--in Belo Horizonte. In addition, he was given access to private files, memos and records, as well as public documents. He also used information gained in discussions with CBTC leaders.

Wiarda is a specialist on Latin American and comparative politics. Prior to coming to UMass in 1965, he taught at Florida Atlantic University and the University of Florida. He holds his Ph. D. from the latter. He has written a number of articles about Latin America.

UMass Recreation Society Planning Spring Activities

The watch word of the UMass Recreation Society is "If you don't know, WATCH the Collegian". Activities for the Spring are being planned. On the agenda are visits to local recreation facilities, films, picnics, information about recreation courses, and a variety of discussions.

Miss Christy Hass, president of the UMass Recreation Society, says that the aims of the Society are "to provide a medium of exchange of ideas and activities for the students of Recreation, and to create, develop, and promote an interest in Recreation as a profession." The Society has a bright future, as long as it can drum up support from the Recreation majors. Everyone has an excuse about missing the meetings, but they are only hurting themselves.

Miss Hass would like everyone to know the department and the people in it. "Hopefully", she said, "the Recreation Society will become an indispensable part of the Recreation Department." All Recreation majors tune into the Recreation Society, soon.

Dallas Council Restricts Use Of Codeine

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) - The Dallas City Council has approved an ordinance to restrict sales of codeine cough syrup after businessmen said many people are using it as a drug. They said people are getting high on it and disrupting the downtown area.

"It's a tremendous problem in the downtown area," said Phil Lux. "We find empty bottles in the store every day."

Persons high on codeine cough syrup have been "making improper advances to our regular customers . . . and blocking the aisles," said the proprietor of a sandwich shop, Dabney Johnson.

Passed unanimously by the council Monday, the new ordinance prohibits sale of cough syrup containing one grain of codeine per fluid ounce without prescription. The seller and purchaser will be subject to a $200 fine for violation of the law, which goes into effect Friday.

Astrological Forecast

by Sydney Omarr

People who study astrology are usually intelligent, hungry for knowledge and open to new ideas. Two of the greatest astrologers were born under opposite signs: Evangeline Adams was an Aquarian, while Alan Leo was born under Leo.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): New moon in your sign coincides with success in new projects. Take initiative. Get started. Make contacts. Go places — be seen. Add to wardrobe. Be at your best in dress — and personality.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Visit those who might be confined to home, hospital. Communication from one in armed services could brighten day. Study ARIES message. Shake off any tendency toward gloom.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Friends tend to act in manner that is definitely out-of-ordinary. You should be amused rather than worried. What occurs today is subject to revision, change.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Concentrate on basics. Others may make grand and glorious promises. But you will have to lay groundwork for progress. Don't stray too far from home base.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Good lunar aspect today coincides with writing, creative activity. Fine for entertaining youngsters. You can narrow generation gap if willing to talk — and listen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Day features variety of experiences. Hold off on money transactions. Collect what is required. But don't make promises which restrict movement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Control tendency to act on impulse. Give logic equal time. State or businesses partner may want — and need — spotlight. Be willing to wait. There is no need to rush or insist.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Much that occurs is behind the scenes. Many seem reluctant to give direct answers. Hold your fire, be a careful observer. Check assets. Don't be discouraged by one who whines.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Emotions are strong. Nothing halfway. Show that you can protect yourself. One you are drawn to may want to create and break the rules. Know when to draw the line.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Routine is subject to change. Best to dine out if practical. Some at home are moody. You need a change of scenery. Put a stop to methods which are costly and drain emotionally.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Take care with measures, appointments. Tendency exists for confusion. Unless careful, you could lose something of value in transit. There are numerous ideas, but be selective.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Trust hunch where money is concerned. You may be tempted to commit yourself to financial program that lacks solidity. Hold back. Wait. Additional facts are required.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic. But you often are not aware of your own abilities, attractiveness. You are going to get what you have desired. If single, this could include marriage.

Youthful Icemen Own Bright Future

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Take 12 sophomores, add seven or eight seniors and juniors for savvy and experience and what do you do? "You hope for a winning season", says UMass hockey mentor Jack Canniff.

"You think 'win' and let the rest take care of itself." And, 'the rest' took care of itself in '69-'70 to the tune of the best season in the annals of Redman hockey.

A 10-8 record, on the surface, is really nothing to rave about, but, closer inspection reveals that the Redmen did indeed, achieve several notable accomplishments.

Their 10-5 Division II record placed them just one half game behind fourth seeded playoff entry, Middlebury, which finished at 11-5. This in itself, is quit e an achievement for a team that was an unknown quantity in pre-season college hockey circles.

But, there's more: an impressive 4-2 victory over Colby in the home opener before the first of several packed houses, heart-stopping wins over Hamilton, 8-7, Merrimac, 4-3, and Vermont, 2-1, these last three coming in the last 90 seconds of regulation play or during sudden death overtime.

Vermont, a team which topped the Redmen 3-2, in sudden death, earlier at Burlington, went on to defeat Bowdoin decisively for the Division II crown.

Other UMass victories were over Lowell Tech, UConn, Williams, Holy Cross and Amherst, twice.

The eight losses came at the hands of Vermont, Middlebury, Norwich, Penn, Bowdoin, AIC, Brown and New Hampshire.

A loss is a loss, but even in defeat some semblance of a silver lining could be found.

The 2-0 loss to Bowdoin, which had to be the finest Division II club to grace the clammy confines of Orr Rink, was a well played, close-to-the-vest type of game. The Polar Bears finished 18-2 for the year.

In the 5-2 loss to Division I playoff entry Brown, the Redmen were clearly outclassed but were by no means run out of the rink.

Last but not least, was theheart breaking 4-3 loss to New Hampshire, also a Division I playoff entry, in sudden death on Terry Blewett's fluke goal from a face off. In this one, the Redmen played the Wildcats, who had beaten powerful Boston University just days earlier, on an equal basis. The game could have gone either way and as Caniff said, "it was a tough one to lose."

UMass hockey came a long way this past season. "We made great strides and I'm happy with the progress," notes Canniff, "but, we can still be better." Of course.

Hockey is a game of discipline. Players must be in the right places at the right times of confusion reigns paramount. On a predominately sophomore team, such confusion can be commonplace.

"We're young and we made our share of mistakes - honest mistakes - but we ironed out a lot too." Naturally, there are still more problems to be solved.

UMass found itself the victim of defensive lapses throughout the year and this, coupled with an occasional lack of offensive fire power, hurt. "I'd like to see a stronger defense up front," says Canniff. "No defense is as strong as its forwards. They can't afford to relax. This is where the discipline comes in." Amen.

But, the mistakes were few enough to give the Redmen a chance for the playoffs, an occurrance that would have been inconceivable in November. UMass defeated several formidable opponents and found itself consciously striving for a berth.

"After the Merrimac win (February 7, leaving UMass at 6-4 in Division II), I started thinking about the playoffs. We couldn't look by anything, but nothing seemed insurmountable."

At that point, UConn, AIC, Amherst, Holy Cross and Williams remained on the schedule. Five wins would have enabled UMass to finish at 11-4 and, as things turned out, make the playoffs ahead of Middlebury.

The Redmen, however, could win only four of them. AIC beat them, 4-2. It was the first time in many moons that a UMass hockey loss could be termed an upset. It was, as they say in Morocco, the straw that broke the camel's back.

"AIC stunned us for three goals", Canniff was to say later, "and then we overpressed." UMass had 54 shots but could score only twice. "It was a lesson. We learned a lot."

Those lessons will be applied next year when Division I opponents Providence and Northeastern make their debuts on the schedule. With several fine frosh on the way up who should bolster the squad, the future is bright indeed.

Rising expectations are an indication of this. This past year, Canniff hoped for a winning record. He got it. Next year, he says, he'll point for the playoffs. "There's no question in my mind, we've got a definite chance." Who is to doubt him?

Erving Named 'All Palestra'

Columbia's All-American forward Jim McMillian is the lone repeater from last season's Palestra All-Opponent team and was the top vote getter for the 1969-70 squad. Nineteen players received votes in the ballot conducted among members of the Herb Good Memorial Basketball Writers' Club.

Joining McMillian on the squad were South Carolina guard John Roche, Bob McDaniel of Syracuse, Julius Erving of Massachusetts and Calvin Murphy of Niagara. Two other courtmen made strong runs at the first team, John Hummer of Princeton and Brad Lynch of Eastern Kentucky.

McMillian was chosen for his 31 point, 14 rebound effort in the Penn championship tussle that the Lions lost. Roche led South Carolina to a comeback win over Temple with 34 points, 31 in the second half.

Erving for 25 points in the scoring column. He had 21 first half points against Penn but was held to four in the second half by Penn's Corky Calhoun. McDaniel had a 36 point effort against LaSalle while Murphy scored 28 against Villanova and 25 against LaSalle in his two Palestra appearances.

The 1969-70 Palestra All-Opponent team:
Jim McMilliam, Columbia
Bob McDaniel, Syracuse
John Roche, South Carolina
Julius Erving, Massachusetts
Calvin Murphy, Niagara

Honorable Mention: Brad Lynch, Eastern Kentucky; John Hummer, Princeton; Mike Maloy, Davidson; Gordon Stiles, American U.; Dean Founds, West Chester; Charlie Adrian, Georgetown.

Irate Lahoud Shipped to Louisville

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - Outfielder Joe Lahoud blamed "politics" yesterday after he was sent down to the minor leagues by the Boston Red Sox.

"This is all politics," Lahoud said softly while trying to conceal his disappointment. "I guess it's part of the game. I wouldn't have been sent down if I didn't have an option left."

Lahoud, who hit nine homers, including three in one game against Minnesota in part-time duty last year, tried to conceal any bitterness after he was told he was being sent on option to Louisville of the International League. However, he was unable to hide his disappointment, declaring that he didn't get a fair chance this spring. He had eight hits, including a pair of homers, until he suffered a pulled hamstring muscle a couple of weeks ago.

"They made up their minds before we even came down here," Lahoud said. "It really hurts to break your back, try so hard and then get sent to the minors.

"I'm sure the only reason is that I had an option left. The only thing I can do is go down and try my darndest. I still think I'm a major league ball player. I know I can play for some team, and as a regular, up here. I just hope they're able to make a trade for me. I want to play in the majors."

Lahoud was one of eight players trimmed from the roster as the Red Sox got down to 28 men, including pitcher Mike Nagy who is just out of the Army and will remain in Florida to get into condition when the club goes north. Nagy can be carried as an addition to the 25-player roster until April 21.

Sent to Louisville with Lahoud were outfielder Don Lock, first baseman Tony Muser, catcher Bob Montgomery and pitchers Gary Wagner, and Billy Farmer.

Veteran Ron Kline, a right-handed pitcher who broke into the majors in 1952 was given his outright release. Veteran handyman George Thomas, who suffered a cracked wrist bone a couple of weeks ago, was named a coach, the fifth on the Boston staff.

The Red Sox reportedly are attempting to trade or sell catcher Russ Gibson and southpaw pitcher Bill Landis.

April 10-11 Endorsed By Chancellor Tippo

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

Chancellor Oswald Tippo endorsed a proposal yesterday by the April 10 and 11 Committee calling for the cancellation of classes on April 10 in order that serious discussion can take place on both dates concerning the problems that face UMass.

Tippo said "In view of campus developments over the past few years, I wholeheartedly agree that the need for self-examination is urgent. In the life of evolving institutions it is desirable to take stock of strengths and weaknesses at frequent intervals as we chart future programs. Therefore, I urge the widest possible participation by the campus community in these important discussions."

The Student Senate has already endorsed the cancellation of classes, but the committee plans to initiate more action through the Student Senate.

Also planned according to Allen Davis, committee cordinator, is the use of faculty-student teams on April 7 and 8 within the dormitories to elicit specific problems that the students are concerned about and to present the committee's program on a more personal basis.

Whether classes are cancelled or not is up to the Faculty Senate which meets tonight. The committee urged that any faculty member who wants improvement in this university environment should be willing to cancel classes in order that viable proposals and their implementation can be achieved by those concerned about this campus community. The committee hopes the theme of April 10 and 11, "Beatles - Come Together," will be an apt description of the days events.

War Bill Clears Legislature, Awaits Sargent's Approval

BOSTON (AP) - The Massachusetts Legislature enacted Wednesday a bill which would bar Massachusetts residents from serving in any war not declared by Congress.

The bill aims to set up a test of the legality of the Vietnam war by institution of court action by the state to bring the question to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill was enacted by the 40 member Senate on a roll call of 29-3. Earlier the House enacted it on a voice vote after a test roll call of 127 92 rejected a move to kill the measure out right.

The bill was sent immediately to the office of Gov. Francis W. Sargent, who has not indicated whether he will sign it. Sargent said he will make the decision later today.

Both House and Senate are overwhelmingly Democratic. Sargent is a Republican.

Enactment in the Senate followed a brief debate, with Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, calling it "bad legislation".

He said if passage of the measure "would shorten the war by five minutes, I'd be fighting for it."

Enactment by the House followed a half hour of debate, led by Rep. Gerald P. Lombard, D-Fitchburg, chief foe of the bill, who wanted to strike the enactment clause.

The roll call vote was 127 - 92 against the move.

Enactment of the bill was a triumph for Rep. H. James Shea Jr., D-Newton who filed the measure.

Shea spoke briefly Wednesday saying arguments against the measure brought nothing new and, "I think we have done our work on this measure now."

Lombard termed the bill "useless, foolish and embarrassing," and said, "if this bill is passed, every hippie, yippie and draft dodger in the nation will be delighted and flock to Massachusetts."

Rep. Cornelius Kierman, D-Lowell, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, countered by saying "This bill does nothing but provide some citizens of this state an opportunity to challenge an action taken by his government."

Gov. Sargent has indicated he is keeping an open mind about the legislation, but said earlier it appeared to have some "grave" constitutional questions.

If it reaches his desk, he will have 10 days to sign it, veto it, or send it back with proposed changes. He also may be able to send it to the state Supreme Court for a ruling on its legality.

White Touches on Many Subjects During Amherst Visit

AN UNANNOUNCED CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR mayor White took solid stands on such state issues as pollution, aid to parochial schools and the legislative war bill. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom)

Press Draws Comments On Drug Drugs, State Aid

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White last night conducted a closed press conference with local campus media and spoke on a variety of subjects.

The first area which he touched upo n was the problem of getting the necessary funds Boston needs to effectively run its government. White stated that he believes "revenue sharing is the basic answer. He criticized President Nixon by saying that while the Republican Chief Executive has favored appropriations for Boston and other cities the attachments in Congress made to them have been "ludicrous."

Concerning the recently proposed bill in the Massachusetts legislature that would make it unlawful according to state law for the Federal Government to draft any Massachusetts citizen for fighting in a war that was not declared by Congress, Mayor White said that he "strongly supports it." He continued that "I urge the governor to sign and predict he will. It is a valid bill and raises a valid Constitutional question of Federal jurisdiction."

When questioned on the issue of drugs the Hub city leader declared that "Boston probably has the most progressive program in the nation." He pointed out that the city attempts to cope with the problem in three "comprehensive" ways - educational needs, cracking down on enforcement of drug laws, and establishing neighborhood rehabilitation centers. White called the present drug laws "archaic" and said they should be changed. Education is the key, according to the Boston mayor.

"We have done more than anyone else, but Boston can't do it alone," said White concerning the problem of pollution. He accused the state of nothing but "talk" and said that all Boston wanted of the state is backing of enforcement regulations and pollution laws.

Mayor White said that he believes having the state aid the Boston public schools directly is a "good proposal" because America is the "only western democracy not to fund public education with Federal Government. It is supported by inadequate local government." He also favors state aid of "an indirect type" to parochial schools.

White predicted that Boston should "get by" without racial trouble due to prior work done, but that there are "no guarantees. It only takes one incident."

Though there has been much widespread speculation and belief that White will seek the Democratic nomination for governor this year, the mayor would neither confirm nor deny, saying only that "I don't like to plan that far ahead. I don't have the perogative to make a public committal at this time."

Hub Mayor Hits "Order Over Justice" As Major American Conscience Myth

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Speaking before an overflow crowd of several hundred students in the Student Union Ballroom last night, Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston declared that "there is a myth prevailing in American conscience today and being preached by Washington," the myth that "order cannot prevail over justice."

Mayor White appeared as a guest of the Young Democrats of the University and the Urban Affairs Organization.

He told his audience that "something great happened in 1968 - all we fought to do was in serious jeopardy." According to Mr. White Americans fought against the "rigidity" of authority and the "Establishment" but it became more entrenched. The same was true of militarism and racism, he continued. Thus, "All we fought against is in order for the sake of order," White emphasized.

The guest speaker then praised the youth of the country for organizing peaceful demonstrations and other activities to "fight" in this area. He said the answers will be found in this generation and that the action on American campuses has brought about "substantial" changes and "some" progress.

White spoke of the problems of the cities today and drew an analogy between the city itself and the college campuses. "The City is the people, the campus if for the students!" He said the difficulty concerning the two is a basic misunderstanding as to "what the city is and what the campus should be."

"America has been unable to cope with and keep up with its problems in the cities," White continued. The turning point was Detroit in the summer of 1967 when "we found out too late that the city is more than just being physical in nature". It was after this and the "traumatic experience" and "catharsis" of 1968 that responses to these problems began to be made, according to Mayor White.

The close of the decade has seen "more change than had been seen in the last 100 years," stated the speaker. But he warned that money is not the answer, but rather through politics, "human responses" must meet the problems. It is this "human response" that White said must be the battleground of politics in the cities.

Mayor White concluded by saying that "Urban America is America" and that he feels "confident" and "hopeful" of its future.

AT A NEWS CONFERENCE, White outlined some of the programs he has instituted in Boston during his term of office. (MDC photo by Wayne Lilyestrom)

Student Senate Acts on Budgets, Votes to Boycott Humphrey Inquest

In financial business last night, the Student Senate voted to strike the entire budget of the Social Action Council. The S.A.C. is the organization formed from the recently divided Martin Luther King Council, and is headed by Gil Salk. It was felt by senators that the services being provided by the Council would only be duplicating the actions of many other groups. However, the Community Action Foundation, the other half of the former M.L.K. Council will still be Senate funded.

During other budget business, the Senate decided to appropriate $3,600.00 to Free University City for educational purposes. Financial bills also discussed were those requesting money for the Coalition for Environmental Equality and the Learning Resources Center.

A bill that would have the Student Senate investigate and publicize any violation of constitutional rights of students during campus busts and other police harrassment was also passed.

Earlier in the meeting, the senate took two unanimous votes. The first was against appointing students to serve on the Faculty Senate committee investigating the Humphrey incident. The main reason behind the vote was that the incident has already been over-investigated and is a dead issue.

The other vote was unanimously in favor of urging the Faculty Senate to cancel all classes April 10-11 in order to allow the University to "cease normal business and reexamine its purposes and structures."

Haverill Mayor Invites Patriots

HAVERHILL, Mass. (AP) - Mayor James F. Wandron Wednesday outlined an $8 million, 50,000-seat stadium proposal for the Boston Patriots professional football team.

Waldron said he has met with Boston bankers to discuss financing, and said the city would pledge $100,000 a year in case the stadium operated at a loss.

Speaking to some 300 Patriots fans at a local restaurant, Waldron said there are 4.5 million people living within an hour's drive of this Merrimack Valley city.

Included in the plan, he said, are parking facilities for 16,000 cars.

Other communities that have expressed an interest in building a stadium for the Patriots are Foxboro and Sturbridge in Massachusetts. and the state of New Hampshire.

Foxboro residents, polled over a week ago, voted overwhelmingly in favor of a proposal to build a $7 million stadium adjacent to the Bay State Raceway, on land contributed by raceway president E. M. Loew.

A proposal to build at the junction of the Massachusetts Turnpike and Route 15 in Sturbridge is to be discussed at a meeting in Sturbridge Thursday night.

French Propose Conference For Southeast Asian Peace

PARIS (AP) - France proposed Wednesday an international conference to bring peace to Cambodia, Laos, and Vietnam - formerly French Indochina. Paris is ready to "offer its active contribution to this enterprise" the government said.

"Recent events in Laos and Cambodia have considerably aggravated the situation in Indo - China" and "contributed to the extension of the Vietnamese conflict to the entirety of the peninsula," said a communique.

The French offer appeared to be aimed at reconvening the nations that took part in the Geneva conferences on Indochina of 1954 and 1962. The first settled the French colonial war, the latter laid the basis for a neutral Laos.

The communique, issued after a Cabinet meeting with President Georges Pompidou presiding said:

"The French government is convinced that the extension of a war which tends to become indivisible can only be avoided by negotiations among all interested parties with a view to seeking and guaranteeing the bases of peace, itself indivisible.

"Only such a negotation could permit arrival at a general agreement for the establishment of a zone of neutrality and peace in Indochina."

It was not known at once whether France had asked the United States the Soviet Union, Britain and Red China whether they would be willing to attend. A government source declined to comment on this.

It seemed doubtful, however, that France would make such an announcement without first having sounded out other nations through diplomatic channels.

There was no immediate comment in Washington.

There are some similarities, some differences between the present situation and those existing in 1954 and again in 1961 when previous Geneva conferences were called.

In 1954, a meeting was already in progress in Geneva on the Korean War, and it was getting nowhere in the political settlement of that conflict. While it was in session, events were boiling to a climax in Indochina, the French were about to go under.

The end came for the French at Dien Bien Phu on May 7, and the war moved from the battlefield to the negotation table at Geneva. Fourteen nations were involved, including North and South Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Red China, Russia, the United States, Britain, and France. Britain and the Soviet Union served as co-chairmen of the conference and still hold that responsibility.

Teachers Strike In Woburn

WOBURN, Mass. (AP) - A teachers' strike, in defiance of an injunction, closed 14 of the 15 city schools Wednesday, but the teacher leaders were ordered into court Thursday to face the judge who issued the injunction.

City officials testified before Judge Robert Sullivan in Suffolk Superior Court that the six leaders of the teachers' organization remained out of school and joined picketlines, despite the injunction Sullivan issued the day before.

Sullivan continued the case to 10 a.m. Thursday and told the six and a representative of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, who was with them, that he'd issue bench warrants for them if they failed to appear Thursday.

He also instructed the school officials to present to him Thursday lists of the names of teachers who failed to report to their classrooms Wednesday, and of any who do not report Thursday morning.

He also insturcted the city officials to engage photographers to make pictures of any teachers who picket at schools Thursday.

The Massachusetts Teachers Association, negotiating for the Woburn teachers, said 8,000 pupils were sent home and that 430 of the city's 450 teachers took part in the walkout.

Picketing was concentrated at the high school and two junior high schools.

The teachers contract with the city expired Tuesday, without agreement or a renewal.

The teachers are seeking a salary range from $7,300 to $11,700 for teachers with bachelor's degrees. The city offer ranges from $7,100 to $10,900.

Senate Passes Bill Extending Education Aid

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate passed Wednesday a three-year extension of education programs authorizing a cost of $24.6 billion for various aid plans.

The measure, a compromise of Senate and House versions, now goes to the House which is expected to complete action next week.

The Senate passed the bill by a vote of 74-4, after rejecting 43 to 32 an effort to return the measure to a conference committee.

The rejected motion would have directed Senate conferees to try to restore a Senate-passed proposal by Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., to make school integration policies the same in both North and South.

Conscription Corner

One of the first questions most people ask when we suggest the concept of draft repeal concerns what we would propose to replace the draft. This is a perfectly valid question when we consider that most people have been educated believing that some sort of large powerful armed force is necessary for national defense.

Ideally, there would be no need for any armed force. All international problems could, with difficulty, be solved by utilizing a strong United Nations, an International Court, etc. However, at present, we are forced to deal with the problem on a practical level.

Presently, and in the forseeable future, the use of U.S. military manpower will probably be limited to guerilla warfare situations, like Southeast Asia. With the rise in the threat of nuclear weapons, it is doubtful that a conflict on the scale of W. W. II will ever be repeated. In this light, an all-volunteer military would appear to be the most practical, feasible, and efficient alternative.

There are numerous arguments advanced against the use of an all-volunteer armed force. With the aid of the Report of the President's Commission on an All-Volunteer Armed Force, we will attempt to show that these arguments are usually based on invalid assumptions or the absence of facts.

An initial argument against the use of an all-volunteer force relates to the possibility of an isolated military. The argument: "The presence of draftees in a mixed force guards against the growth of a separate military ethos, which could pose a threat to civilian authority, our freedom, and our democratic institutions."

To begin with, this argument is based on the false assumption that military decision-making powers are somehow, to a limited extent, delegated to the lower ranks of the forces. This assumption clearly cannot be justified. The Gates Commission report states, "In either a mixed (volunteers and draftees) or voluntary force, the attitudes of the officer corps (mostly professionals) are the preponderant factor in the psychology of the military; and with or without the draft, professional officers are recruited voluntarily from a variety of regional and socioeconomic backgrounds."

Decision-making power is divided between the military hierarchy and the civilian authority (Commander in Chief, Service Secretaries, etc.), whether there is a mixed or all-volunteer force. Therefore, the presence of draftees does not actually guard against anything, for the lowest ranks of the military (where most draftees are placed) have no decision-making powers, anyway.

It is often assumed, also, that in changing to an all-volunteer force from a mixed force, the make-up of the military would substantially be altered, thereby permitting a force composed of totally different individuals to separate itself from society. In a projected composition of mixed and volunteer enlisted forces for 1980, the Gates Commission revealed that 52% of the all-volunteer force would be composed of first-term true volunteers and 48% would b e career force volunteers. In the mixed force, 43% would be first-term true volunteers and 40% career volunteers.

The difference in the two forces would be that the mixed force would be composed of 9% draftees and 8% draft-induced volunteers (many of whom would probably have joined voluntarily if pay had been increased). It appears therefore, that the difference amounts to about 13% of the force - a percentage which would not substantially alter the composition.

There are three remaining points to be considered in the refutation of the original argument. First, the institutional structure of the Dept. of Defense would remain substantially the same, except for the system of manpower recruitment. Also, the civilian control of the President as well as the civilian service secretaries, and Congress will not be altered.

Secondly, in reviewing the all-volunteer armed force in an historical perspective, it is interesting to note that prior to 1948, a voluntary system of recruitment was reinstated after each war, with the use of conscription limited only to wars. During the long periods of voluntary recruitment between wars, "The U.S. never experienced a threat to civilian control from the military."

In conclusion, it is paradoxical that the threat that the military will become overly powerful from lack of civilian draftees, as the original argument implied, is not nearly as great as the threat that the military will become overly powerful from its ability to continually conscript, resulting in escalation of manpower, which in turn escalates the conflict in Vietnam, for instance.

White House Recalls Starting Pitcher Agnew

WASHINGTON (AP) - The White House, in a quick shift of signals, said Wednesday Vice President Spiro T. Agnew will be unable to throw out the first ball at the Washington Senators opening American League baseball game Monday. Agnew will be in the senate for a key vote on the Carswell nomination, it said.

Deputy Press secretary Gerald L. Warren, who had announced Tuesday that Agnew would substitute for President Nixon as the administration's starting pitcher, said he now realized he had "violated a long standing tradition."

"Most managers do not disclose their starting pitchers this far in advance," Warren said.

As to the possibility Nixon might be at the game, Warren said, "The president hasn't indicated a new plan to me."

Panel Chairman Awards Contract for Oil Spills

WASHINGTON (CPS) - The Chairman of the controversial Presidential panel that recommended continued oil drilling in the Santa Barbara channel was involved in the recent award of a government contract to develop means to contain oil spills.

John C. Calhoun Jr., who was chairman of the panel, is Vice-President of Texas A&M University, which will conduct the project to develop techniques for containing oil spillage under a $285,000 contract awarded to Wilson Industries Inc., a Houston based firm.

John Hudson, a spokesman for Wilson Industries, said that Calhoun "was associated with the project prior to the contract award, but has little to do with it now." Hudson said Calhoun had provided "very little in the way of direct assistance in getting the contract, but refused to deny he had been involved."

The contract for development may lead to a much larger contract for production if the plan provided by the Wilson-Texas A&M combine is accepted by the Coast Guard, which awarded the contract. Two other contracts were awarded for similar development, and the government will decide which plan looks most promising.

The government panel which Calhoun chaired recommended continued drilling in the Santa Barbara channel in order to relieve the pressure under the fault ridden ocean floor. That pressure had been created by the drilling of a consortium composed of Union, Mobil, Texaco, and Gulf Oil Companies.

It was the opinion of the committee that stopping the drilling would increase the rate of leakage at the Santa Barbara well. The well blew on January 28, 1969, but oil seepage still continues.

A local Santa Barbara group, "Get Oil Out" (GOO), has repeatedly asked that drilling be halted for two weeks to test the panel's theory. The government has turned down the request.

It was earlier disclosed by the Los Angeles Times that five of the eleven members of the committee, including Calhoun, had had financial dealings with the oil companies involved.

Grad Students May Pay To Much Tax

Graduate students on teaching fellowships should check with their department as to whether or not the fellowships are taxable.

Certain assistantships, many of which have already been placed on W-2 forms, are required by departments and are therefore tax deductable.

For those who already sent in tax returns, rebates can be obtained by sending corrected tax forms with notes from departments showing non-taxability of the assistantships.

For details, students can check with their departments.

New Counseling Service

"Open Door" Opens Door

The Open Door, which opens today in the basement of Hamilton House in the Quad, is a place where students can go to meet other students or professional counselors to talk over Academic matters, vocational problems or personal troubles.

Nine undergraduates, three grad students, and six staff members of the University man the Open Door.

Students may receive counseling on drugs or sex, and take part in informal educational programs on these subjects or the new morality, yoga, or womens liberation (often for academic credit).

The broad goal of the Open Door is to create an atmosphere where members of the University community, regardless of status, may feel free to seek help, mingle, develop interests, or become actively involved in the center. Decisions regarding the direction of the center will come from the community which it serves.

No appointments are necessary, the atmosphere is warm, informal and personal. No records will be kept and all contacts are confidential. A rap line will also be installed for those desiring help, 545-0029.

The Open Door will be open every Thursday and Friday. On Thursday morning from 9 to noon, Steve Weiss will be on hand; on Thursday afternoon from 1 to 5, Mike Wartman; Thursday night from 11 to 2, George Schlichte; Friday morning from 10 to noon, Sue LaFrance; Friday afternoon from 1 to 5, Dave Sanford; Friday evening from 7 to 2, Don and Sharon Cunningham. Student staff members, who are training to become information and advising resource people, will also be in the center at these times.

Springfield Student Reinstated, Suspended for Press Column

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.--(CPS)--A Springfield STUDENT newspaper columnist who was dismissed from the college because of "attacks on personal integrity and techniques of harassment and inuendo" and "objectionable language" has been reinstated.

Even though a faculty hearing committee found that the writing of Larry Libow "were not reflective of high standards of responsible journalism and do not seem consistent with the ideals and ethical standards of Springfield," they recommended his reinstatement.

The hearing committee found that although Libow had previously used "objectionable" language, his due process rights were violated. He was never warned or reprimanded by the college administration in advance of his suspension. His columns were routinely reviewed by the features editor and the managing editor, and no editors were ever told Libow's language was objectionable.

Prior to his dismissal, Libow wrote in his columns about ties between some of Springfield Colleges' trustees and a building complex being built by the Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Company. The chairman of the Springfield board of trustees, Charles Schaaff, is also president of Massachusetts Mutual. At least three other trustees are or have been directly connected with Massachusetts Mutual.

The life insurance company is building the complex known as Bay state West in downtown Springfield. The project, when completed, will contain the Valley Bank office tower, a retail mall, a parking garage and a motor hotel.

In his January 25 column, Libow wrote, "RUB--Resistance , Unity and Brotherhood--an organization of which I am a member, feels that there are questions concerning taxes, building codes, employment, gifts of city land, the civic center and its deficit, and president, they'll tell you.'

After the meeting, Schaaff, said, "I was somewhat disappointed in several of the members of RUB who came to my home and spoke with me concerning the Baystate West project. Frankly, I have always been interested in Springfield College and these students were certainly not my idea of the 'above-average' type which I had expected to find at Springfield College."

Libow, who did not consider his conduct unbecoming a Springfield student, did not apologize.

For his next column, Libow decided to take a break from the seriousness of such things as Baystate West. He copied desk grafitti and categorized the material into social, cultural and educational commentary.

A few days after his grafitti column appeared, Libow was suspended for "conduct considered prejudicial to the welfare of the student and the college"' because of his personal atwks and because of his language. The president also ordered student editors not to mail out copies of the paper in which the grafitti article appeared.

Libow appealed his case stressing that he had never been warned about his language and that he had been a student in good standing--he even received a letter from the president last fall commending him for his efforts during a "work week."

After a two-day hearing, the faculty recommended Libow's reinstatement primarily because of due process violations on the part of the college administration.

Arts and Sciences Faculty OK's College Split

A strong vote of confidence by the Arts and Sciences faculty had cleared the war for that College to submit its reorganization plan to the Board of Trustees for final approval. And if Trustee approval comes before the end of the academic year, the College will split into three academic units over the summer.

The 269 to 187 vote, taken just before Spring vacation, approved the planned split of the University's largest academic division into three branches: social sciences, humanities and mathematics and natural sciences. The faculty turnout for the vote was, according to Vice-Dean John Maki, one of the largest for any election involving the school's faculty.

Acting Dean of the College Seymour Shapiro, said that he foresaw no changes in present curriculum patterns as a result of the vote to divide the three Faculties. Retaining the concept of the single College, he said, made it clear that present requirement and other curricular patterns would be retained for the immediate future. The Dean said that he doubted whether students would be able to detect any change as a result of the separation.

The recent mail balloting, which determined the wishes of the faculty, follows a May 1969 balloting on the general principle of division. At that time the College faculty voted, by nearly a two to one margin, to support, in principle, a division of the College into three units with a common curriculum. A specific proposal was presented in the most recent voting.

The March 1970 proposal contains some changes from the earlier in-principle proposal. Instead of speaking of three Colleges of Arts and Sciences one College, of three Faculties, is proposed. Jointly-supported College activities were seen as greatly outweighing the activities which would rest in the hands of the separate Faculties, said the Acting Dean in a covering letter to the faculty.

The following are some highlights from the proposal.

There shall be a single College organized into three Faculties: (A) The Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts; (B) The Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences; and (C) The Faculty of Natural Sciences and Mathematics. Each Faculty shall have its own separate and independent Dean.

A vote for the proposal left open the final alignment of departments among the three Faculties, but was construed as support for the form of organization represented in the proposal.

In other administrative matters, the school announced the appointment of two new trustees over vacation. Names were Robert M. Abrams, MD.D, of 28 Dunn Avenue, Holyoke, and Alan Shaler of 4 Brewster Avenue, Easthampton. They succeed Calvin H. Plimpton and Martin Sweig, whose terms expired.

Dr. Abrams is a 1954 graduate of Amherst College and received his M.D. in 1958 from Boston University School of Medicine. He served in the Air Force from 1961 to 1964 and was discharged with the rank of Captain. He is a member of the Holyoke School Committee and President of the Holyoke Community Concerts. He was a member of the Holyoke Civic Orchestra from 1965 to 1969. He is also a member of the Executive Committee of the Hampden County American Civil Liberties Union.

He is chairman of the Ward 6 Democratic Committee in Holyoke and was an alternate delegate to the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

He is a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, the Hampden District Medical Society, the Academy of Pediatrics, the Holyoke Task Force of the Model Cities Program and the Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Academy of Pediatrics. He is on the staff of the Holyoke Hospital and Providence Hospital there and Chairman of Holyoke's Joint Committee on Community Health.

He also serves as consultant to Northampton's Head Start Program. He is author of several articles in Clinical Proceedings of Children's Hospital, D.C.

Mr. Shaler is Director of Studies at Williston Academy, where he has been a member of the English Department since 1959. Earlier this month he was Williston's delegate to the National Association of Independent Schools in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Shaler is a member of the American Guild of Organists, has served the school as chapel organist, and has given recitals in the Williston Chapel. He is a member of the National Council of Teachers of English and the New England Council of Teachers of English.

Currently, besides his duties as Director of Studies, he is Coach of Cross Country and Assistant Coach of Track, and at one time was Assistant Coach of Football at Williston.

Prior to assuming the duties of his present post, he served as Williston's Assistant Director of Studies and Assistant Chairman of the English Department. He still teaches English at the school.

Mr. Shaler received his A.B. degree from Hamilton College, his M.A. from the University of Wisconsin, and he is a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity.

In recent years Mr. Shaler has been involved in town and county government and is currently a candidate for town moderator. He is a member of the Easthampton Town Meeting, the Hampshire County Republican Club, a member and past secretary of the Easthampton Junion Chamber of Commerce; and a member and past chairman of the Town Republican Committee.

UMass Profs Discuss Nutriculture In Extention Service Publication

For the home gardener, nutriculture is probably a waste of time. It's more likely to be of interest to science teachers, 4-H leaders, students and others interested in plant research.

Nutriculture is the growing of plants without soil, the subject of a new publication by the Cooperative Extension Service at the University. The 20-page booklet is "Nutriculture, A Guide to the Soilless Culture of Plants" by Donald N. Maynard and Allen V. Barker of the UMass department of plant and soil sciences.

In nutriculture, plants grow in an artificial medium to which nutrients are added. The medium can be a water solution or an aggregate culture. The latter term describes any solid medium other than soil --quartz, sand, washed gravel, perlite or vermiculite.

Control over the amount and kind of nutrients makes nutriculture a valuable research tool in plant nutrition. The UMass publication, according to the authors, "is not intended as a definitive treatment of nutriculture methods but as a guide for developing useful demonstrations and simple experiments to illustrate some principles of plant nutrition."

Besides general information on plant growth and nutrition, it covers types of plants to use in experiments (garden bean, cucumber, squash, pumpkin, pea, tomato, spinach, corn and soybean are the best), equipment, preparation of nutrient solutions, plans for experiments and several other related areas.

Copies of the booklet, Publication No. 41, are available from the department of plant and soil sciences at the UMass Amherst campus.

JERRY RUBIN (far left), with Tom Hayden and lawyer William Kunstler, may be speaking in the streets of Holyoke Friday due to town wrangling over his appearance.

Davis, Weinglass to Appear Here Rubin's Holyoke Speech Clouded

Chicago 7 defendant Rennie Davis and lawyer for the defense, Leonard Weinglass will speak Wednesday, April 8 in Curry Hicks Cage.

The speech is being sponsored jointly by the UMass Social Action Council, the Orchard Hill Area Government, the Orchard Hill Residential College, the Student Union Program Council, Greenough House, Central Area Council, the Valley Peace Center and the Southwest Assembly.

Meanwhile, last ditch efforts to find Chicago Seven defendant Jerry Rubin a place to speak in Holyoke were unsuccessful. As the result of two meetings, Rubin may be speaking in the streets Friday in order to fulfill his speaking engagement.

The first was a morning session in the office of Mayor William S. Taupier where Dr. George E. Frost Holyoke President, and the mayor indicated that a college location may be provided for the Rubin speech.

The second was a special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce Tuesday afternoon during which business members of the community expressed their concern about any possible confrontation which might result from Rubin's speaking in the streets and indicated a desire on the part of some at least to find a location for the talk.

The chamber session also ran afoul of the mayor whose strong views on Rubin dominated the session and ran counter to some of the chamber members. Taupier charged chamber members with "interfering in what was none of their business."

There were no concrete developments from the afternoon meeting, other than heated discussion between the mayor and chamber members while, as a result of the morning session, a hall of limited capacity may be offered as a forum for Rubin.

The Student Senate at HCC is scheduled to meet tonight at 6:30 in the student lounge and is expected to consider a proposal from Dr. Frost that furniture be cleared from a second floor gymnasium in the HCC annex building on Sargant Street so Rubin can appear there.

The facility is said to accommodate 400 persons and there is some question whether this will be acceptable to members of the Student Senate or to the HCC cultural affairs committee which is sponsoring Rubin's appearance. HCC has just under 2000 students.

Both Tuesday meetings were touched off by reports from the cultural committee that Rubin will definitely be here to speak from 9 to 11 p.m. Friday and that he will speak in the streets since no suitable auditorium, public or private, has been made available by anyone.

The afternoon session Tuesday produced considerably more heat than results as Mayor Taupier "took over" the chamber meeting, took time to denounce the chamber for not inviting him to a meeting last week when Rubin's appearance was also discussed and heatedly charged that two HCC students present for the meeting were "young people who have tried to intimidate the whole city."

CHICAGO 7 lawyer Leonard Weinglass, and defendent Rennie Davis, here standing with Abbie Hoffman, will speak at the Cage on April 8.

UMass Produced Anthology Wins Acclaim

"Black and White in American Culture" is a rare anthology and a rare book. Consisting of 41 pieces by black and white writers which have appeared in the pages of The Massachusetts Review since its first number in the fall of 1959, this collection is more than a documentary. It is an exciting book, with a higher degree of relevance to an America on the eve of a second Civil War than almost any book of its kind.

It is divided into six sections, ranging from the civil-rights movement through music to literature. The number of articles in each section varies, most appearing in the section devoted to the civil-rights movement. Yet, those sections that are more brief do not suffer from a lack of quality.

Although the anthology contains essays by well-known writers and personalities - Nat Hentoff, Jean-Paul Sartre, Saunders Redding and Stokeley Carmichael, among others - it does not rely on them. The strength of this collection lies in the strength of its material, not its name writers.

Only one writer is represented more than once, and that is Mike Thelwell. Thelwell is one of the finest young black writers now working, a writer who not only has a lot to say, but says it well. His short story and two articles are three of the strongest pieces in the book, particularly his analysis of William Styron's novel on Nat Turner, which details the racist character of the book with gentlemanly elegance.

There are other essays in the book of comparable stature. Sterling Stuckey's "Through the Prism of Folklore: The Black Ethos in Slavery" is the best analysis of the black spiritual yet to see print. Stuckey places the spiritual in its slavery context, showing how it was a major weapon of resistance to that dehumanizing institution (which others have found only "peculiar") and the principal means through which the slaves fashioned and maintained an identity separate from that which the slaveholders fought to impose upon them. Sterling A. Brown, one of the editors of "The Negro Caravan," contributes a fine essay, "A Century of Negro Portraiture in American Literature," and Saunders Redding's "The Problems of the Negro Writer" is a provocative essay that examines the core of the black writer's responsibility.

One of the most important essays is the one by Satre, which originally was the introduction to a collection of poetry in French by African and Caribbean black writers. Its inclusion in this collection marks the first time it has appeared in an American book. In the essay, "Black Orpheus," Sartre attempts to explain Negritude to whites. He is brilliant in his descriptions of the why and what of Negritude. He is ridiculous in the conclusions he reaches. Indeed, it is amusing to find a man of Sartre's unquestionable brilliance sounding like any naive white liberal, as he maintains that Negritude exists so that it may destroy itself and blacks can realize that they are part of the working class and join the great proletariat in the sky. The essay is illuminating, not only for its insights into blackness, but even more so for its insights into the paternalistic racism of one of the West's great intellectuals. W. A. Jeanpierre effectively and eloquently refutes Sartre in a short essay included in this collection.

Of the short stories, James O. Long's "Prologue" describes a lynching with masterful simplicity, and Charlotte Painter's "Bye, Lena" is a real gem, using a relationship between two black women, a white woman and a children's word game to show the subtleties of black resistance.

The anthology also includes W. E. B. Du Bois's reminiscences of his Harvard years, an essay by Howard N. Meyer on "Overcoming the White Man's History," a fascinating article on blacks in the paintings of Winslow Homer and Thomas Eakins and four simple and moving photographs of blacks in Mississippi by former S. N.C.C. photographer, Bob Fletcher.

Of no little historical interest is Stokely Carmichael's article, "Toward Black Liberation," the first essay Carmichael wrote on black power. Also included is Milton Mayer's reply to Carmichael, which is interesting as a document of racism in all its intellectual, pretentious finery.

Every essay is not a great one, of course, and the few poems included are undistinguished, although the one by Andrew Goodman, the martyred civil-rights worker, is not without merit.

Over-all, one will have to look hard to find a better collection of writing on blacks and whites in our culture. It is amazing that so much significant writing on race and culture appeared in one magazine, particularly a magazine not primarily focused on the subject. The editors hoped that this anthology would "contribute to the 'moral growth of the intellect' that is indispensable to the achievement of our humanity." If it is read it undoubtedly will.

Ready for F-112?

The Senate is now holding hearings on the F-111 airplane originally called the TFX. It is developing in the hearings that this all-weather, supersonic, electronic marvel can do things no other plane can do. The only thing it can't do is fly.

Billions of dollars have gone into developing, building and defending the F-111 program, and while most of the money has been well spent, there are some who insist we should forget about the F-111 and go on to something else, like the F-112.

I spoke to one of the designers of the F-112, who told me that they were ready to go ahead on production of it as soon as the Air Force started scrapping the F-111.

"How will your plane differ from the F-111?" I asked him.

"We think that with certain modifications our plane can do anything the F-111 does, plus get off the ground. The Air Force told us that while they consider the F-111 the finest plane ever designed, their defense needs for the '70's would have to include some kind of craft that could get into the air."

"But can't the F-111 get in the air?"

"Not for too long."

"How could that happen? Surely the people in the Defense Department insisted they wanted a plane that could fly."

"All Defense asks is that when a company wins a contract it makes an honest effort to do what it promised to do."

"But billions of dollars have been lost on the F-111," I said.

"You must understand the background on building planes for the military. Most plane designs, when originally submitted to the Pentagon for bids, look like piper cubs. Then someone says, 'Can you add some equipment so it will fly above clouds?' The manufacturer says, 'Of course.' Then someone else says, 'How about adding guns and bombs?' The manufacturer says that will increase the cost of the plane, but Defense says it doesn't care. Then a general demands it carry nuclear weapons, which the manufacturer says is no problem, providing Defense will pick up the bill.

"During production, someone remembers the plane should be able to fly in all kinds of weather at almost any speed. The manufacturer says they were thinking of the same thing, so they add more equipment to the plane. Then someone suggests a computer be installed which can do most of the work for the pilot.

"The computer is added, which forces the designers to increase the size of the engine, which makes the frame workers increase the size of the wing, which causes the engineers to restructure the undercarriage, which brings about a suggestion that instead of one pilot, the plane have two, which means another seat has to be added, which adds weight causing the designers to have second thoughts about the size of the flaps.

"By this time everyone is so excited about all the features of the plane, which can fight at night as well as day, in fog as well as clear weather, bomb on land as well as sea, and refuel in the midst of a hurricane as well as carry any atomic weapon in our well-plenished arsenal, that the question of its flying is completely forgotten. Only after the wings start falling off does Congress get a little mad."

"But if Defense goes ahead with the F-112, what will it do with the F-111's they've already paid for?"

"They could give them to the U. S. Army. You couldn't ask for a better-designed tank in the world."

A Paradox

When Thomas Jefferson died, John Adams said that: "Thomas Jefferson will never die," for to him Thomas Jefferson signified the ideals of freedom, liberty and justice, the very same ideals that we are supposedly fighting for in Vietnam. And while the man he epitomized will never die, it isn't because of freedom, liberty and justice, for the very simple reason that that was not Thomas Jefferson. Rather, he was an individual who had reached the apex of paradox, that seemingly incompatible set of standards and values which we as Americans possess as a national trait.

Richard Hoftsader once wrote that: "The mythology that has grown up around Thomas Jefferson is as massive and imposing as any in American history," and that mythology tires to cover up his paradoxes, as we try to cover up ours. This column will not go into Jefferson's paradoxes, for books have been written on that, but will superficially demonstrate a few.

Jefferson wrote that "all men are created equal and endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and pursuit of Happiness. Yet he denied that very statement when in NOTES ON VIRGINIA when he states that a whites have better reasoning powers than blacks, and compares the black man's intelligence to that of animals. He further believed that slavery would be punished by the Lord, yet he owned slaves to further the earnings from his nallery, and to be a proper gentleman in Virginia. He was also the typical American, wanting slavery to be abolished (or so he wrote) yet doing nothing to further that cause (the paradox of believing but not following the beliefs with action.).

But we as Americans are no better, no less paradoxical than Thomas was. Most of us claim to be good Christians, Jews or Protestants; believers in the ideals of the Declaration of Independence; protectors of the Constitution of the United States, that sacred document which most of us know almost nothing about; but if a nigger moves in my neighborhood "I am going to leave, for when one comes, they all come and you know how bad they all are."

But the our paradox is not just confined to racism. We complain about pollution and blame big businesses, yet it's our own cars contribute the major portion of the pollution of the internal combustion engine (60% of total pollution), and we cry about having to pay extra for anti-poliution devices for our cars.

These are just two of the many paradoxes which many Americans participate in every day. And just as we all participate in different paradoxes, so does our government. Maybe a closer look at our government's policies will make the point clearer.

While President Nixon claims that he is trying to get the U. S. out of Vietnam and promises that while he is in office there will be no more of them, he has just stepped up the bombings of Laos, and is considering a decision to help the Cambodians drive out the Communists with aerial attacks.

And the paradox doesn't even begin with Vietnam. Our Department of Defense always seems to be on the offense; the pentagon gets approximately 28 million dollars for publicity, while the Justice Department gets only 3 million to enforce the Civil Rights Acts. And this is in a nation which publicly professes a want for liberty and justice for all.

I am not going to go on, but the point should be clear that while many of us constantly castigate the Nixon's administration's policies, we should also take a gook at ourselves at the same time. For why should our leaders be any different than us?

John Stuart Mill once said that we judge a civilization by the people who made it up; won't people in the future use the work paradox in a description of our nation? Thomas Jefferson is alive and well.

On Free Speech

(The following is reprinted from the Daily Evergreen, Washington State University Student newspaper March 25, 1970)

Student radicals who would like to pretend they are promoting free speech by their belligerant and violent tactics on America's college campuses are actually destroying its very foundation.

It is causing political candidates who in the past were free to voice their opinions, to take a second look at visiting college campuses for fear of reprisal or attacks.

According to the Associated Press, Gov. Ronald Reagan of California said recently that politicians might have to consider no more speeches to large campus groups.

Reagan's reaction grew out of a series of confrontations he had with students on a 2,000 mile campaign trip last week. The Associated Press reported that the students were "shouting, chanting, picketing, calling him a fascist, tossing eggs, clashing at times with police."

Although this violent over-reaction has not engulfed WSU where it is rare that Washington's two Democratic senators let alone any conservative speaks, it is evident that even this attitude could become a reality here.

At many universities, it has become almost pointless for conservatives, moderates or those who disagree with radicals to attempt to communicate with these students. They either must know it all or would rather not have their set ideas challenged by another viewpoint. Candidates must either out shout them, as Reagan did, or give up.

Yet, these are the same radicals who advocate free speech, academic freedom and power to the people. Apparently, they seek it only for themselves rather than for all.

The bombings, rock throwings and snipings which have characterized the movement is not about to go away. As Gov. Ronald Reagan states, "You cannot ignore. The problem is not just one for me."

If American society--its freedoms, goals and asporations--are to remain intact then Americans are going to have to reject violence as a method to solve problems and get back to communicating with one another.

If student radicals are allowed to dominate the political scene and force candidates to avoid campaigning, then violence will have spread its disasterous effects even further.

Campus Comment

Smile!

"Goodday Sunshine
Goodday Sunshine
I need to laugh and when the sun is out
I got something I can laugh about
I feel good in a special way
I'm in love and its a sunny day."

(Today is April 2, 1970. On this date some years ago, no doubt, something important happened. But we don't know what. And we're not sure it matters.

The following is reprinted with minor alterations from the Duke Chronicle 1/3/70, which reprinted it with minor alterations from the Daily Californian, 1/30/68.)

The Collegian would like to recommend that you have an affair with someone this semester. Because there are a lot of lonely people around this campus and you're responsible for them.

You're responsible for them because you don't smile at them. You're too wrapped up in your own problems to initiate communication with those people who are just walking by, or those people who are sitting at your table or the next one.

As you read over your Collegian this morning, angry and defensive, some girl or boy down the row is sitting lonely and defensive, perhaps contemplating suicide.

When you smile at someone and they smile back at you, it keeps your smile going. At first it's a shy smile; you hardly dare, but when they return it you are grinning at the next person.

Inside you're feeling all warm, and your mind is saying, "Everybody loves everybody." And they do.

Another indicator is the "V" sign with your first two fingers that says your heart is in the right place even if your mind isn't. Like some people mean "victory" in the new revolution, and some people mean "peace" and some mean "grass". But they're all saying "We're together. You're not alone."

Wow, we need that when we read the papers every morning and see that Nixon and Mitchell are cutting us down, that Carswell has replaced Haynesworth as the Supreme Court appointee, and that the war is moving into Laos.

It is frustrating. You feel like slaming your fist through the table or throwing a bomb at a symbolic building to insist that "I am alive, I am potent. I am free. I matter."

At UMass you can be free. This is where your mind is not completely shackled with Establishment control, where you don't have to check in and check out and say where you are going, and where you can act like you want to act without feeling guilty.

This is where girls can smile back at boys without being followed, where lovers can sleep together without their friends disapproving, where friends can turn each other on without their friends turning them in.

This is where people can communicate emotions with just a few ords, without having to argue all the assumptions in between.

But mid-semester can be particularly lonely. You're faced with the prospect 8 weeks of a long, boring academic grind, and real spring weather is still almost a few weeks away. You have decided you shouldn't be in school at all. You are so depressed.

Then somebody smiles. He says "Hello, can I help?" He buys you a cup of coffee you sip while talking about your troubles, your mother, your classes, your friends the weather which is sunshine.

Think of Others!

To The Community:

Last year I used to get up and wearily wash and dress, and drag myself over to the dining commons where I looked at the day before on your newspaper while eating poor food. On Sundays I would read the Week-In-Review in the New York Times, being very careful not to feel too much of the bad things that were happening to everybody else but not to me. Going home I would again start out my day re-living the pain of the world the previous day in the Globe, Eye-witness(!) News and H.*B. It got to be such a farce of relating to the world and its sadness that the game never got beyond my, "too bads" and "What a crummy world." What a way to live and relate.

Sadness is that I could do something about it all, with a little help from my friends and the non-learning device we call a University. Cause if WE, individually, collectively, and socially, no, WORLDLY, don't do something, and soon, we will all die, of starvation, or pollution, or of too many people, or whatever man decides or allows to happen to himself. We can and must control our futures, not by worrying about them, or living there, or crying and running away, as I have sadly done, but by standing on this whole earth and saying, "Dammit, no more, no more war, no more destruction, no more death, but life"!

The idea of a Student-centered Degree/program has been floating around this University for sometime, and seems to be still floating. It is a good idea and the first small step toward giving people a chance to really relate to what they want to learn. But what do we want to learn. Comp-lit?, French, quadratic equations, money power, or survival? This University makes no beans about it, and neither do most of the students. It and we are concerned, first and foremost with our own individual, 'I-Me' survival, not our neighbors, not the world's, but 'I-Me'. So it goes, straight to the end. What can we do, alone or together. Design systems, courses, life-styles that hold as the central, and maybe total theme, the survival, physical and mental and emotional, of every human being on our only home, Earth.

Start with Courses. If a course provides information, skills, or methods that helps you to better survive, a word I can't define but think I have anyway, then grab it, and share it. Or design new ones, or remake old ones. Secondly, living. Because everything we do, say, think, affects our own and others' survival, do it, say it, and think in those terms. Where is the food you eat coming from and where is it going? How is what you say to another contributing to their and your own growth, hope and survival? And lastly, and most important but usually the hardest to face, what is your thinking doing for this, your world? For if your brother and children do not survive, you do not either.

You are what you eat and drink and think, and you can't live eating and drinking crude and thinking of 'I-Me". Face it, live it, and somehow, with a little help from our friends, we may just survive.

"If fools and folly rule the world, the end of man may come as a rude surprise, but it will no longer come as a complete surprise." Pazhwak.

For our survival,
GREG EVERETT, of planet EARTH

A Candidate

To The Editor:

I am an unannounced candidate for Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I am using as the main instrument of my campaign a five-plank platform.

The first plank deals with government in Massachusetts. The impersonality of modern government, the misfunctions of our government, and the wasteful and meaningless programs create a feeling of alienation between the people and their government and public servants. The main proposals of this plank are: reform of the civil service system, distribution of additional money to the cities and towns and breaking down the municipal corporation, known as the City of Boston, and creating eight to twelve municipalities to perform the community functions, with Suffolk County performing the metropolitan functions of the present City of Boston.

The second plank deals with population and sex. The population of the Commonwealth continues to grow, putting strains on the housing, transportation, public health and water-procuring systems. Present law prohibits preventing or terminating unwanted pregnancies or the development of social customs outside of the accepted and problem-creating social mores. This plank calls for the elimination of the laws against abortion, fornication, cohabitation, unnatural sex acts and the distribution of birth control information to unmarried women.

The third plank deals with conservation and pollution. Man in his industrial growth has invented substances that nature cannot affect, chemicals that kill or render impotent all manner of life that ingests them, industrial wastes and biproducts that destroy or prevent growth in animals and plants, and products that have given man a high standard of living and mounting amounts of garbage. This plank calls for: 1. outlawing of air, water and noise pollution; 2. putting prohibitive regulatory fees on non-recyclable items; 3. combining cleanup with a wildlife sanctuary system; and 4. combining cleanup with a human recreation system.

My fourth plank deals with justice under the law. If we expect law to do the job of protecting us from the actions of others, then we must: 1. delete from the law those sections which are restrictive of the private lives of others; 2. demand that those who are responsible for apprehending the criminal are not only mentally equipped to do their job, but also do not violate the law themselves; and 3. provide meaningful punishment and correction for the offenders. The three elements of the Criminal Justice process are the Police, Courts and the sanction system. They perform their functions through deference of criminals, restraint of convicts and correction of convicts. Deterence is primarily obtained by having a police force that can quickly apprehend, arrest and convict a criminal. This requires a police force that is well trained and equipped. Correction is primarily obtained by having a sanction system that is geared to correct the criminal and resocialize him. A common fallacy is that harsh penalties will deter a criminal. This is not only false but it also prevents the correction system from performing its functions. This plank calls for correcting the present Criminal Justice process and having it perform as outlined above by: 1. demanding that each employee of the Commonwealth put his personal biases aside when functioning as an employee of the Commonwealth or face disciplinary action; 2. a change of the present methods of police recruitment, training and promotion; and 3. changing of the probation, parole systems and institutions of incarceration in the Commonwealth.

The fifth plank deals with drugs. Drug abuse continues to increase. Scientists continue to differ about harmful or dangerous effects of drugs. Social scientists continue to differ about the effects that the drug laws have on the general population, youth, and law enforcement agencies. The drug laws fail to protect and are primarily used as devices for cultural repression. Drug abuse must be dealt with by medical, religious and social institutions, not by the criminal justice process. The laws against drugs create most of the social problems associated with illegal drug use. This plank calls for elimination of the laws against presence and possession of a drug and allows sale of a non-chemical drug, e.g., tobacco, alcohol, marijuana and peyote by the normal channels, and sale of chemical drugs by a registered pharmacist without a prescription.

I am interested in speaking with any person or group that wishes to discuss any or all of the planks. My mail address is:

Private Files?

To The Editor:

With control of the press, how can we disagree with the administration, or even know who to vote for in November? True these are extremities and will come true at the earliest, far in the future, but we must beware now, for even a partial control of the press can bring unlimited results by those in power in D.C. And even if my fears do not come true, it is quite evident that we need to know more, and not less information about what our leaders are doing in the other end of the megalopolis. What is now needed is decisive action by Congress so as to make a reporter's files beyond reach of the law. Today a wife cannot be made to bear witness against her husband, a lawyer against his client; why not treat the files the same way?

April Fool's

To The Editor:

I glanced over the "special" April Fool's Day section in the Daily Collegian. I saw the notices and read "Campus Crusade for Crap." Was that supposed to be funny? I love Jesus. I dislike the implication. I think that issue belongs in the toilet more than He does. Did the end result of someone snickering justify such a grotesque distortion? Peace.

A Response

To The Editor:

This is in response to the letter by Eric Goldman. Mr. Goldman asks us not to be emotional, yet he too is often emotional. All through his letter he uses the words, facist, racist, and imperialist. These words are usually used by people who have a flair for dramatics, and very little in the way of facts.

In truth he has stated not a single fact, except some small quotes taken out of context. He talks of the Israelis as being imperialists, this is hardly the fact. Unlike the United States, the Israelis are in no position to be imperialists. First, their army is far too small. Second, Israel has far too many internal problems to worry about extra people and land. Whether they would in some future time be imperialistic, I don't know, but I tend to think not.

Mr. Goldman keeps on talking about the Israelis as being racist. This is true only because all people are racist and the Israelis no more than you or I. This racism must be stopped, but not by accusations. The trouble is that Israel has been caught up in a strange chain of events. It became a country (a very small one) by a proclamation from England. This is the first of its "mistakes". Second, all the surrounding countries, attacked it, almost immediately. Since the Arabs lost this gave Israel additional land, which it took out of desire, and out of payment for a war. This was Israel's second "mistake."

Now to get to the "primary issue", the Palestinian citizens. This is indeed sorrowful. After the war, the Palestinians had, as many before, a hatred for their "conquerors", probably unsubstantiated in this case, but nevertheless there. The Israelis had also a hatred for the Palestinians. Foolish yes, because they had tried to conquer them. Many Palestinians fled Israel after this, because of this fear, and the attitude of the Israelis. It is really horrible that this happened. But it did. Both groups are simply human, falling to human instincts.

What most people do not realize is that the Arabic countries would not let their Palestinian brothers, as they call them now, assimilate into their country. It was easier to keep them in refugee camps and fed by the United Nations. So the Palestinians have been living in these camps for over 15 years. They have grown up in poverty and ignorance, and this has led them to go to war with Israel, and not to compromise with Israel. Israel has industry, and it needs skilled labor to work in them. Palestinians could be that manpower needed. This could lead to growth by both parties, if it is mutually desirable.

"This article is a reprint from a recent issue of the "Lowell Sun". It represents the kind of garbage that the masses of middle class Americans are being fed. It represents the kind of garbage that YOU are being fed. It should make you vomit.

LOU SPARANGES

"TERROR AT UMASS"
By LORING SWAIM Jr.
Sun State House Bureau

STATE HOUSE - The revelation that Lowell students were among those who had knives thrust at their throats when militant blacks invaded their dormitory at the University of Massachusetts is having repercussions.

The blacks held the students hostage for several days, causing them to miss critical examinations - and then eventually forced them out of their quarters so the building could be transformed into a black cultural center.

UMass, officials reportedly acquiesced in the take-over and still have given no explanation of the permissiveness.

The Lowell UMass students were reportedly scared almost beyond belief at the experience of having a machette across their throats and ordered to comply with the wishes of the invaders. It happened suddenly, late at night, and as one legislator said yesterday, "what could have happened if drugs were involved and ordinary senses were blurred?"

It has also been learned that the abusive demonstration that took place against former Vice President Hubert Humphrey at the U-Mass Amherst campus some days before the "invasion" was triggered by a faculty member. Word is that the professor in question informed the news media in advance that he would disrupt Humphrey's address, so confident was he that there would be no interference by the administration.

Humphrey was in no mood to stomach the abuse and before he walked off the stage, he declared, "I'm a professor myself, and I don't intend to be intimidated by such words as you are using."

UNQUESTIONABLY UMASS, Pres. Dr. John Lederle will be called on the carpet to explain the bizarre episodes which speak volumes about the permissiveness of the top brass at UMass and their willingness to confront rebels with ordinary disciplinary measures.

Rep. Paul Sheehy, D-Lowell, who has a keen interest in things educational, has heard in detail from a number of Lowell parents about just exactly what went on that night. "There's lots more coming to light," he commented bluntly yesterday.

Lederle and his aides are expected to be summoned before the House Ways and Means Committee, if they don't come voluntarily.

What is perplexing some legislators on that committee is the report that the entire situation has been brought to the administration's attention "but nothing has happened."

The Lowell students who underwent the gruelling turmoil were obliged by their captors to sleep in corridors and corners of the dormitory while their own quarters were being occupied by the blacks. Eventually, the entire building was evacuated by its customary occupants and the blacks took it over as a cultural center - with no reaction from the administration.

"What disturbs me is the easy manner in which a state-owned building is takenover," says Sheehy. He is equally concerned at the terror to which the Lowell students were subjected.

THE EPISODE OVER alleged threats to the career of the hubband of Mrs. Eleanor Campobasso, Arlington Democrat, because of her stand in favor of cutting the size of the House is now officially "closed."

The House Rules Committee met on the matter Wednesday - and apologies were made by the persons involved.

What happendd was that Mrs. Campobasso was reminded during the heated moments of decision a week ago over whether the House cut would prevail or be defeated, that her husband's civil service rating might be affected by her vote. He was seeking promotion from fire lieutenant in Arlington to fire captain, and apparently placed only a fraction of a point behind another man. Both figures were between 95 and 97 points.

But what is not generally known is that it was Rep. Paul Murphy, D-Boston, canny majority whip under House Speaker David Bartley, who is representing Mrs. Compobasso's husband in the civil service issue.

Mrs. Campobasso is remaining strictly mum about any of these details, but they have been learned from others.

Murphy reportedly passed the word to another legislator who did suggest a relationship between the woman lawmaker's vote and her husband's case before civil service.

When the matter was aired in the Rules Committee behind closed doors, Murphy and his colleague reportedly apologized for their actions, and the matter was "closed."

IT WAS REPORTED to this column on good authority that one of the legislators that fateful night of the House cut who claimed he wasn't recognized as the gavel sounded to end the rollcall had actually told the Speaker, "look close the rollcall, but just don't get me in trouble with my constituents." In other words, he really didn't want to be recorded in favor of the cut, despite his insistence before the League of Women Voters in his town and other groups that he was heart and soul for the cut.

Vienna Group Visits UMass For Two Evening Concerts

Dr. Frederick Cerha

Die Reihe, a chamber music ensemble from Vienna specializing in performances of contemporary works, will visit the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts April 7 and 8 under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council Concert Association.

During its two-day stay at the University, the ensemble will give two different evening programs in Bowker Auditorium, each at 8 p.m., presenting a cross-section of the repertoire for which this organization has gained international prominence. Both concerts will be under the direction of Dr. Friedrich Cerha, co-founder of Die Reihe.

The program for Tuesday evening, April 7, will feature a performance of Arnold Schoenberg's Pierrot Lunaire as the major offering. The balance of the program will include Roman Haubenstack-Ramati's Multiple II (1969); Catalogue des Objets Trouves by Dr. Cerha and Kulmination II by Amestis Logothetis.

Die Reihe's final concert at the University of Massachusetts on Wednesday, April 8, is devoted to performances of works by Anton Webern, Arnold Schoenberg and Gyorgy Ligeti.

Reserved tickets for the concerts are now available at the University's Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall, tel. 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium Box Office two hours before each concert.

Theatre Dept. Readies Two Shows

The UMass Theatre Department is continuing its Studio Theatre program with two original short plays this weekend.

"There are Many Rooms", two original companion plays, written by graduate student D.A. Murphy, will be presented in the Studio Theatre, South College, Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 8 and 9:45 p.m.

The two plays, which together run less than an hour, are individually titled "The Coming Out" and "A Room With a View". The former presents a real situation between two people who are incapable of communicating with each other fruitfully. They find their only meaningful mode of communication in a sort of game.

"A Room With a View" deals with an old man and a young prostitute. Director Pedro Silva feels that the audience "shouldn't try to rationalize the play. You have to accept what they (the characters) do on their own terms. The situation, taken as a whole, is symbolic, ritualistic."

The four characters are played by Bill Over and Cheryl Trenholme.

There is no admission charge for Studio Theatre productions. However there are a limited number of seats for each show.

The fourth major production of this University Theatre season will open on April 16. Three short plays by Edward Albee, "SANDBOX", "BOX", and "QUOTATIONS FROM CHAIRMAN MAO TSE-TUNG" taken as a unit, make a penetrating comment on American life as seen by one of America's least satisfied and most theatrically satisfying young dramatists.

The three short plays are directed by Assistant Professor Vincent Brann, who has said, "The evening is about the decline of western civilization, but (typical of Albee) there is great wit, style and cleverness." Professor Brann compares these plays to contemporary music or non-objective painting where apparently unrelated images finally merge into very penetrating inner connections.

Drama critic Harold Clurman writes "There is a melancholy beauty in these plays, and genuine feeling without tears..... They are like no other plays he has written and like very few others written by anyone else." General critical opinion has seen these three short plays as the most experimental, most adventurous and challenging of all Albee's work.

SANDBOX, BOX, QUOTATIONS FROM CHAIRMAN MAO TSE-TUNG will be presented in Bartlett Theatre on April 16, 17, 18 and 19 at 8:30 p.m. All seats reserved, Box Office 545-2579.

Bible Singers Arrive Monday For Unique Musical Afternoon

The Symphonettes, musical ambassadors from the Grand Rapids School of the Bible and Music, Grand Rapids, Michigan, will appear in concert at the Colonial Lounge, Student Union, April 6 (Monday) at 2:30-4:00 p.m.

The 12-voice ladies' ensemble will present a program of sacred music including anthems, hymn arrangements, gospel songs and spirituals. Special selections as performed by soloists, quartets and trios will also be highlighted in the service. An instrumentalist is featured in each section of the program. Presentations will be in 10 min. intervals.

The unique character and purpose of the Grand Rapids School of the Bible and Music is to offer young people a technical training in the Bible. Thus, the descriptive by-line of the school, "An Institute of Bible Technology", portrays the curriculum which is meeting a growing demand in our world of specialization.

Film Series Opens With Sci-Fi Flick

A new and definitely "camp" film series has just been planned for Friday nights in the spring for general student attendance. To be known as the "Springtime Series" its goal will be to provide different film entertainment at the University.

This Friday night, the series' first film, H.G. Wells' "The Time Machine" will be shown, starring Rod Taylor and Yvette Mimieux. Made in 1960, this science-fiction classic has won considerable acclaim for various photographic effects. The movie is in color, and will be presented with a short co-feature in the School of Education Auditorium at 7:30 and 9:45.

In the weeks to come, the Springtime Series will feature such flicks as "Jailhouse Rock" starring Elvis Presley, "Bus Stop" starring Marilyn Monroe, and "The Thing.

"Greasepaint" Roars Into Bowker Tonight

"King" Cocky dons his regal robes as he prepares to try the game of life in a higher role.

A bit of Broadway comes to UMass tonight when the Operetta Guild opens its four -day run of "The Roar of the Greasepaint, The Smell of the Crowd".

This musical, which features such well-known songs as "Who Can I Turn To?", "Nothing Can Stop Me Now", and "On a Wonderful Day Like Today" is the Guild's second production of the year.

The play centers around Sir, played by Michael Walker, and his reluctant sidekick Cocky, portrayed by Brian MacLeod. These two actors are well-known to UMass audiences. Michael Walker was seen in UT productions Danton's Death (as Danton) and West Side Story (as Action) and Brian MacLeod may be remembered for his role of Riff in "West Side Story".

The two characters provide an interesting contrast; Sir is an aristocrat who makes, breaks and changes the rules in the game of Life, while Cocky is the proletariat slob with the goals of the aristocrat and the means of the middle class.

Between these two falls the Kid (Lisa Joy Priester), an urchin on whom Sir heaps lessons on life.

Other characters in the play, like these two, are stereotypes of ideas. The Negro (Natalie Cole) adds the expected token racial exploitation ("Who could aysk fo' anythin' mo'?"); the Bully (John Callahan) brings in the idea of brute force; and the Girl (Carol Roth) rounds out the plot with romantic involvement, as she wails from the parapets and gets seduced.

Since Operetta Guild is a totally student-run organization, UMass students have taken over the responsibility of designing and executing sets, lighting, and costumes, as well as directing the music and choreography. Tom DeFelice, who is directing the production, also designed the set. Musical direction is in the hands of Jay McAuliffe, who is also known for his many Guild and Univ. Theatre roles. Steve Driscoll, a sophomore theatre major, designed the costumes, and choreography is being handled by Sue Bacon and Larry McCullough.

The final result of this teamwork can be seen tonight at 8:15 as the Bowker Auditorium curtain rises for the opening of "Roar of the Greasepaint". Other performances will be at 8:15 p.m. on April 3 and 4, and at 2:30 p.m. on April 5. Reserved seats are available through the Bowker Box Office.

Photos by Patricia Lempart

Sir informs the Girl (Carol Roth), that she is no longer needed in the game while the Kid (Lisa Priester) learns a valuable lesson.

"Sir", played by Michael Walker, frequently bursts into song in this music-packed show.

After crowning Cocky (Brian MacLeod) temporary King, the Urchins sing "Look At That Face", one of the many musical hits of the show.

Sunday's Storm Creates Havoc

It was all a nightmare, or so I thought. Consciousness finally returned Monday at 3:00 p.m. I thought that I was oblivious to everything. However, I do remember a few things here and there . .

I remember blacking out at 6:00 p.m. Sunday, while heading west on the Mass. Pike. Someone in back of me tried to wake me, but nothing would arouse me. My friend left me two hours later, completely discouraged over my condition. So I huddled down into the snow for a long sleep.

I wasn't too worried about being left alone, cause there were others around me in the same circumstances. Plus, there were lots of other people that would chit-chat ten to fifteen minutes with me, then move down the road a few yards and talk with someone else.

At 7:00 a.m., Monday morning, I was woken by the best friend of all (that is for anyone that is like me in appearance) the magnificently strong tow truck! He zipped me off the Mass. Pike over to the garage where he works. I settled down again, but this time in a nice and sunny place. Before I actually fell asleep, I began to recall some of the events of Sunday.

I was so startled that I started talking to myself. "Oh, no! My owner wasn't with me. Would she ever find me?" Thank goodness, I didn't have too long to wait. I know that I'll never appreciate the shot of energy ordered for my recovery.

Now, a few days later, I'm wondering if Sunday really happened. It must have. My owner was lecturing me all the way back to campus on the high cost and trouble caused because of my slight illness. I grumbled right back to her that we all can't plan when and where we will take sick.

C'est la vie!

Rifle Team Wins Southern N.E. Division

With a record breaking 1338-1326 win over Providence College before Spring break, the Varsity Rifle Team won the Southern New England Division and thus a place in the New England Finals at M.I.T. on April 11. This is the third straight year the Redmen have won their division, and if they can beat a relatively weak U.R.I. team this Saturday, they will have completed their third straight unbeaten year in the league.

Last year in the New England Finals, UMass finished fourth of six behind Coast Guard Academy, UMaine and MIT. This year, the Redmen's scores are on a par with Maine and MIT but still lag behind Coast Guard. Thus with two weeks to go, the team is putting all its energy towards raising its total, the necessary twenty or thirty points needed to beat last year's champions.

After four years under coach Mike Goodge, the Rifle team will be looking for someone new to run them. Any faculty member or graduate student who is interested in taking over the Rifle team is strongly urged to get in touch with Mike Goodge (Tues or Thur. eve. 6 - 8 p.m., on the range in Dickinson Hall), or to see the Athletic Department.

MacLain Out Until June 1

NEW YORK (AP) - Denny McLain, cited for being gullible and greedy, was suspended until July 1 by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn Wednesday after investigation disclosed the Detroit Tigers' pitcher had attempted to become a partner of gamblers allegedly involved in bookmaking operations.

The action by Kuhn, who some six weeks ago suspended McLain while investigating his off-the-field activities, also prohibits the ace of Detroit staff from appearing at the Tigers' camp or in their clubhouse until the suspension is lifted.

In addition, McLain was placed on probation with the provise that he be required to provide the commissioner's office with such data on his financial affairs as may be requested so that further such difficulties do not again lead him into a similar situation.

Stickmen Score on Southern Spin

By BOB GANLEY
Staff Reporter

Playing eight games on a Southern trip during the spring vacation, the UMass lacrosse team gave advance notice to other New England teams that it will be difficult to unseat the Redmen as New England champions this season.

The stickmen went down to New Jersey and Delaware to play some of the toughest lacrosse competition in the country and came home healthy with five wins and a tie in eight decisions. Scoring less than the record breaking Redmen team of a year ago, but still playing good defense, they knocked off Bowling Green, Delaware, Nassau College, Lowell Tech, Conn. Valley Lacrosse Club and tied Princeton during the week. The only losses came at the hands of Princeton 2-0, and Nassau 6-5.

In what coach Dick Garber termed "a real good trip", the Redmen allowed only four goals per game, low by lacrosse standards, and scored nine goals per game. The team hosted two games before heading south, against Lowell Tech and Conn. Valley. The Redmen bombed LTI 24-2 in their first outing of the season and then knocked off what Garber called "One of the strongest teams Conn. Valley has ever had", by an 8-3 score.

On Monday and Tuesday the Redmen met a Princeton team which is rated to be one of the top five in the nation and played them to a standstill. The first game ended in a 7-7 tie while the Redmen dropped the second game 2-0. "I can't remember when we didn't score a goal", Garber said concerning the loss. "We outshot them by a 2-1 percentage but we just couldn't score."

UMass then journeyed to the University of Delaware for games on Wednesday and Thursday. The Wednesday competition was provided by Bowling Green University, the number one team in the Midwest this year, and the Redmen came back from a 3-1 deficit to win 6-4. "Once again we took more shots but we had problems scoring", the coach commented.

On Thursday, the Redmen beat Delaware, 7-3, and then headed home, stopping in Long Island, Friday, for a game with Nassau. The Redmen lost the "A" game 6-5 in what Garber called "a real good lacrosse game". The game was tied at several points and UMass had two chances to tie the game near the end but couldn't put the ball in the net. In a "B" game which followed, the Redmen won 7-2.

Garber was pleased with the team's progress and thought the players played well, but he was concerned over the lack of goals. Tom Malone proved to be the top man on offense, but he received help from sophomore Paul Rich. Rich played well according to his coach, but will be sidelined indefinitely with a shoulder separation suffered in the Delaware game.

The middfield of John Gannon, Paul Sheridan and Marinacchi has been tabbed by Garber as possible #1 midfield and the coach also praised the work of Dana Stone and Tim Bosworth. The midfield will be the big question this season and Garber was encouraged by the work of the middies down south.

The defense was outstanding with John Orr, one of the best in the nation, and Bruce Crawford in the nets, and Bill DeVore, Al Ruggiano, Joe Smith and Fran Bositis doing fine jobs as defensemen.

A TOUGH ASSIGNMENT – This goalie drew the tough assignment of holding off UMass' high scorer Tom Malone. Malone, who was top point scorer for the Redmen last year, lead the team in scoring on the Southern trip.

Redmen Recruit A Plus Players

UMass' basketball program is looking even better these days with word that New York high school stars Rich Pitine of St. Dominic's of Nassau and Al Skinner of Malverne have indicated that they will play their college basketball for coach Jack Leaman and the Redmen.

Following UMass' loss to Marquette in the NIT two weeks ago, the 6'1-180 pound Pitine, a guard, signed a letter of intent to come to UM. Over 180 colleges sought Pitine's services via letters and 75 offered him full scholarships.

In fact, he cancelled previously planned trips to Davidson and Notre Dame after favoring the Redmen. A 27.8 points-per-game scorer in his senior year, Pitine was the second leading scorer in Nassau and was selected to the first string, Division AA team of the Nassau-Suffolk Catholic High Schools Athletic Association. He was scouted by UMass' Ray Wilson.

Skinner, a 6'3 center, led Malverne to the South Shore (Long Island) championship and made a "verbal commitment" to attend UMass. A good ballhandler, Skinner is expected to be converted to a guard because of his height.

Redman football got into the signing act with an announcement that South Jersey scholastic football back of the year Ken Hoff accepted a full grant-in-aid to play for the Redmen. Hoff attended Haddon Heights High School in New Jersey and was named, in the fall, to the All-South Jersey and state All-Group 2 teams.

He received 35 college offers and had narrowed his final choices down to North Carolina State, Penn State and UMass. As a fullback on offense, he scored 78 points in his senior year with more than 1500 total yards offense. The 6'3-210 pounder, who runs the 100 in 10.2 seconds, led Haddon to an 8-0-1 season.

ONE OF THE BEST – Johnny Orr, defending the UMass goal in action last year, has been tabbed as one of the best lacrosse goalies in the country for the upcoming season. On the recent Southern trip, Orr and goalie Bruce Crawford yielded an extremely low average of four goals a game. Garber's Gorillas posted a 5-2-1 mark on the Spring trip.

McLain Out Until July 1

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) - The suspension of Detroit pitching ace Denny McLain until July 1 was called very fair Wednesday by Jim Campbell, general manager of the Tigers.

Shortly after McLain's suspension was announced in New York by Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, Campbell said at the Tigers' training base:

"Denny is being suspended for conduct detrimental to baseball and not for the gambling on baseball. I think it's very fair. I think he, Kuhn, did a thorough job and I think he did what is right.

"I'm certainly pleased it isn't any longer. I'm tickled to death. I figure he'll miss 72 games of 162 games and that's less than half the season."

Campbell said he met with the Detroit players and told them about the suspension.

MORE ACCOLADES FOR COACH AND STAR – At the New England College Basketball Awards Banquet held in Springfield Monday night, UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman and star sophomore Julius Erving received more awards. Leaman picked up a trophy as New England's top coach and Erving collected two plaques, one for his selection to the all-NE team and the other for being tabbed as NE's number one sophomore. At right in this photo, congratulating Leaman and Erving, is one of the great figures in basketball, Joe Lapchick.

War Bill Signed Into Law By Sargent

Sargent Signs Bill To Test Vietnam War

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent signed into law Thursday a bill its authors say will challenge the power of the President of the United States to order Massachusetts citizens to fight in undeclared wars.

The law, which became effective immediately, requires the state attorney general to bring a state suit in federal courts to argue that no citizen shall be required to serve in foreign hostilities in the absence of a congressional declaration of war.

Sargent said he was signing the bill because it is "an appropriate manner" to answer the questions many have been asking about the Vietnam War.

Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn told newsmen after the signing that he planned to file a suit in behalf of the commonwealth and one military man who has been ordered to Vietnam.

Quinn said he has already been approached by an individual who asked relief from a military order to Vietnam duty.

A spokesman for Quinn's office later identified the applicant as John J. O'Brien, 19, of Medford, a soldier in the Army who is under orders to go to Vietnam April 16. The spokesman said he did not know the soldiers' whereabouts at the moment.

The attorney general said he would urge all military men to continue to obey orders even to the extent of going to Vietnam until action is taken on the Massachusetts law.

He said the case would be brought directly to the United States Supreme Court because that body has original jurisdiction in cases involving a state. Quinn said he expects the case would not receive attention from the court, however, until the October session.

The governor said he had informed President Nixon's staff in advance of his decision to sign the bill. He added that he told Nixon last week that he might sign it.

The attorney general said that he does not consider the law as an attempt by Massachusetts to interpose itself between citizens of the state and the federal government.

"We are not attempting to deprive a citizen of his rights," Quinn said, "but are seeking to protect the constitutional rights of our citizens."

He said it was true that the Supreme Court on a previous occasion had refused to rule on the constitutionality of the Vietnam War, but said that never before was one state a party in the action.

He said also that if the court upheld the Massachusetts law it probably would apply to all citizens of the United States.

The attorney general said he will write to other attorneys general in the United States and ask that he be informed of any actions similar to that of Massachusetts.

Rep. H. James Shea, D.-Newton, the legislator who filed the bill, said it "represents not only a victory for this state but for all the American people. In the past several weeks we have reopened a debate on the merits of American foreign policy for the first time since last November.

"We have demonstrated to our young people that the system can function. And we have demonstrated to the Congress and to the President that the people will not sit idly by while the fundamental law of this nation is either abrogated by one branch of government or appropriated by another," Shea said.

Col. Paul F. Feeney, deputy director of the Selective Service in Massachusetts, said enactment of the anti-Vietnam bill would have no direct effect on Selective Service operations because once the men are inducted they become the responsibility of the various services. He pointed out that when men are drafted by the Selective Service there is no determination on whether they will be assigned to Vietnam.

Feeney said he felt the new law would not survive a court test. He cited a similar case heard in Federal District Court in Boston which was dismissed on grounds that the constitutionality of the war is a political and not a judicial question.

A bill similar to the new Massachusetts law was introduced Wednesday in the Rhode Island Senate.

The sponsor, Sen. Harold Arcare, D.-Providence, filed an additional resolution Thursday, proposing a statewide referendum to test public sentiment on the war.

Mass Governor Comments On Support of War Bill

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent today signed a controversial bill to set up a test of the Vietnam war.

"I sign this measure," he said "to permit its sponsors to seek their day in our nation's highest court."

He said the sponsors seek a judgment in the U.S. Supreme Court "and I will not stand in the way of that quest.

"I therefore choose neither to express my own judgment, nor seek that of our attorney general, nor even that of our own supreme judicial court."

The governor called the bill "a measure of sincere intent, doubtful effect."

The governor also tacked on an emergency preamble to make the bill take effect immediately instead of the customary 90 days.

The governor, speaking in the Executive Council chamber packed with television cameras and newsmen, warned against "false hopes" by parents that simply by passage of the bill "it will safeguard their sons from conflict's peril.

"This measure's legal development may be lengthy and as I have indicated, its results doubtful.

"Hope should be tempered with caution and realism. Further, Massachusetts servicemen should realize this bill's enactment provides no license for them to disobey lawful orders received from military authorities."

Sargent said the issue is "whether and when, under our constitution, a citizen can be compelled to engage in a conflict that lacks a congressional declaration of war.

"That issue is valid. Indeed, it is one of life or death. Its resolution, treated in that spirit, is neither to be feared nor avoided."

The governor noted the opponents of the bill predicted it would die in federal courts on constitutional grounds.

He said the effect of the bill is still "uncertain and in considerable dispute."

To all German Majors:

Next year, Prince House will be composed of one-third graduate students, one-third undergraduates and one-third foreign students. Because of this, there is a possibility of having two French and two German corridors. These would be composed of undergraduates and native speakers. If you are interested, please give your name, address and telephone number to one of the secretaries in Room 512.

Faculty Senate Votes to Cancel Classes April 10-11

By JOHN J. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

After exhaustive debate, the Faculty Senate yesterday afternoon approved by a roll call vote of 57-14-1 (unofficial count) a special business motion to endorse the plans of the April 10-11 Committee and to cancel classes for those days.

Professor Alan Campbell, in response to a question from the floor, and representing the April 10-11 Committee, gave a capsule of the Committee's plans.

There will be a widely-publicized Thursday night Cage teach-in to inform the community of the reasons why all should participate. Friday will see more than thirty five previously-publicized panel discussion - workshops organized under specific topics, with a stress on previously thought out positions by panel members. Saturday will review the results of Friday's work and lay plans for referenda, to be submitted separately to faculty and students, tentatively scheduled for early May.

The debate opened with a strong endorsement of the motion by Chancellor Tippo, in which he catalogued the violent disruptions at California, Texas, Washington, Oregon, and other places which the Chancellor recently visited; and described the resultant repressive action taken by some of the institutions' governing boards.

Dr. Tippo concluded that his support of this moratorium, a reversal of his previous "hard line" attitude toward such projects, was attributable to his judgement that American higher education is currently in a crisis situation. He stated that "these are unusual times that call for unusual responses," and that "It takes years to heal the wounds (from such disruptions), regardless of how they are handled."

The Chancellor strongly urged all members of the University community to take part in the April 10-11 activities "to the fullest extent possible." The Chancellor stressed that the most advantageous time to effectively confront the issues facing the University is now, during a time of calm, instead of in an air of crisis, when they are usually confronted. That theme was echoed by several Senate supports of the measure.

Opposition to class cancellation was borne primarily by Senators Reid (Speech) and Fenton (Government). Mr. Fenton, after noting his participation in many similar though smaller and voluntary, events, charged that this bill was "an effort to involve the silent majority. There exists both a right to participate and a right to not participate. The Chancellor is trying to impose official and moral slavery, to force us to give up our classes and participate in these activities. I ask those who are interested in faculty freedom to join me in opposing this provision."

Mr. Reid, who moved unsuccessfully (19-49) to delete the class cancellation from the bill, contended that "Students come to the University with the expectation that we will follow the academic calendar and pursue our academic activities in a normal manner, and we ought to satisfy that expectation."

Other Senators charged that students would take advantage of cancellation to enjoy a three day week end, that those who are really concerned will participate regardless of whether classes are cancelled.

Student Senate President Cynthia Olken, after noting unanimous Senate support for the cancellation, stated "I don't mean to belittle classes, but I can't see why some of you are so upset about cancelling a day and a half of classes. I strongly believe that I can gain much more from a day and a half of discussion than I ever could from a day and a half of any kind of classes." The declaration drew scattered applause from the Senate. Senator Barnard subsequently endorsed President Olken's sentiments.

Senators saw a variety of related advantages to the event. Dean Allen (Education) contended that class cancellation was necessary because "We must do something dramatic if we are to appear to take these challenges seriously." Professor Bromery, recently - appointed Assistant to the Chancellor for Student Affairs, supported the measure as a badly-needed means of encouraging contact between faculty and students. This contention was seconded by Dean Appley (Graduate School) who declared that "we face a crisis in trust. The students don't know, trust, or communicate with the faculty. (The encouragement of these goals) is what we gain from the cancellation of classes."

Other Senators contended that even if this effort does not solve all or most of the University's problems, or fails to prevent crises and confrontations, it will have been sufficient justification for cancellation if the gap among the elements of the community is narrowed; if, in the words of one Senator, "we improve the campus tenor, and increase the amount of trust."

A further attempt by Mr. Sternheim to eliminate cancellation by a different amendment failed 22-46; and amendment to add a day and a half of classes at the semester's end as compensation was defeated 27-42.

Though an amendment to that effect failed, a number of people indicated plans, supported by Chancellor Tippo, to make such an activity a regular part of the academic calendar, for one day per semester. Such plans doubtless depend on the degree of success enjoyed by the April 10-11 event.

In other business, the Senate overwhelmingly passed a motion "repudiating the actions" of the Humphrey disrupters, reaffirming the Faculty Senate's commitment to academic freedom, including the right of invited speakers to be heard, and noting the investigation under way by a faculty committee.

Mr. Fenton, author of the bill, affirmed the University's need for "untrammeled freedom to inquire, express, and criticize." He further maintained that "there is no doubt about what happened. Mr. Humphrey was invited as an expert on government, and he was prevented from giving his speech."

In partial rebuttal, a Senator contended that, while the actions of the disrupters was indefensible, the bill "draws the lines too harshly. In the old days, Humphrey would have chewed up the disrupters, and spit them out. He chose to leave because he got a lot of political mileage that way. The fact is that Humphrey capitalized on the disruption."

The Senate postponed until after the April 10-11 events a bill introduced on behalf of the Student Senate which provides for a joint commission to study the "deleterious effects on its inhabitants. . . of the general psychological environment of the University."

Rubin to Talk In MacKenzie

Last minute efforts to find a place for Jerry Rubin to speak in Holyoke have been successful. The Holyoke Community College Student Senate has secured MacKenzie Stadium for the speaking engagement they are sponsoring. Rubin, a defendent in the Chicago Seven trial, had said earlier that should no other site be found, he would keep his engagement even if it meant speaking in the streets. The speech is tentatively scheduled to begin at 9 p.m.

Leyden Prayer Case Resolved by Court

BOSTON (AP) - A Superior Court judge has ruled that elementary school children in Leydon may hold prayer sessions before classes if teachers do not participate.

Judge Paul V. Rutledge said that student prayers are "entirely voluntary" and do not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

"I'm sure we'll see a lot of change take place for school prayers in the state and across the country because of this decision," said Roy Ainsworth, chairman of the Leydon School Committee.

The ruling Wednesday was on a petition filed Jan. 26 by state Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn, who sought to have the prayer practice declared unconstitutional.

Quinn filed the petition on behalf of Neil V. Sullivan, state commissioner of education.

Children in Leydon meet in the classrooms of the four-room elementary school for five minutes before classes each day and participate in prayers or Bible readings. The practice was started last September.

A spokesman for Quinn said consultations were taking place with Sullivan to determine if he wants to appeal the decision to the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

Latest Postal Negotiations

WASHINGTON (AP) - Government and union negotiators agreed Thursday on a two-stage 14 per cent pay increase for postal workers that is tied in part to a major overhaul of the mail service.

Postmaster Gen. Winton M. Blount and AFL-CIO President George Meany announced that the agreement would provide a 6 per cent increase retroactive to last Dec. 27 and an additional 8 per cent raise effective upon congressional enactment of a Post Office reform measure.

State Welfare Systems Below Fed'l Standards

WASHINGTON (AP) - The welfare systems of 40 states failed to meet federal standards completely, the Department of Welfare disclosed Thursday.

Some of the apparent violations involved relatively minor bureaucratic provisions that little affect directly the nation's 10 million welfare recipients.

Others cut to the heart of compliance with congressional provisions and Supreme Court decisions as long as three years ago enlarging the rights of persons receiving public assistance. Compliance deadlines are past in all cases.

Eight states, for example, have yet to satisfy requirements for implementation of a 1969 court decision that abolished minimum residency requirements for welfare eligibility.

Fifteen states have similar problems with a 1968 ruling that struck down the so-called "man in the house" limitation on children's aid.

The government says 12 states and the District of Columbia have not gained approval of required plans for periodic readjustment of welfare payment standards.

Ten states have no government approved regulations for carrying out an important 1967 congressional amendment. It required states, as a work incentive for recipients, to disregard the first $30 of earnings and one-third of all additional earnings in computing welfare benefits.

Federal welfare officials question whether nine states provide fair hearings to recipients facing a loss of aid.

The government's scorecard of welfare compliance is current to Jan. 1 The situation in some states may have changed in the past three months, federal officials cautioned.

Federal red tape, they added, may be as much to blame for compliance delays as state recalcitrance.

"Nevertheless, there are a number of states fighting us tooth and nail," said one knowledgeable Welfare Department official. "This is a serious problem."

Woburn Teachers Jailed; Strike for Higher Wages

BOSTON (AP) - Four Woburn teachers who took part in a teachers strike in defiance of a court order were held in contempt of court Thursday and sent to Suffolk County Jail without right of bail.

Judge Robert Sullivan in Superior Court told the teachers they would be released if they return to contract negotiations with the Woburn School Committee or resign their positions.

He declined to hold two other teachers in contempt.

The six are members of the Woburn Teachers Association, which went on strike Wednesday despite a temporary restraining order issued March 31.

The restraining order was issued after Dr. Frank Hassett, superintendent of schools in Woburn, said the safety of the city's 8,700 school children would be endangered if the court did not intervene.

Fourteen of Woburn's 15 public schools were closed on the first day of the strike. All were closed Thursday.

The Woburn teachers are seeking pay scales ranging from $7,300 to $11,700 for teachers with bachelors degrees. The School Committee has offered a $7,100 - $10,900 range. The teachers' contract expired eight hours before the strike.

Virtually all of the 450 teachers in Woburn did not report for classes Thursday.

Judge Sullivan ordered the school board to supply him with the names of those who did not work.

In ordering the teachers to jail, Judge Sullivan said he was not acting on the merits of the teachers' position with the city, but on their failure to obey the court order forbidding the strike.

Their action was an "affront to the administration of justice," Judge Sullivan said.

Held in contempt were Arthur J. Hurley, 26, president of the Teachers Association, Susan M. Brennan, 24, and Sara E. Potter, 26, french teachers and Janet A. Bellizia, 23, a first grade teacher.

Racism and Repression

Black people in this country are victims of the same enemy that is faced by the people of Vietnam. This enemy is the racism used by war makers. This is the racism that would wipe out whole villages in Vietnam and exterminate Fred Hampton and Marc Clark in Chicago and shoot down in cold blood a hospitalized black youth in Boston City Hospital.

Not to see the relationship of those wanton murders in Vietnam and the United States is to deny the responsibility of peace loving white Americans to black brothers and sisters as human none the less fellow Americans.

The Nixon administration's policy of "benign neglect" of racism must be viewed by the anti-war movement as a policy to be fought against and not joined.

Remember the lessons of Nazi Germany when Pastor Niemoiller said: "When the Nazis attacked the Communists I was uneasy, but after all I was not a Communist, and so I did nothing; then they attacked the Socialists and I was a little uneasier but still I was not a Socialist and I did nothing; and then they attacked the students, the press, the Jews and so on, and I was always uneasier but still I did nothing, and then they attacked the church and I was a churchman and did something, but then it was too late."

A UMass summer session course on International Education in Mexico is being planned by the School of Education Center for International Education. An experimental six week, six credit course in international education will be offered this summer in Cuernavaca, Mexico. Tentative dates are June 29 through August 7. This course will combine a seminar in international education and an individual, independent project for each student.

Through association with Cuernavaca's Center for International Documentation, students will be able to live with a Mexican family, study intensive Spanish, and attend special lectures and seminars on Latin America.

Primarily designed for education majors, the program is open to all University students. To apply or receive more information, contact the Center for International Education in Montague House, or call 545-0465.

The course will be limited to 15 students and is subject to final administrative approval.

Anti-War Demonstration Set For April 15 at Boston Commons

On April 15th., Boston Common will be the site of this Spring's first massive anti-war rally. The rally will be held six months after 100,000 people jammed the Common on Oct. 15th. for the largest anti-war rally in Boston history.

Sam Brown, National Co-ordinator of the Vietnam Moratorium Committee and Carol Lipman of the Student Mobilization Committee made the rally announcement at an afternoon news conference at a Boston Hotel.

Rally Committee spokesman are planning to have a nationally-known figure for the April 15th rally.

"We are renewing our protest against the war after a long winter of deliberation, Brown said. Now we are going to make sure that this will be a 'Not-So-Silent-Spring'".

Student Mobilization Committee National Secretary, Carol Lipman stated that "the anti-war movement will be out in the streets again this spring, renewing the struggle to bring every last American G.I. home from Vietnam and from all of Southeast Asia."

Rally Committee spokesman stated that protests against domestic racism and repression will be one of the focuses of the April 15th rally. They endorsed a statement drawn up by six leaders in the Boston black community.

On the subject of the war in Vietnam, the anti-war leaders stated that the Nixon policy of "Vietnamization" is just an extension of Johnson-Nixon policies of tragedy and failure. The answer, said the anti-war spokesman, is total and immediate withdrawal of American military forces from Southeast Asia.

"The President has assured the nation that the fighting in Vietnam would be substantially scaled down and that our commitment there and in Southeast Asia in general would be reduced. Yet recent events in Laos, Cambodia, and Thailand, as well as the continued conflict in Vietnam bring these assurances into serious question," they said.

The leaders reaffirmed their support for the Goodell Bill, S. 3000, "The Vietnam Disengagement Act of 1969", whereby American military forces would be removed from Vietnam by December 1 of this year.

Lipman and Brown also endorsed the campaign to put the Dearborn Anti-War Referendum on the ballot in Massachusetts for 1970. The Referendum calls for the "immediate and total withdrawal of all United States troops from Vietnam and Laos."

The leaders say they expect as many people at the Boston Common rally April 15th as thronged to the Common last October 15th. 100,000 people jammed the Common to hear Senator George McGovern and other speakers denounce the war. They said, "We look again to Boston for leadership in bringing renewed attention to the tragic, sober fact that we are still in Vietnam and are getting deeper into Laos, Cambodia, and Thailand."

The local anti-war groups will be organizing in local communities and schools to drum up support for the April 15th rally. This rally is being sponsored by a coalition of groups that is broader and more representative of different communities than the October 15th rally.

Support April 10-11

The April 10-11 movement, a plan to cancel classes on those days and instead have large-scale student-faculty-administration discussion on the problems facing this campus, was only a distant hope weeks ago. Now, with Faculty Senate approval of the idea, the movement is on the verge of reality.

The committee will be presenting definite schedules of April 10-11 activities within the coming week. To be meaningful, this movement must have the backing of a large cross-section of the campus community and more importantly their active participation.

We urge ALL students, faculty, and staff members to watch for the April 10-11 activities, and to participate fully in them.

It would be sad indeed if a genuine movement to improve the climate of this campus were injured by lukewarm acceptance on the part of those it strives to aid.

Come Together

On April 10 and 11, the University community will hold, for the first time, two days of serious internal discussion. These discussions, as planned, will be about the problems facing the University's students today, and may, hopefully, result in some constructive changes in the manner in which this school functions. This is asking for an awful lot, but it seems to me that a great deal can be accomplished if people can just muster up enough concern and then channel this concern into thoughtful dialogue. Never underestimate the power of intelligent people working in their own moral self-interest. In other words, don't sell your own individual significance short on this campus. You do count, and the discussions will be in your own interest, so it seems to me that participation on April 10 and 11 would be just about the wisest thing that each of us could do.

These two days, with the various sanctions given to them, are not just another couple of days "off", as I fear many will view them to be. It seems to me, that if you take this attitude you will be, in effect, doing nothing to loosen the academic tie that is too tightly knotted around your throat. If you're unhappy with the consistancy of the pablum that you're being fed here, your Golden Opportunity is at hand. Why not, in the sanctioned company of 15,000 or so fellow ingestors, wretch up the damn stuff and demand something more in line with the reality of today's living? Something, say, like steak? Don't settle for less lumpy mush; why not go first class? Why settle for second best when only the best will do? After all, steak is much more nutritious than pablum, certainly more dignified, is more satisfying, and tastes a hell of a lot better, too.

So, if you want to have some say in your own education, work for change on April 10 and 11. Speak your mind candidly and listen thoughtfully as your brother speaks his. After all, a good rap session is a basic act of love for your brothers and sisters, and we are all here together. We are all one. What an excellent opportunity to affirm that love and to change our common menu.

"Beatles - Come Together",
April 10 and 11. Do it.

Not Something New

President Nixon complained on Wednesday that his constitutional right as President to appoint Supreme Court Justices was being denied by the Carswell foes. Nixon seems to be forgetting about the constitutional right of the Senate to reject his choices when they are not good ones. This feeling of power by the executive has helped cause the need for the "War Bill."

Governor Francis Sargent took bold and courageous action yesterday when he signed the controversial "War Bill", which might ruin his political career nationally, as the leaders of the Republican Party will take a dim view of his action, but he must have decided that it is about time for this nation to be governed legally.

The bill was passed by the state Senate Wednesday, will probably be tested by the Federal Government and will most likely wind up in the Supreme Court. The Court will then have to reach an historic decision, concerning the way this nation will be governed in the future.

The real issue involved is not just the war, but whether THE CONSTITUTION IS DEAD. A system of checks and balances supposedly insures our freedom, but that system is being severely tested by the Nixon Administration. One of the integral ingredients in this system of checks and balances is the "Supreme Law of the Land" which dictates how our government shall operate so as not to "tyranize" the people, which it is supposed to protect.

Violating the Constitution is not something new. In Washington's Administration, Hamilton and Jefferson argued over whether or not the Constitution was to be followed literally or not. More is at stake today than was then because many of the young men of this nation are being forced to fight in an "undeclared war", wind up in jail, or leave the nation which many of them love.

The Constitution clearly states in the "Powers Granted Congress" that only Congress shall have the power "To Declare War." Yet, we are fighting a war, which Congress had not declared.

At Curry Hicks Cage, former Vice-President Humphrey was asked why the war in Vietnam was not declared by Congress, he thought it to be a dumb question. Mr. Humphrey missed the point completely because, if violating the Constitution is so easy, then how long will our supposed freedom last?

When the war bill reaches our Supreme Court, that Court will have to decide whether the Constitution, which guarantees the power of the courts, really is the "Supreme Law of the Land", or whether the President can by individual and illegal action do anything he wants, such as start a war where many Americans will die. And, for those reactionaries who pronounce the slogan: "America Love It, or Leave It!" All that many of us in the Anti-War Movement want to do is live under, not above, the Constitution which you call sacred.

WOPE

Keven H. White

To the editor:
I hope (but doubt) that at your Sports Staff meeting someone was assigned to cover women's sports events. Yes, COLLEGIAN, there is a WOPE.

I consider athletics a very integral and worthwhile facet of University life, as does, apparently, a majority of this campus - but University Athletics does include BOTH male and female participants. Why is it that women's athletics is virtually ignored by the "free and responsible (?) press" of our community? The first time many people were made aware that there is such a thing as a female gymnastics team was after a letter to the editor was published about the lack of support from within the Physical Educativn Department itself. See how the University community rallied to alleviate this injustice - the girls had to pay their own way to and from Utah and the MDC did not even mention the results of the competition. I'm sure everyone is impressed with the way UMass supports its teams.

Now it seems that the Phys. Ed. Dept. was overzealous in assigning officials to Spring Intramurals and did not leave any free to officiate at women's Softball games. The PE Dept. at Boyden consoled the team "Well, girls, that's how it goes" - but WHY? WHY do intramurals get preference over the UMass women's Softball team?

I don't expect to see much of a crowd at the softball games, nor do I expect to see any coverage of the games in the COLLEGIAN, but I do expect the Athletic Dept. to supply ALL their teams with officials before doling them out to Intramurals.

PLEASE, give the team a chance to win or lose on its own merits, not by DEFAULT!!!

(Editor's note - Mention was not given to the results of the women's competition in Utah, because our women could not attend anyway, due to the airplane strikes and poor weather conditions.)

He was dynamic
He was honest.
He answered sincerely, with full knowleged of the facts, in control of the situation,
Or not at all.
He made no excuses for the few issues on which he felt incapable of comment.
But one knew that the questions would not remain unanswerable for long.

He did not make global promises, but individual ones which he cannot afford to neglect.
(i.e. looking into the incident of a sixteen year old girl from Ward Four of Boston who was beaten by police for refusing to yield the American flag that she was wearing as a shawl)

Neither did he avoid, when pressed, questions from the ecology bandwagon.
(He promised a report to the Collegian on the pending proposal to use water from the Connecticut River, as opposed to Boston sources to augment a diminishing supply in that city.)

He stressed the importance of defining and maintaining priorities, and discouraged partisan and past negotiable legislation, in the forthcoming gubernatorial campaign.

He avoided political sentimentality throughout.
He exhibited a most humble method of back-patting.
He did not compromise his beliefs.
Neither did he offer easy solutions, or profess to know all the answers, but instead challenged student responsiveness.
He could easily destroy apathy.
He could vehemently be supported.
He could eventually become governor.
He is a vey untypical politician.

COLLEEN ROCHE

Propaganda

To the editor:
I just read James Weiner's letter which purportedly sets the record straight concerning the Arab-Israeli conflict. Unfortunately, Mr. Weiner did little more than repeat the misconceptions common to most Americans, while accusing Eric Goldman of stating "not a single fact."

Mr. Weiner's first mistake is in claiming that the Israeli army is far too small to be imperialistic and that Israel has too many problems of its own to desire additional land in the first place. If this is so, why do the Israelis retain the land they annexed after the Six Day War. If statistics are consulted, it would become obvious that the Israeli army is superior in numbers and weapons to any of her neighbors' armies. In addition, Israel has the U.S.A. supporting her. It is true that the U.S.S.R. supplies the Arabs, but the weapons she provides are primarily defensive, not offensive.

Mr. Weiner's next mistake is in saying that the Arabs attacked Israel almost immediately after her creation. Even allowing for that mistake, the action Israel took is hardly justifiable. I encourage Mr. Weiner to consult the Middle East Journal which describes the acts Israeli soldiers performed (I can supply citations), such as completely wiping out Arab villages in a Song My fashion, then driving on to the next village and announcing, "Get out of here now, or that will happen to you, too." Is the Palestinians' bitterness and hatred "unsubstantiated" in light of this? This is not an isolated incident, either. The Irugund and Stern Gang forces, though not officially sanctioned by Israel, acted in her behalf in repeatedly committing similar heinous acts.

I must admit that Mr. Weiner is far more understanding and sympathetic to the problem than most Americans, however. Because the Jewish population far outnumbers the Arab population in this country, Americans receive only a distorted, pro-Israeli viewpoint. American politicians, having been slow to help European Jews during the war, try to ease their consciences - and win votes - by making pro-Israeli statements. As a result, America is blindly pro-Israeli where it should and must be neutral.

Far worse, however, is the subtle propaganda. The movie, "Exodus," is a fine example of this. Interspersed throughout the film, particularly at crucial times, is the theme to which everyone knows the words - "God gave this land, God gave this land to me . . ." Very clever and extremely effective. Another example is the Merv Griffin Show which frequently features exquisite Israeli girls who babble about the marvels of Israel. Then there's the Miss Universe Pageant in which Miss Israel and Miss USA inevitably enter at least the semi-finalists' circle. (I'm just waiting for someone to point out to me that last year Miss Tunisia was voted Miss Congeniality.) I don't think I'm stretching the point in citing these examples, for their subtlety is exactly what makes them so effective.

I sincerely hope that I've made my point through criticizing Mr. Weiner's letter and through calling attention to the brain washing and misinformation to which we are subjected.

Shalom and salam - they mean Peace in both languages.

UT To Present Albee Trilogy

University Theatre is presently preparing its second major production of the semester, which will run April 16 through the 19 in Bartlett Auditorium.

"Sandbox", "Box", and "Quotations of Chairman Mao" by Edward Albee will be directed by Vincent Brann of the Theatre department. This trilogy of plays, Mr. Brann feels, presents pictures which are non-objective works of art. Each is "like a non objective painting. If you stare at it long enough, all the disoriented threads start to make sense."

Seats for this production of "Sandbox", "Box" and "Quotations of Chairman Mao" can be reserved by calling the University Theatre Box Office, 545-2574.

Folk Night On Saturday

Washington Middle and Patterson will present a Folk Night on Saturday, April 4 at 8:00 p.m. in Patterson Lounge. Featured performers include Lynne Holloway, Frank Clark, Mary and Ken, and Kevin MacIsaac.

If you think you're getting a great shave with a razor blade, feel your face.

A razor blade can give you a good, close shave on the easy parts of your face.

Like your cheeks. Because your cheeks are almost flat, like a razor blade.

But what about the hard-to-shave parts of your face?

Feel your neck

Feel how your beard grows down on part of your neck? And up on another part? (Some beards even grow sideways.)

To give you a close, comfortable shave on your neck, we designed the Norelco Tripleheader with 18 self-sharpening rotary blades that shave in every direction.

Feel your chin

The Norelco Tripleheader has 3 Microgroove™ shaving heads that float to follow the curves of your chin.

The heads go in where your chin goes in, and out where your chin goes out. To give you a really close shave, without irritating your skin. (In independent tests, the Tripleheader shaved as close or closer than a stainless steel blade in 2 out of 3 shaves.)

Feel your upper lip

The hard thing about shaving your upper lip with a razor blade is shaving close enough.

Again, the unique Norelco design lets you maneuver around your nose and mouth, to shave your beard in every direction.

Feel your sideburns

The biggest problem with shaving sideburns is to get them straight, and even on both sides.

The Norelco Tripleheader has a pop-up trimmer that lets you see exactly what you're trimming. So it's a lot harder to make a mistake.

Now, run your hand over your whole face.

If your beard feels uneven, maybe you should be shaving with a Norelco Tripleheader.

It comes in two models. The Cord Model Tripleheader (with easy flip-top cleaning). And the new Rechargeable Tripleheader (the shaver that gives you up to twice as many shaves per charge as any other rechargeable). Either one will give your face a whole new feel.

Astrological Forecast

by Sydney Omarr

An Aquarius girl can drive almost anyone to distraction. But these women are preerceive and possess humanitarian instincts.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Look beyond the immediate. Tiresome tasks may be necessary. A bit of self-discipline today will prove constructive. Be wary of one who procrastinates. Strengthen inner beliefs.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Insight gained: you have better idea of what you desire. Personal magnetism rating goes up; opposite sex responds. You could also convince important person that you are sincere.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Lie low; play waiting game. Permit mate, partner to call the shots. One expert in legal technicalities is your ally. Know this; respond accordingly.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): You are able to capture essence of what must be done. Means nonsensical activity comes to close. Associates, coworkers fit into pattern. You can earn respect and make progress.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Emotions above logic aside. Know this and battle for self-control. Realize you do have to face yourself in the morning. Be creative in a disciplined manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): Accent on home, property. You complete transaction. Value of possessions becomes evident. You are rewarded for past efforts. Finish rather than start projects.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Accent on relatives, short journeys, new and original concepts. Be daring and versatile. No day to follow the crowd. Set your own pace. Call the shots.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Your possessions need special care. Realize this and act accordingly. One who advocates far-out action is only risking your security.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Take direct action. No day to play role of wallflower. Set sights on goal. You accomplish much through independence, original approach.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): You may feel restricted. This is only a temporary condition. If you cooperate, there are gains. Otherwise, you invite frustration. Take your choice.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20 - Feb. 18): Accent on achieving desires through better communication. Speak up — say what you mean, mean what you say. Member of opposite sex plays significant role.

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): You gain if steady pace is maintained. Avoid sensationalism. Display to superiors your sense of responsibility. You ultimately get what you want. Exude confidence.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, dynamic. Many opportunities due. Social life picks up — you are popular. Check possibilities of beautifying home surroundings.

Monday Movie Revives NIT

Grid-TV Goes by Boards Hoop Stats Revealing

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

If you still have pleasant remembrances of New York and the NIT or if you were unlucky enough to have missed the whole thing, there is good news. Don't make any plans for this Monday evening at 7:30. At this time, a beautiful color film of the UMass-Marquette game will be shown in the Ballroom of the Student Union and the showing is open to all members of the University community.

The film will last approximately one and a half hours and will be narrated by freshman basketball coach Peter Broaca. Varsity Coach Jack Leaman will also speak.

"It should be interesting to watch even for those who went down there to see it," the NE Coach of the Year commented.

Admission to the screening will be $.50 for students and $1.00 for adults. All proceeds will go to the Varsity 'M' Club.

UMass came within a whisker recently of completing a lucrative contract with the American Broadcasting Company only to be shot down by one of its 'friendly' Yankee Conference associates.

The deal concerned network broadcasting of the UMass - Boston College football game as its regional game of the week presentation. However, in order to do this, UMass had to change its schedule so that it would play BC in September instead of later in the season.

Then, the game originally scheduled for this date, with Maine, would have had to been rescheduled for the end of the season, a move which would have meant extending the Black Bears season two weeks.

UMass asked Maine to make the switch and offered to pay it for its inconvenience. Broadcasting of the game would have meant at least $22,000 for the Yankee Conference. Maine said no.

Had the deal gone through it not only would have meant added revenue for the YanCon but also excellent TV exposure and good publicity for the Redmen.

Ex-UMass baseball star Bob Hansen, who signed his pro contract with the Seattle - Milwaukee Brewers, is doing quite well. Hansen has been playing in the minor league exhibition games so far and came up with six hits in 16 at bats in his first five games, including five doubles.

Converted to a first baseman since his departure from college, Hansen is expected to be assigned to either Jacksonville in class AA or Clinton, Iowa in class A.

Final statistics of the recently completed Redman basketball season show some interesting facts. Most prominent among these is that sophomore sensation Julius Erving broke no less than twelve UMass records in his first varsity season.

Among the marks which fell to Erving were most points in one year, most points for a sophomore, most points in one half, highest average in one year, most rebounds in one game, most rebounds in one year, most field goals in one year, most minute played in one year, most free throws in one year, most free throws in one game, most free throws attempted in one game and most consecutive free throws made in one game.

Although Erving dominated the boards for UMass all season long and finished second in the nation statistically in rebounding, he got by with little help from his friends. After his 20.9 average, the next highest for the Redmen was Ken Mathias' 6.0 average.

Erving also led the regulars in shooting percentage, with 50.9%, although Rick Vogeley led the team with 56.7%, hitting on 17 of his 30 shots. In free throw shooting, the order was almost the same.

BOB HANSEN
Going great guns.

Pagliara was the leader of the regulars with a 74.4%, followed by Erving's 72.6%. But once again it was Vogeley who paced the team with an awesome average of 85.7%. Vogeley hit on 12 of 14 attempts for the season.

The award as the team's bad man, statistically anyway, would have to go to Dick Samuelson. The senior center garnered 74 personal fouls for the year, although he was followed closely by John Betancourt, who got hit with 71.

As far as assists are concerned, the leader of the team was naturally captain Ray Ellerbrook. Ellerbrook collected 129 assists for the year, to give him 292 for his career, second best in Redman history.

The development of UMass as a basketball power can best be seen, however, in the record of Coach Leaman.

Best Redman Coverage in MDC

Ruggers Open Season Sunday UM Cracks Spring Against Beacon

Initiating its spring season Sunday against the Beacon Hill Rugby Club, the UMass Rugby Club will open with a substantial number of newcomers against the veteran club from Boston.

Back are Redman veterans Toby Lyons, Jim Vilkites, Paul Joy, Jim Devie, Willis Frisbee and Jack Long. They will be joined by newcomers Sam Davidson, Paul Reynolds and Bob Diramio.

UMass will field a lighter, faster, less experienced club than it did in the fall. The addition of Davidson, however, makes the scrum markedly stronger, and seldom will another jumper gain the ball in the line-out from the 6'7 forward. Speed will be the trademark of the club this spring. The forwards, now seasoned, are attuned to the game and, with their size, should match any club they face this season.

The backs, although losing Frank Deriata, gained Reynolds and welcomed the return of veteran Joy. It is, altogether too early to tell how they will perform as a unit.

There will be considerable competition for "A" team positions this spring, a situation welcomed by coach Bob Laurence. The team should thrive on the competition and will improve as the season progresses.

The rugby year will be a lively one. After Beacon Hill, the club plays Tufts, a weekday game with Amherst, Mystic River, Albany, Hartford, the Schaeffer Tournament here at UMass and finally the London Irish.

The ruggers look forward to their first winning season but the club welcomes all visitors to its semi-weekly practice sessions - late Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

Eng. Prof Analyzes Man Against State

Milton Mayer, professor of English at UMass examines the worldwise movement today against the State in his latest book "On Liberty: Man Versus The State". The book was published by the Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions in Santa Barbara, California, as part of its Occasional Papers series.

In his examination of the roots of man's conflict with The State, Mayer concludes "...law was the rampart of liberty...no man above it, beneath it, outside it. But in the middle of the Twentieth Century the revolution is against the rule of law, now identified as the enemy of liberty." According to Mayer, "Man Versus The State is what all the boiling issues boil down to: democracy and dictatorship ... civil order and civil disobedience, national security and public protest, national defense and pacifism..."

The Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions disseminates ideas through publications to create a basis for informed public discussion of the issues of our times.

In addition to his duties at U-Mass., Milton Mayer is John Woolman Resident at Woolman Hill, the Quaker center at Deerfield.

He has written many articles for some of the best-known American and foreign periodicals, and several books, including "The Revolution in Education" (with Mortimer J. Adler), "The Tradition of Freedom", "What Can a Man Do?", and "The Art of the Possible: A Study of Czech Resistance", another Center Occasional Paper.

Nadar on Corporations Contributors to Violence

"Consumers and Corporations" was the topic of Ralph Nadar's three hour lecture and discussion last Friday evening in the Student Union Ballroom. His talk focused on the huge corporate monopolies that have developed in the last thirty years and their subsequent effect on the American Consumer.

Nadar summerized his efforts in "cleaning up" the automobile, and food processing industries. Nadar sited the major corporations concern over assembly line innovations instead of quality production and consumer information, as a very prevalent form of violence.

Nadar brought the problem home when he stated that a strong nucleus of professional and concerned citizens could begin to empirically investigate industrial looting and corporate crime in the area.

Many areas of education such as business, engineering and the physical sciences could be used to serve both the ends of education and of social reform.

"It doesn't take much," Nadar said, "to extend the arm of critical citizens outside of the university." Nadar called on students to take advantage of the educational opportunity available in becoming part of a critical and powerful body of students and professionals, acting as a link between the consumer and the corporation.

Nadar said that a good place to start would be in the area of campus food services such as the dining commons. "If you can't straighten things out in your own area you are really not ready to move on to bigger problems," Nadar said.

Chicago Area's 50,000 Truckers Reportedly Consider Striking

Union leaders representing the Chicago area's 50,000 truck drivers reportedly were considering Sunday a selective strike technique to enforce their wage demands.

Although officials from Chicago's two truck drivers' unions would not comment publicly, there were published reports that they gave the city's food store chains an ultimatum to sign a binding contract or face a strike.

A strike in Chicago could threaten a national truckers' wage agreement by pulling teamsters off their jobs in other cities, as happened in 1967.

Wildcat strikes already were under way during the weekend in several cities, including Los Angeles; Milwaukee; St. Louis; St. Paul, Minn., and Cleveland and Richfield, Ohio.

The Chicago teamsters have demanded in local negotiations with six Chicago area truck associations a $1.70 an hour wage increase over three years. That compares to a $1.10 an hour increase over three years agreed upon Thursday in national negotiations in Washington.

The Chicago negotiations, which broke off last Tuesday after a brief session, are independent of the national talks, but in the past settlements reached in Chicago have been assessed on the nation's truck companies.

A meeting between local union officials and Frank E. Ritzsimmons, acting national Teamster president, last week did not persuade the Chicago truckers to settle.

"We're not going to prostitute outselves for the benefit of the employers and to the detriment of our members," said Edward Fenner, executive director of the 12,000-member independent Chicago Truckers Union in a statement after hearing about the $1.10 an hour national settlement.

Teamsters Local 705, the other key truckers' union, has about 38,000 members.

Despite the breakdown in talks, union officials claimed more than 300 of the 1,200 area companies have come to an agreement in an effort to keep their trucks moving in the event of a strike.

A truck strike of more than a week could cost Chicago $137 million a day, said John Coulter, research chief of the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry.

The city is a hub in the nation's transportation industry, and vibrations would be felt throughout the nation.

Air Traffic Controllers Return in Various Cities

More air traffic controllers returned to work Sunday in some major cities, but halved airline schedules in New York, Washington, and Chicago caused some crush in Eastern airports.

The end of Easter vacation for many college students contributed to the confusion as the "sick-out" by the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization - PATCO - was in its 12th day.

More air traffic controllers returned to work in Cleveland, where some were threatened with fines for each day of continued absence, and in Detroit, Milwaukee and Los Angeles.

But of 158 controllers scheduled to report to the main New York control center on Long Island, 95 called in sick Sunday - six more than Saturday.

Under Federal Aviation Administration orders, airlines had cut flights in half in New York, but delays were running up to 55 minutes at Newark and LaGuardia and 40 minutes at Kennedy on the reduced schedules, the New York metropolitan area's three jet ports.

In Chicago, the FAA reported controllers at two-thirds strength, with delays running over an hour. The crush was only half as bad as last week, however, when even more Chicago controllers were out.

About 40 more controllers returned to work in Cleveland, bringing to about 100 the number who have returned in the past 24 hours. The Cleveland traffic center had 124 of 141 controllers on duty, which was still above normal absenteeism. Operations, however, were called "normal".

The controllers' return to work in Cleveland followed a ruling by Federal Court Judge Thomas Lambros Friday that 14 men who refused to work faced $500 fines if they failed to appear for work at 3 p.m. Saturday. He imposed additional daily fines for successive days if the controllers stayed out. His action came after he found the men guilty of contempt for failing to observe an injunction against the illegal walkout.

Detroit reported four more men back to work, but six of the normal Sunday day crew of 14 were out sick. Three more returned in Milwaukee, where six of 11 were on duty. Eight of 11 controllers at Madison, Wis., remained off the job.

Los Angeles reported a slight increase in the number of controllers on duty Sunday. Six of 20 reported sick at Los Angeles international Airport, 18 of 70 at the Palmdale regional center, a of 10 at Burbank, 6 of 11 at Long Beach, 1 of 4 at San Diego and 1 of 6 in Orange County.

LA Teachers Threaten Strike

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Teachers in the nation's second largest school system are threatening to strike next Monday unless the Board of Education, already facing a financial crisis, finds money for higher salaries and school improvements.

The board has offered the 25,008 teachers a five per cent pay raise. The teachers rejected it and scheduled a vote Thursday on whether to walk out on the 650,000-pupil system.

"We have asked for a substantial salary increase, and the five per cent is below even a living cost increase," said Robert Ransom, president of the United Teachers of Los Angeles.

Rubin, A Better Performer than Speaker

By ROBERT NORTHSHIELD
Staff Reporter

HOLYOKE - Jerry Rubin's appearance here Friday was in itself absurd. The idea of having one of the nation's ranking Yippies, freaks, etc., appearing in a town like Holyoke is akin to Strom Thurmond appearing in Amherst.

The idea wasn't the only absurdity that surrounded Rubin's performance. (Rubin does not speak, he performs.) There was, of course, the horror of Holyoke's townspeaope at the thought of having such a parasite gracing their fair town, one which boasts of one of the more depressing ghettos in Western Massachusetts. This horror led to frantic reschedulings of the performance by Holyoke Community College, the sponsoring body.

townspeople at the thought of having such a parasite gracing their fair town, one which boasts of one of the more depressing ghettos in Western Massachusetts. This horror led to frantic reschedulings of the performance by Holyoke Community College, the sponsoring body.

After weeks of bitter wrangling, HCC obtained, the night before the scheduled Rubin arrival, the use of MacKenzie Park, a high school football stadium on the outskirts of beautiful downtown Holyoke. This was another absurdity, seeing Rubin perched near the 30 yard line, in a bitter wind, under the dim glare thrown out by the crack lighting system.

HCC was forced to obtain a $6000 bond against damages to this gaudy emporium because of the still lingering feelings of doom that the Holyoke townfathers had, feelings that the inflammatory Rubin would cause a riot in their city.

Finally, Rubin appeared, amid a police escort (which is the ultimate absurdity). He did not really surprise anyone. Rubin speaks in memorable phrases, in slogans. Thus you could choose from among such numbers as:

About Holyoke: "You should have run through the streets to get the place you wanted this to be in."

About his police escort: "I want to kill the pigs and they are escorting me from the airport."

About Julius Hoffman: "Julius is the typical American judge." "He's the nation's number one Yippie."

About riots: "A riot is a party when you have a good time."

About himself: "My occupation is to incite riots."

About society: "The technology of pigs is not equal to the power of the people."

There was, of course, a lot more. Rubin related some anecdotes from his Chicago trial. He described how cheered he was, sitting in a Chicago jail cell, to hear of the Humphrey incident at UMass. He rambled on about the "pig press", revolution, the Black Panthers, etc., etc. He urged all to free David Eisenhower, Julie Nixon and Jill Agnew from their parents. He urged all to kill their parents.

Sponsored by Holyoke Community College, Jerry Rubin spoke last Friday in MacKenzie Park, Holyoke.

The audience was maybe more of a surprise than Rubin. There were, of course, a large segment of area movement luminaries. And there were the marginal freaks who enjoy performances but little else. And there was a good-sized group of Holyoke townies, who either sat in stunned disgust at that "foul mouthed radical" (in the words of one), or left early in stunned disgust.

The furor that surrounded Jerry Rubin's trip to Holyoke far outweighed the furor he always hopes to create. Maybe it was the cold. Maybe it was Holyoke. But Rubin was not exactly greeted with either open arms or closed fists.

That doesn't really matter. Rubin doesn't care how people react to him. ("I don't want you all to mull over what I say, agree with some things, disagree with others. All that matters is action. So Do It".)

What really mattered in a sleazy stadium in Holyoke, was that there was large effort made to deny someone's right to speak.

Our Far East policy brings people together.

The Jade East manifesto. Its aim: to bring men and women all over the world closer together.

Our policy would allow for all sorts of skirmishes, territorial gains and conquests. And still keep the peace.

Just put some Jade East on your face and neck. And anywhere else. If you've got a girlfriend, take her out as planned. If you're seeing a few girls, do whatever it is you're doing.

Now comes the best part. Since all girls are different, all reactions will be different. Some will be aggressive. Others, submissive. But whether our policy leads to final agreement or not, one thing's for sure.

The negotiations alone will be worth the price.

First 442 Days

"That 's life, that's life,
And as funny as it may seem,
Some people get their kicks stomping on a dream."

Unlike the Eisenhower doll (wind it up and watch it do nothing for eight years), the Nixon doll is quite active. In his first 442 days in office our President has accomplished many things, most of them negative. At this crucial juncture in history it is important to examine the leader of this nation and where he is taking us.

Before he came into the national limelight, Nixon was a staunch backer of Joseph McCarthy and his altra-reactionary movement. Many forget that it was McCarthy and his followers who questioned the loyalty of Harry Truman and other distinguished Americans. The McCarthy movement led to a purge of the liberals in the State Department with the result of the new advisors' policy Southeast Asia today. Many of the liberals who had been "removed" were against U. S. interference in Asia.

However, most people realize that Nixon is a conservative, while few appreciate his political genius. Among otherthings, he had Spiro Agnew an original Presidential backer of Nelson Rockerfeller, nominate him at the Republican convention in Miami. This hurt Rocky's movement and helped Nixon get the southern vote at the convention.

Nixon hasn't changed since he has obtained his lifelong dream. It would be very difficult for him to, because Nixon's goal as President, first and foremost, is to be re-elected in 1972, and when the chief executive of this nation plays politics, the good of this country becomes secondary. This isn't to say that other Presidents have not done likewise, but none in the twentieth centry have done it to the degree which Nixon has.

Perhaps his most obvious "politiking" have been his Supreme Court nominations, as both Haynesworth and Carswell are southern favorites and Nixon would like to pick-up some southern electoral college votes in '72. But while Nixon's choices are helping him politically, they are "bringing the nation apart." The Negroes who feel discriminated against, certainly do not believe that Nixon's choices were good ones, for both judges have a history of racial intolerance. Yet Nixon would have them suffer to further his political position.

But his stomping on the American dream hasn't ended there either; his handling of the moratoriums have been another political masterpiece. Last October he literally said that the marchers can protest until their buttocks fall off, because he wouldn't give a damn. By saying this Nixon reaffirms the beliefs of the people who elected him, and keeps them in his camp. His other choices would have been to remain quiet, which would have gained him no "peace" votes, and probably lost him some of his supporters, or else he could have said: "See Hanoi, we're for peace, how about you?" That would have been a political disaster. While few if any peaceniks would vote for "tricky Dicky" in '72, many in his camp would switch to the Wallace side. So Nixon made his political move and further alienated many of this nation's youth.

This has been the trend of the Nixon administration. He fired Robert Morganthau, a man who has done much for this nation in his fight against crime and corruption in government, simply because Morganthau started hitting too close to home for Nixon's comfort. This has helped turn many young lawyers and "liberal" Justice Department employees off towards Nixon. Agnew's harangue against the press has achieved its intended effect, as the media steers clear of some controversial topics. His subpoenaing of reporter and magazine files has weeded out many stoolies from the government. All these actions have not been meant to help achieve the American dream.

It is quite obvious that as far as our President is concerned he is "numero uno" and everything else is a distant second. The question I will try to give some insight into tomorrow is: "What will the results of the Nixon-Agnew team be on the United States?"

Baha'i–Deeds, Not Words

(Editor's Note; The COLLEGIAN will be running a series of feature articles on aspects of the Baha'i Faith, written by graduate and undergraduate members of the Baha'i Association of UMass.

The Baha'i Faith originated in Persia in 1863 when its Prophet-Founder, Baha'U'llah, announced that He was the Messenger of God for this Age, fulfilling all the prophecies in the Holy Scriptures of former religions. In letters to Kings and Rulers of the earth, He proclaimed the essential principle of the Oneness of Mankind, and outlined the institutions necessary to achieve the spiritual unity of the world.

The first article in this series is by Jim Sacco, a graduate student in education. In it he reflects on Baha'i writings on education and their relevance for teacher-training.)

"To acquire knowledge is incumbent on all, but of those sciences which may profit the people of the earth, and not of those sciences which begin in mere words and end in mere words."

(BAHA'I WORLD FAITH, p. 189.)

What may profit the people of the earth? Both material and spiritual education. How can I become an educator? What shall I teach? How shall I teach it? What is a teacher?

These questions constantly plague me. And I am constantly seeking answers to them. Here are some steps in my search.

"In the scheme of human life the teacher and his system of teaching plays the most important role, carrying with it the heaviest responsibilities and most subtle influences. A teacher is like unto a gardener. Just as a gardener sows the seeds and watches carefully over their growth and development . . . so also a teacher must watch over the children and inculcate in their young lives the highest ideals of truth and justice."

My first step in accepting such a responsibility is to examine my own life to determine whether I am capable of demonstrating the ideals of truth and justice which I want to teach. Baha'U'llah, the most recent Manifestation of God, instructs the teacher to "adorn himself with the ornament of an upright and praiseworthy character." (TABLETS OF THE DIVINE PLAN, p. 6.) Qualities such as trustworthiness, patience, and humility are important in the relationship between teacher and student. The teacher's role is that of cultivating growth in his garden. He is the servant of his young and tender plants; he wants them to grow. He is not their conqueror.

"The effort of the gardener maketh of the seed a noble tree. The gentle teacher promoteth the children of the school to a lofty altitude. . ."

(STAR OF THE WEST, Vol. IX, No. 7, p 83)

Both Baha'U'llah and Abdu'l-Baha, His oldest son and Exemplar of the Baha'i Faith, consistently encourage us to be fair and compassionate in our relationships with others. Abdu'l-Baha says simply that if a person has ten bad qualities and one good quality, we should forget the ten and look at the one. Likewise. as a teacher, I must train myself to overlook AND FORGET the bad qualities and encourage the development of the good.

My second step is to seek the most effective principles of instruction from science and religion. Teacher training is an infant science. Most programs for training teachers are based more on tradition and intuition than on findings in behavioral research. But there are programs available which are making progress toward operating from a scientific base and evaluating carefully their results.

Baha'U'llah "proclaims that religion must be in harmony with science and reason." Though a teacher is equipped with the widest variety of verbal teaching techniques, words alone are not the only teachers. In the TALMUD, it is recorded "Say little and do much, and receive all men with a cheerful countenance." One of my college made a lasting impression on me when he had a party in his home. He served everyone with a very joyful spirit and continued to clean up and do work which most men would have left to their wives. "The essence of faith is fewness of words and abundance of deeds . . ." (BAHA'I WORLD FAITH, P. 141). Such humility and work in the spirit of service communicated love, silently.

Attitude is so crucial. If this search is leading me anywhere, it is to the conclusion that the way I regard my students is basic to my success in teaching. Positive expectations, humility, encouragement, high standards of truth, justice - these must be my goals. Among many researchers into urban education, there is agreement that white teachers on the average have a condescending attitude toward their black pupils. Kenneth Clark, in his book DARK GHETTO, cites a series of interviews which his white students did with white teachers in which the white teachers said confidentially that they didn't think that black children could learn as well as white. Herb Kohl, in 36 CHILDREN, describes how the technique of giving and taking ideas between students and teachers was possible, and how his willingness to let his students express the brutal truth of the ghetto in writing encouraged them to tell their story to the world. Whenever Mr. Kohl gave a writing assignment in class, he sat down and did it himself too, demonstrating his humility and desire to be identified with the students.

"Should any one among you be incapable of grasping a certain truth, or be striving to comprehend it, show forth, when conversing with him, a spirit of extreme kindliness and goodwill. Help him to see and recognize the truth, without esteeming yourself to be, in the least, superior to him, or to be possessed of greater endowments."

(Baha'U'llah in GLEANINGS FROM THE WRITINGS OF BHAH'U'llah, p. 8)

And that is only the beginning. In preparing myself to teach, I can draw on the inward truths of Baha'U'llah. I can draw on my previous teaching experience. I can draw on the research in teaching.

"The harmony of religious belief with reason is a new vista which Baha'U'llah has opened for the soul of man."

(Abdu'l-Baha in BAHA'I WORLD FAITH, p. 247)

The Leotard Mardi-Gras: Part One

Mr. Fritter passed Henry the goofball and looked away casually at shelves of spices and baking soda. "Oughta close up now Henry ....so you take that pill and you can pay me tomorrow." Henry disappeared out the door, slamming it behind him jingling the bells, and left the general store far behind in the shadows. He was behind in his goofball payments but soon he would be on campus and no one outside could touch him. Why, Mr. Fritter would need extradition papers to collect the $15.22 he owed him, and the campus would not let that happen. Today all schools are designated simply as Karma. Karmas 1 to 1000 and rising throughout the country....Amerika a sea of floating islands. She had to give these people their sovereign rights in return for friendly trade relations. When the students and freeks (i.e. the psychadelic-electronic mutant seeds of innovation and new improved architectural super guts) had gone on a suspended animation strike, the old radicals had to listen and button their drawbridges to keep the spit from flying...besides, they were slackening in their backlash furor and they needed new young gimmicks to keep their evolving smugness alive. Karma were not factories. They were a rhythm of flipped out turned on godless children who every half year carried out a spring cleaning expedition... anything in their environment which they did not want was being given to goodwill inc. and distributed in Amerika for fourth of July and Christmas. New releases every July and December.

Since setting up the large reservations, the freeks no longer bothered the dying establishment. Neither really cared about the other...except for occasional visits, explorations, and refuse art exhibits. Concentric zoos...the only cages still surviving in the realm of the establishment which was now designated merely by the code named of G-o-d.

...so Henry took the goofball back to his cave and dropped it. Wow! really fucking dynamite! he went goofing off in the bushes really feeling foolish...the latest stimulant...with new acidic molecules added and wooly mammoth cortex extract flown in from the tar pits of siberia...He ran off raving giggles into the tropical student union salt mines where Greta the 18th was rolling her fake eyelashes lovingly in a coccainated daze, set against the subterranean background like a blinking star in a mirage of sandpaper crystal. 45 coccoons lined the ledges under a clear membrane shell. The bodies inside were leaving the surface folly for another layer of dreams --Flannel-erection Somatic Midriff-bulge sampling.

A spark danced through Henry's head...footprints led away from the spot where he stood. The spark formed an arrow at the deepest end striking the trampeled path before him like a nail of lighting...a french sneeze blowing all sole-marks away. Heelmarks remained, 2" deep. Henry bent down and played tic tac toe in every one of them. He got into his road forker to leave the salty cavern and head out for the open road where he would dig up the dotted line and inseminate the latent earthquake with a soothing swallow of honey...

Maudlin Camp the batboy and avid reader of Emily Bronte's novels slid down the vertical pole and whistled singing "Henry #807 ha ha...I'm totally cool and I shall be the one to take this outlandish powerfully constructed road forker down the King Arthur Highway.. and I shall be the one to become the first king over the godless! ...if my plan succeeds which it will. I remember when politics and avarice were "in" and I shall assassinate the energy system on Rubb Hill which sorts the two societies apart! I shall take its place. Then a house divided will stand and I shall be the man. You shall not stop me #807! You are under my hypnotic fix old chum! Get out of the forker and lie in its path!.....WHAT? What is Maudlin Camp doing to the utopian anti-disestablishmentarianism? Has he gone static? Is there a wacky freedom-mind house? Drop in next week for another dab.

To the Editor:

Once again the infamous humor magazine, YAHOO, has graced the confines of our University. Once again we have been amazed and disturbed, to the point of disgust, over the lack of taste and humor in this publication. True, the entire magazine is not trash yet the majority of it, in our opinion, is. Adding insult to injury is the fact that $10,000. in student funds is being used to finance the printing of the four issues of YAHOO scheduled for this year. We have nothing against humor. Indeed if YAHOO offered some good homor it would be well worth the money just for the small amount of relief it would provide from the pressures of University life. As it stands now, though, that $10,000 could be put to much better use.

On Caring

To The Editor:

My response to your question "Do You Care?" is that I do. I care enough about my courses to plan everyone of the forty-odd class-meetings per semester, and I therefore resent the implication that my two class-meetings of Friday, April tenth, are less important to me and my students than a University-wide discussion of troubles which derive all-too largely from the delusion that our fundamental concerns lie outside the curriculum. Our business is the development of minds and characters; and I believe that any business as complex and delicate as this can be accomplished only by concentration on intellectual activities carefully insulated from the activist world of social and political debate. Such concentration demands the faithful performance of one's academic duty six days a week every week through the all-too brief semester. How many teachers devote as much time as they should to their students' written work? Which of us really knows enough to satisfy actively inquiring and intelligently discriminating young minds? Which of us is expert enough in the art of conveying information at the same time that we draw these minds out in the classroom?

I doubt that the invariably bright activist students are any more concerned about the development of their minds and characters than the quietly attentive "apathetic" students of whom my colleagues complain. When does the activist reflect soberly about HIS faults, HIS obligations? Some people are wise enough to prefer listening to speaking, reading or studying "difficult" books and courses to wading through the infinite variations on a few cliches that flood the public arena. The latter will surely profit by their college experience; the former may come in later years to regard their time here as an opportunity wasted in frivolous excitement over causes practically dead by the time they graduated.

That we should earnestly review our purposes and conduct from time to time I heartily agree. But that we should buy the review at the expense of the very process we are reviewing seems to me absurd. Why can we not schedule our meetings on Saturday and Sunday afternoons? Those who really care will prove their concern by giving up their weekend leisure and excursions, not the academic duties which are their reason for being here.

To the Editor:

I was at fault with regard to the UMass Women's gymnastics team competing in Utah in my letter published in the Collegian April 3. The fact remains, however, that the girls still would have had to pay for the trip themselves in order to compete. Can you imagine the uproar if each member of the Redman basketball team had had to pay his way to the NIT?

My complaint with regard to Athletics is not directed to Intramurals, it is aimed at the Physical Education Department for not assigning officials to ALL of its teams.

My complaint about the lack of any press coverage in the Collegian of women's teams still stands.

To the editor:

COUNTERPOINT is the official publication of the Massachusetts Young Americans for Freedom. Copies of it have been distributed around to the dormitories and other areas on the campus in an effort to get students to read YAF material. Most students think that they know all about the YAF, but many people do not really know what the YAF is. The Left has a tendency to stereotype YAFers as racist, reactionary, etc. This Leftest idea of what a YAFer is has become the belief of most people. We hope that by reading COUNTERPOINT and by talking to some YAFers people will not write the YAF off as just another student political group.

The UMass YAF Chapter (yes, to the surprise of many we do exist on campus) is looking for new members. If you are interested in joining YAF, or if you are already a member, call either me at 546-9468 or Gene at 546-9503. Thank you.

We Want Out

To the Editor:

The Orchard Hill Mobilization Committee has called for a meeting of all Hill residents (students, faculty, administrators) to plan out Hill actions in support of the April 13-18 Spring Anti-war Offensive.

Hill students successfully threw an educator's convention off the Hill. They were able to do this by combining their resources in a unified effort to challenge present University policy.

Now, we are asking the Hill to come together to be part of a unified effort to show the government that WE WANT U.S. TROOPS OUT OF SOUTHEAST ASIA NOW!!!!!

If you support total troop withdrawal, come to the meeting Monday, April 6, at 7:30 p.m. in the Main Lounge of Eugene Field House.

They're at It Again

To The Editor:

In reference to Miss Cathy Delnore's letter on the Mideast situation, I wish to clear up certain errors of fact and judgement she committed. First, Miss Delnore asks why Israel has kept the land she "annexed" after the 1967 war. For one thing, the territory (with the exception of Eastern Jerusalem) is occupied, not annexed. Israel keeps this territory because basic considerations of security and national survival require her to keep it until such time as her Arab neighbors will make peace. When this happens, there is little doubt that all or most of the occupied territory will be returned.

Secondly, Miss Delnore suggests the Israeli army is superior in weapons and numbers to those of her enemies. Point number one: there has never been a time since 1948 when the Arabs have not maintained an edge in both offensive and defensive weaponry. Point number two: while Israel holds an edge over any single Arab state in immediately available military manpower, there are a number of Arab states and only one Israel, and the consideration of reserves shifts the balance further against Israel. If Israel's troops have been successful, this is because they know what they are fighting for, whereas their Arab brethren do not.

In reference to atrocities committed by the Israeli military, I must concede that in the 1948 war one did occur at the village of Deir Yassein. This village was a base for terrorists, and when the Irgun attacked it, they performed in a way I cannot and will not attempt to justify. No country has a spotless record, but the Israeli government clearly condemned this dastardly act, whereas the Arab governments applaud atrocities committed against Israeli women and children and Israel's non-Jewish friends.

Miss Delnore ends her essay in human misunderstanding by citing some examples of alleged pro-Israeli bias that would be ludicrous if they did not contribute to an atmosphere sanctioning genocide. First, at the Miss Universe Contest, Miss Israel "inevitably" enters the semi-finalists' circle. This is obviously clear proof that the distinguished representatives of many lands who do the choosing are members of a diabolical Zionist conspiracy to dominate the world through dominating the Miss Universe Contest. Or, just possibly, Miss Israel is pretty. Secondly, on the Merv Griffin Show, there are from time to time Israeli actresses who commit the unpardonable sin of loving their homeland. What is so wrong with that?

Finally, to all of my brothers of whatever faith, I implore you in the name of the God we all revere, Peace!

Dr. Tippo, in his February 26 address told the University community, "Trust must be earned."

For the majority of UMass student, it is earned by the little everyday happenings of one's life.

There's a "No Parking-Towing Zone" sign outside of Patterson House. Saturday, two performers at the Patterson folk jam parked their car where, according to the law, they shouldn't have. While they were singing, their car was towed. The $11 towing fee benefitted neither the people of Amherst or of the University. It did benefit Anderson's Towing 'Service".

Although the car was ticketed by the Amherst Police, this little incident is something we at UMass can all learn from. Trust is earned by enforcing the Law, but never letting the Law stand before Justice. It is earned by being able to enroll in a wanted course. Or by not being evicted from your room during a vacation and being forced to pay $2 a day hotel fee. Or being able to get change at the Little Hatch without buying something. Or reading in the Student Handbook that "Revenue drived from vending machines supports the Cultural Enrichment Fund" and knowing that it's not a half-lie. Or by not ticketing that one car that doesn't really matter. Trust is earned by having just a little feeling.

"Greasepaint" Cast Sets a Lively Mood

By PATRICIA LEMPART
Staff Critic

"Play the game!" -- and play it they did, in a most entertaining way.

From the appearance of the first ragged urchin, to the final bow, the Operetta Guild production of "Roar of the Greasepaint--Smell of the Crowd" kept the audience delighted. The set itself was exciting, and from the first, set a lively mood that the cast carried along.

Despite minor flaws, some in the script it self, others in the production, the show moved well and smoothly from comedy to a bit of tragedy and then to vaudeville and on and on. Problems were raised, however, by the fact that the excessive number of songs made the first act seem interminable, and by Cocky's inaudible singing in many of the musical numbers.

The five - piece orchestra under the direction of Jay McAuliffe trying to play down to Brian MacLeod's vice level, but, despite valiant efforts, often drowned him out. This was also noticeable whenever Cocky had other singers around, for they also made one forget that he was singing.

But if MacLeod sometimes failed in that capacity, he more than made up for it in his acting. His characterization of the loser-turned-leader was touching, with a ring of familiarity that bound the entire audience to him. Of particular note were his scenes with The Girl (Carol Roth), and his final dialogue with Sir (Michael Walker).

The other half of the winner-loser team, Sir, was extremely well-played by Michael Walker. This absurd figure in the gaudy but raggedy outfit was amusing all the way, but really came into his own in his reprise of "Who Can I Turn To?". It was at this point that Sir showed his depth and reached into the hearts of the audience.

Let it suffice to say that the other characters were all they were meant to be. The Kid was obnoxious, the Girl touching, the Negro a stereotype, and the Urchins were delightful. A great deal of credit must go to Director Tom DeFelice and both choreographers for so ably achieving this effect, as well as to the actors themselves.

Tied together with the innovative costumes and sometimes exciting light effects, this Guild production achieved its goal of entertaining the weekend theatre-goers of Amherst.

Prospective Playwrights Take Heed

Starting next year (1970-71) WRITERS' THEATRE REPERTORY COMPANY (WTRC) will sponsor a playwrting competition. A manuscript will be selected from among those submitted and fifty dollars will be awarded to the playwright. The competition is open to undergraduate as well as graduate students.

In addition to being student written, the production will be student directed and performed. For further information contact: Barbara Lewis (6961l).

Art as a Visual Language Portrayed in April Series

The Art Department and the Fine Arts Council will present a series of programs during the first two weeks of April dealing with the arts as a visual language. The series will explore visual literacy and sensory perception at learning devices for the arts, general education, and environmental and cultural studies.

The first speaker, on Tuesday April 7th., will be A.C. Mundy-Castle of the Center for Cognitive Studies at Harvard University. Dr. Mundy - Castle's topic will be "Crosscultural variations in art and their social and philosophical implications for the future of man." The program will focus on black African cultures and their contrast with Western cultures.

This will be followed on Thursday April 9th by a pair of programs dealing with the Art of India. Professor Milo Beach of Williams College will be discussing the world of Rajasthani Miniature Painting, while Professor Gary Tarr of UMass will be investigating the concept of the Hindu Temple. As these two programs will focus on mood, milieu and the timeless world of Indian visual forms, they will be given simultaneously and continuously in adjoining rooms so those attending can pass freely from one to the other and back.

The second week of the program will emphasize new roles for the arts in education. On Tuesday April 14th., Dr. Daniel Jordan of the UMass School of Education will speak on the arts and early childhood education. He will demonstrate the use of non-verbal techniques such as music as learning devices.

Donald Brigham, director of the interdisciplinary program in visual learning in Attleboro, Mass. will discuss his widely acclaimed program on Thursday April 16th. Mr. Brigham's program will be preceded in the afternoon by a seminar workshop in visual education. This will feature the Attleboro program and the Pelham Elementary School of Amherst project which is developing sensory education as an adjunct to the dominant verbal methodology used in most schools. The Pelham program is directed by Sidney Poritz of the umass Art Department. The complete program schedule is as follows:

Tuesday, April 7 8:00 p.m. Thompson Hall Auditorium 104: A.C. Mundy-Castle.

Avant Garde Music Comes to UMass

One of the world's leading ensembles devoted to the performance of avant garde music will pay a two-day visit to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst April 7 and 8.

Die Reihe, a chamber music group from Vienna under the direction of Dr. Friedrich Cerha, will perform two different programs April 7 and 8, both at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council Concert Association.

Dr. Cerha founded Die Reihe (The Tow) in 1958 in order to promote the cause of contemporary music. The first concert took place in the famed Vienna Konzerthaus with works by Webern and Boulez on the program.

Today's great composers such as Ligeti, Xenakis, Penderecki and Berio have been given a platform for their compositions by Die Riehe and this unusual ensemble has taken its performances to leading music capitals of Europe. This season, the group makes its first trans-continental tour of the United States.

The program for Tuesday, April 7, includes works by Haubenstock-Ramati, Friedrich Cerha, Amestis Logothetis and Arnold Schoenberg.

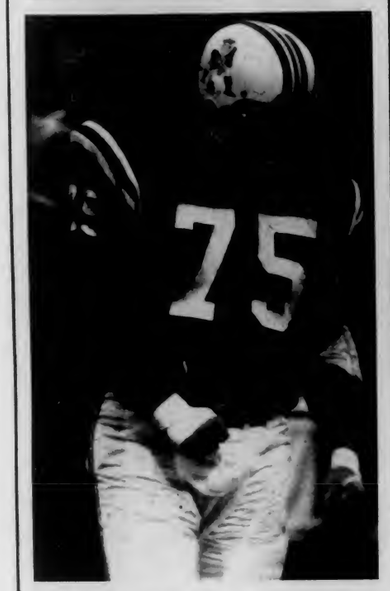
Foxboro Looks Like Pats' New Home

Only Approval of Town Meeting Leaves Stadium in Doubt



A BOSTON PATRIOT? – Because the Collegian lacks a better photo to go with this story about the Patriots' new stadium in Foxboro, this one makes it on the old back page. Number 75 is a Boston Patriot and will be one for only one more year as, in the fall of 1971, the Patriots will probably be playing their football games in mighty Foxboro, leaving some to think that their name will be changed to the New England Patriots.

BOSTON (AP) – Only a town meeting approval by voters of Foxboro stood Sunday between the Boston Patriots football team and a 57,000-seat stadium in 1971.

Patriots President Billy Sullivan announced the site following an all-day meeting of the Patriots Board of Directors Saturday and said the stadium would be financed by a new five-member combine, the Stadium Realty Trust.

A special Foxboro town meeting has been scheduled April 13. A survey of the town of about 17,000 residents several weeks ago indicated that citizens were overwhelmingly in favor of having the Patriots as their representatives.

The statium would be imbedded in a 40-foot hill adjacent to the Bay State Raceway, just off U.S. 95 and U.S. 1, about 30 miles from Boston and Providence, R.I. The land would be contributed by the harness racing track of which E.M. Loew is owner.

Sullivan said part of the cost of the stadium would be contributed by the Patriots. He gave no figures on the cost of the stadium or the amount to be contributed by the Patriots.

Unofficially, the venture was estimated at $9 million, about half the discarded Neponset Circle plan in Boston.

Under the merger, arrangements of the American and National Football Leagues, the Patriots, who have played in various stadia during their 10 years in Boston, needed plans for a 50,000 seat stadium this year.

Sullivan said he has contacted Harvard University regarding use of its stadium for games this year, but declined comment on whether he had been in touch with the Boston Red Sox for use of Fenway Park.

He said the team would remain the "Boston" Patriots for this year "because we are hopeful of playing somewhere in the Boston area." He said the directors have given no consideration to a new team name for 1971.

He said the Foxboro site will feature artificial grass, and special lighting to meet the requirements of television color-casts.

Sullivan said that if the Foxboro voters do not approve the plan, the Patriots will look to Salem, N.H., and Haverhill, Mass.

He said the Salem plan, submitted by Gov. Walter Peterson Friday, was "no pie in the sky proposal" and could, along with Haverhill, "still be in the running."

BOSTON (AP) - Derek Sanderson's goal from a wild scramble in front of the net with 5:36 remaining lifted the Boston Bruins to a 3-1 victory over the Toronto Maple Leafs Sunday night in their National Hockey League regular season finale.

The result left the tense Boston-Chicago battle for first place in the East Division still undecided, pending the outcome of the Black Hawks' season-ending game at home against Montreal.

The fired-up Bruins, with a packed Boston Garden crowd of 14,835 cheering them on, dominated play throughout, but were stayed off time and again by Marv Edward's incredible goal tending until Sanderson finally broke through. Ken Hodge then scored an insurance goal just over a minute later to wrap it up.

Toronto took a 1-0 lead at 17:01 of the opening period when Dave Keon broke across the blue line and drilled a 50-footer which went in off Boston goalie Gerry Cheevers' pad.

The Bruins tied it at 1:56 of the second session when Johnny McKenzie came in from the right, took a pass from Bobby Orr, and beat Edwards on the near side with a 15-footer just inside the post.

The Bruins continued to dominate the action, outshooting the Leafs 24-5 in the period en route to a 54-23 over-all edge, but Edwards held them off time and again.

The Toronto netminder made a diving glove save on Sanderson at the seven-minute mark of the second period, then stopped the fiery Boston center again six minutes later from in close.

Midway in the final period Edwards again thwarted the Boston power play after Pat Quinn went off for holding at 9:44. The Bruins got another chance as Brian Glennie was called for hooking at 12:19.

Edwards and defensemen Rick Ley and Mike Pelyk turned in a tremendous performance to hold off the vaunted Boston power play once more, but seconds after Glennie came out of the box, Sanderson scored his goal.

Orr, McKenzie and Bucyk Honored

BOSTON (AP) - Bobby Orr, John McKenzie and John Bucyk were honored Sunday night in ceremonies preceeding the Boston Bruins' final regular season National Hockey League game against the Toronto Maple Leafs.

Orr, the first defenseman ever to win the league scoring title, was presented the Elizabeth C. Dufresne trophy, voted annually by the hockey writers to the Boston player "who has been most outstanding in home games." Orr won the same award once before, in his rookie season of 1966-67, while Phil Esposito has captured it the past two seasons.

McKenzie, the hustling right wing who always has been a big favorite of the fans, was presented the Eddie Shore Trophy, voted each year by the "Gallery Guards," the fans in the second balcony.

Bucyk received a special trophy in recognition of scoring his 300th NHL goal this season. Defenseman Red Green, who has been sidelined all season while recovering from head injuries suffered in a preseason stick-swinging duel, attended the game and sat next to the Bruins' bench. He received a lengthy standing ovation from the 14,835 fans

Committee Announces April 10-11 Events

By JULIA KANE
Staff Reporter

The following topics constitute a partial list of the issues which will be discussed on April 10 - 11. All interested members of the University community are urged to take careful note of the items proposed and to feel free to make suggestions for additional subjects which they feel should be included contacting the Master's Office, Coolidge Lobby, or the Area Coordinator's Office, Baker House.

1. The first item will be a discussion of alternatives to grades. Included in the discussion will be the questions of what exactly grades measure, what they should measure, and how changes can be implemented in the grading system as it now exists. Recommendations for deans and department heads will hopefully come out of the discussion, which will be led by Sid Simon, Joyce Berkman, David Paroissien, and Betty Hunt.

2. Residential colleges will be discussed and compared to other types of student living areas, and a concensus will hopefully be reached as to whether the residential colleges are serving as real communities or as student ghettos. The discussion will be led by Leon Barron, Tom Clark, Cadwell Ray, John Nelson, Richard Powers, John Sitter, David Williams, and Betty Silone.

3. Teacher evaluation -- its purposes, the University's need for it, and the qualities which are actually being evaluated -- will be the subject of the discussion led by Harry Schumer, Mortimer Appley, Ellsworth Barnard, Dave Bobb, and Susan Hecht.

4. The fourth discussion group, led by Bernard Fleischmann, Paul Sanders, Elizabeth Lockman, Tamas Aczel, Jeremiah Allen, Jules Piccus, Gerry Richman and Arthur Kinney, will concern itself with the future of the Humanities at UMass. Interest will focus on the chances for decent budgeting for programs in the Arts in a world which is putting more and more emphasis on the Sciences.

Along with the forementioned topics, which relate to academic affairs, there will be siminars dealing with other specific areas of University life, including decision-making, environment, human relations, and the much-discussed topic of the University as it relates to society.

Under the heading of decision-making, will come such topics as campus governance, with special emphasis placed on the proposed unicameral student-faculty Senate, and discussion led by students and faculty members working on the proposal. Another area of discussion will be the relationship of the Board of Trustees to the University, with Board members coming to discuss and review their responsibilities in separating their operational from their policy-making decisions.

The fairness of the current faculty reward structure will be the subject of another discussion group, which will probe the questions surrounding to whom and for what teaure and other types of faculty rewards are granted. The Long Range Planning Committee, under Professor Marcus, will meet in several half-day sessions to discuss the University's future with regard to predicted changes.

Environment - meaning dorm environment - will be the subject of three discussion groups. Walt Morrison will lead a group on the topic of finding the role of the Area Staff as it should ideally be. Beaver Perkins will lead a workshop which will hopefully come up with a way of solving the problem of overcrowding, especially in the traditional dorms. A workshop led by Dave Keighley, Jim Scharfenburger, and John Tierney will look into the explosive issue of fiscal autonomy for the dormitories, and hopefully come up with some concrete proposals.

Three more groups will work within the general framework of human relations. Student-faculty communications barriers and ways to overcome them will be the topic of discussion at a seminar led by Doug Forsythe. Rich Kleiner will lead a group in examining the possibilities of counseling and sensitivity training as instruments of radical change in the University community. Al Ivey will demonstrate in his group how the use of small groups and one-to-one techniques can help individuals reach their own human relations objectives.

The final general topic - The University and Society - will center on the volatile subjects of the draft, University war activities, and freedom of speech. Robert Tucker will lead the discussion on the effect of the draft and ROTC on an individual's educational decisions. John Clayton, Sid Finehirsch, and Geoff Levine will discuss the extent of the University's involvement in war and the effect, if any, of outside factors on this involvement. Freedom of speech will be examined in a discussion led by Jules Chametsky and Arnold Silver, who will also discuss the preservation of an individual's rights to listen and respond to what he hears.

Tatum: 2-S Deferment to End; Draft May End by June, 1971

By RICHARD C. HANSON
Staff Reporter

"If everyone appealed to the State Appeal Board, the Selective Service system would breakdown...General Hershey complained that people were "harrassing" the system by appealing."

Arlo Tatum, noted draft counselor and National Secretary of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors (CCC), talked about the draft last night in Mahar Auditorium. His concentration: "Your Legal Rights Under Selective Service."

Tatum's speech, sponsored by the draft board should be recorded in duplicate and all correspondence be registered. The Executive Secretary of the Local Board should be consulted. Although she has no power on the Board, she/he is "ordinarily knowledgeable," conversing changes in the law, etc.

Tatum characterized the local boards as "a friendly group of people making decisions in the best interest of the community."

The appeal system, both the State Appeal Board and the Presidential Appeal Board are usually inefficient, but Tatum told of everyone's right to appeal his classification within thirty days of said classification.

For those appealing for any deferment, Tatum recommended that "external evidence" be presented. For example, stated Tatum, "A letter from your employer is more important than your letter," in seeking an occupational deferment.

Tatum expressed hope in the trend nowadays for the courts to give Conscientious Objectors and other deferees more "rights." For a Conscientious draft evader, it used to be "guilty until he could prove himself innocent," reminded Tatum.

Tatum told the audience, predominantly male at that, that the chances of becoming a Conscientious Objector were improving, but that the only ultimate answer is to "end the draft."

The moderator announced that draft counseling will be available all day tomorrow in the Student Union Ballroom along with a variety of movies being shown in the Council Chambers.

Tatum's speech, sponsored by the class of '70 as part of a two day "Draft Program," touched on most procedural and legal aspects of avoiding the draft. One of his more startling statements concerned the abolition of the 2-S deferment. Tatum predicts that this along with the occupational deferment (2-A) will be phased out over the next six months, much like the Graduate student deferment was.

On the dubiously optimistic side of issues concerning the draft Tatum also cited the possibility of the draft ending by June, 1971. Tatum alluded to some practical as well as political reasons for this move, the least of which was not the prospects for Nixon running on what Tatum described mockingly as a "Peace platform."

Tatum, in his opening remarks, called the present Selective Service system as a "relic of World War II." The draft, for the first time, according to Gallup Polls is unpopular enough to merit abolition.

Commenting upon the set-up of the local Draft Boards, Tatum stated that the members of the draft board are "untrained" and have no way of becoming trained. The people, whose only qualifications are citizenship and age volunteer for the position and meet for "three or four" hours "once or twice a month." Tatum pointed out that some draft boards managed to classify people at the rate of "one every ten seconds." Tatum quipped that "the boards may not be knowledgeable, but they are efficient."

Tatum recommended that any business carried on with the local

Tatum Talks Again

Arlo Tatum, co-author of Guide to the Draft and recognized authority on the operation of the draft, will be in the Drop-In Center on Tuesday from 3:00-5:00 p.m. to discuss draft resistance and conscientious objection. Mr. Tatum dedicated Guide to the Draft "to those who struggle against all odds to be human beings." If you are one of those people and you are ready to confront the draft, there are advisors, brothers, and literature in the Drop-In Center.

Police Bust Twenty Two Springfield Protestors

Helmeted police removed about 20 white students from a Springfield College administration building after a three-hour demonstration Monday, and a short time later some 200 more students staged a second sit-in.

The second group met with Dean John Costello and confronted him with questions concerning the police intervention. They left peaceably after the talks and normal operations resumed.

The original sit-in was in support of the 2,000 enrollment college's 49 black students, who are under suspension but were due to return to the campus Monday for disciplinary hearings. The blacks had occupied a college dormitory earlier this year and were suspended for that action.

College administrators warned the white students to leave the building, and when they refused, police were summoned.

The students allowed police into the building peaceably and were taken away in patrol wagons amidst shouts of "pigs off campus" from about 100 black and white student supporters gathered outside.

The demonstrators taken from the building were charged with trespassing, and police said they would be arraigned in Springfield District Court Tuesday.

After the first group was taken out of the building, the crowd outside grew to about 200. Campus police were still stationed at the front doors at this point, but some students sympathetic to the first group eventually got into the building via side doors.

When enough were inside, they opened the front doors and more students came in that way. There was quite a bit of pushing and shoving, and one campus policeman was pushed forcibly away, but no injuries were reported.

The new group of demonstrators then began urging those in the crowd outside which kept changing in size and composition, to join them. Some students refused the invitation but others accepted it, until eventually about 200 were inside.

These students then confronted Costello, claiming among other things, that none of the Monday demonstrations would have occurred if the college administration had agreed to a Student Council offer last Friday to hold disciplinary hearings on the suspended black students.

In a statement issued later, Student Council President Ira Colby said:

"Today had to be one of the worst days in the history of Springfield College.

Oklen, Elters Boost Moratorium; Major Meeting Slated Tonight

By MARK SILVERMAN
Managing Editor

The University Mobilization Committee's drive to garner support for the April 15th anti-war Moratorium-Strike received a boost last night as Student Senate President Cynthia Olken and Vice-President Glenn Elters issued statements supporting the movement.

With their first major planning meeting scheduled for tonight, Committee members hailed the Senate officers' support as "coming at the perfect time . . . it often takes a strong stand by major campus figure s to get things moving, and we feel that Olken and Elters have done this for us."

The meeting, scheduled for 8:15 in Tompson 106, will deal with all aspects of the Moratorium-Strike, including the morning canvassing of town and both afternoon rallies, one in Alumni Stadium and one on the Amherst Common.

In separate statements issued last night, both Olken and Elters urged all members of the University community to support the anti-war activities planned for the 15th.

Miss Olken said, "If we are to bring about any betterment in the human condition at this University, in this country or in the world, our first action has to be directed toward stopping this useless killing."

Elters, in addition to calling for University participation in the scheduled strike, struck out against the Nixon war policy.

He said, "The Government must be shown that they are not representing us. Patience is becoming strained, but we must continue to attempt to use what the establishment insists on labeling 'legitimate means of protest'."

"How can we, as University people, supposedly rational and humane creatures, express our utter rejection of the continuation of this unjust war?" he asked.

And he answered, "We must not carry on business as usual on April 15th."

The committee is reportedly in the process of contacting possible speakers for both of the day's rallies, and a good deal of tonight's meeting, committee members say, will be devoted to speaker selection.

Committee member Geoffrey Levine said yesterday that another important part of the meeting will be the establishment of Area Mobe committees on campus.

These groups, in various dorms, areas and departments, will elect representatives to the Committee's central steering group, the body responsible for finalizing the Moratorium's details, and serving as the Committee's interim executive body.

Mobe Plans Action in Nation

WASHINGTON (CPS) - As part of the April 15 spring offensive against the war, the New Mobilization Committee is sponsoring local demonstrations to dramatize who pays for the War in Vietnam.

New Mobe is calling for workplace organizing culminating in teach-ins or discussions at working places to focus on how all Americans - particularly working people and Third World people - pay for the War. The Student Mobilization Committee is planning a strike for a national student strike the same day.

More than 100 cities, including most of the country's largest 25, have planned anti-war actions for the 15th.

The Nation and The World

Recommittal Fails On Carswell Nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate gave President Nixon a surprisingly easy - but possibly temporary - victory Monday, refusing to send the Supreme Court nomination of G. Harrold Carswell back to the Judiciary Committee.

The vote was 52 to 44 to reject a recommittal motion that would have spelled all but certain death for Nixon's second straight high court nomination.

But appointment of the 50-year-old appeals court judge, accused by his critics of racism and mediocrity, still faces its ultimate test Wednesday when confirmation comes to a straight up-or-down vote.

Although the eight-vote margin of victory was seen as an indication Carswell will be confirmed, some switches both ways were expected and his opponents refused to abandon the fight.

"There may be some small or moderate slippage," Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania told newsmen. But he said he is confident of confirmation.

"It looks to me like its leaning toward Carswell," said Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana who voted for recommittal. "I imagine the vote on recommittal will be a precursor as to what will happen Wednesday."

With the probably outcome increasingly apparent before the recommittal roll call began, the only moment of drama came minutes after it ended. Mansfield rose to suggest the Senate abandon an earlier agreement, and vote the nomination up or down at 3 p.m. and "get on with the business of the Senate."

Mansfield argued that the recommittal motion had been defeated by a rather substantial margin and that the two-day delay on confirmation would not change the outcome.

However, Mansfield withdrew his motion after objections from a leading supporter of the nomination and from an opponent.

Thirty three Republicans joined with 19 Democrats to defeat the recommittal. But eight Republicans went against their President in the effort to scuttle the nomination.

They were Sens. Winston L. Prouty of Vermont; Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts, the only Negro senator; Clifford P. Case of New Jersey; Charles E. Goodell and Jacob K. Javits of New York; Mark O. Hatfield, Oregon; Charles MaC. Mathias, Maryland; and Richard S. Schweiker, Pennsylvania.

Of the nine senators listed in the latest Associated Press poll as undecided on recommittal, five voted against the motion and four for it.

Despite the administration triumph Monday, there remained some doubt about Wednesday's vote because some who opposed recommittal may oppose confirmation also. And some supporting recommittal may vote for confirmation.

Three senators who voted against recommittal have announced they will oppose confirmation. They are Republicans Robert Packwood of Oregon and Hiram Fong of Hawaii and Thomas J. Dodd, Connecticut Democrat.

On the other hand one of the only two Southerners to support the recommittal motion - Sen. J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas - is expected to support confirmation. But the other Southerners to vote for recommittal - Sen. William Spong of Virginia - announced after the Monday vote that he will oppose confirmation.

While this all represents an apparent net gain for the opponents, the answer on Wednesday remains in the hands of about a dozen senators, mainly Republicans, who have not disclosed their plans.

Astronauts Prepare for Sat. Launch

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - A five-man medical team gave the Apollo 13 astronauts their last major preflight physical examination Monday as the launch team cleared up a pressure problem in their moon landing ship.

The countdown for man's third lunar landing journey continued toward the planned lift off at 2:13 p.m. Saturday.

Navy Capt. James A. Lovell Jr., Navy Lt. Cmdr. Thomas K. Mattingly II and civilian Fred W. Haise Jr. awakened early for the four-hour session with the doctors.

After lunch the astronauts climbed aboard a command ship simulator to rehearse launch procedures and possible abort maneuvers in case of rocket trouble.

While doctors examined the astronauts, specialists resolved a problem in a hellum pressurization system in the descent engine of the lunar module. This is the engine that is to power Lovell and Haise to the moon's surface April 15.

During a test Sunday, the system generated excessive pressure. By late evening the pressure started to stabilize and launch director Walter Kapryan ordered the long countdown to start on schedule at 10 p.m.

Conscription Corner

(Ed. Note - Once a week, the Daily Collegian will have questions and answers concerning the draft. Readers are invited to mail their questions in c/o Valley Peace Center, Box 418, Amherst.)

Before we get into specific problems, here is some general advice on the draft. First, if you are opposed to the War in Vietnam (and Laos and Cambodia and Thailand and elsewhere), you may be eligible for Conscientious Objector (C.O.) status. It is not necessary to be a Quaker, a pacifist, or a church-goer to qualify for C.O. The number of men applying for, and being granted, C.O. classification increases every year. No one who has scruples about military participation should ignore the C.O. possibility.

Second, whatever your draft status you are strongly advised to keep careful records of all your dealings with the local board - copies of all letters to and from you, dated records of your conversations with board officials and clerks, medical reports, etc. Draft boards sometimes make mistakes, and your documents will be crucial if your case comes to the State Appeal Board or to court. Many young men have been drafted because of "mistakes" in draft board procedures. If you can show that you have followed the intent of the law or that the draft board has erred (by giving wrong advice, failing to consider all the evidence carefully, or not completely informing you of your rights), you have a good chance of getting the deferment you properly deserve.

QUESTION: I'm a student who graduates in June. My lottery number if 37. Last week I got a letter from my draft board requesting me to come for a physical examination in April. How can they do this now?

ANSWER: Draft boards will be flooded in June with men whose II-S deferments have run out. A recent Selective Service directive urges local boards to begin calling up students for physical examinations now, in advance of graduation, because of the large numbers expected in June. As the war expands into Laos and Cambodia, we cannot foresee smaller draft quotas the rest of this year. Students losing their II-S deferments in June can anticipate being called before then for draft physicals and prompt induction into military service after graduation.

QUESTION: Does anyone have a clear idea as to how many of the draft lottery numbers will be called this year? My number is 302, and I need to know whether I am out of danger.

ANSWER: No one knows for sure. You will just have to wait and see. Many of the State Directors of Selective Service (including Colonel Feeney of Massachusetts) have announced that all numbers through 365 will be called for induction. But President Nixon has recently tried to quiet anti-war sentiment by stating that only the first 200 or 250 numbers will be drafted. Since there is so much variation between districts, it may be that different local boards will reach different lottery numbers. This uncertainty regarding the lottery is something you will have to live with until the government makes up its mind or the war is ended.

QUESTION: Suppose I receive an order to report for induction while I am in school, what can I do?

ANSWER: If you are a full-time undergraduate the local board is required by law to grant you an I-S (C) deferment till the end of the academic year. If you lost your II-S because you "failed to make normal progress toward graduation," you may be able to make up the missed credits and become eligible for II-S again or for another deferment. Most graduate students are ineligible for I-S (C) according to the Regulations, but several court decisions have obscured the matter. Students now in graduate school who have received the Bachelor's degree and have had II-S deferments as undergraduates since June 30, 1967, are denied I-S (C). But some courts have ruled that graduate students who received II-S only for graduate study since June 30, 1967 are still eligible for I-S (C). You should consult an attorney or a draft counselor.

Amherst Environmental Fair Sponsored by UM Coalition

April 18th the Committee for Environmental Quality is sponsoring an Environmental Fair on the Amherst Town Common. There will be tables with displays, films on the environment, and theatre groups emphasizing relevant topics on the environment.

Of particular emphasis will be displays on how individuals can affect change in their immediate environment with simple precautionary measures such as with disposal of detergents or with simple measures on air pollution.

Any interested faculty or student group is urged to participate with a display or show that might be of interest but should notify CEQ so that space can be adequately allocated. CEQ headquarters are in 229B Bartlett and the phone numbers are 545-0618 and 545-0619.

In a related move yesterday, CEQ released a statement defining its areas of concern and inviting the University community to participate in its several on-going programs.

The statement says in part, "CEQ is people, working for a better world. . .(and) is students dedicated to changing the world, in big and small, drastic and subtle ways."

It continues, "CEQ is faculty and professionals applying their knowledge and scholarship to the problems of the environment."

Essential programs now sponsored by the Coalition include campaigns in the areas of over population, pollution, and environmental overkill.

Re-election Results

In 1972 the Nixon-Agnew team will probably be returned to office; they wouldn't have it any other way. In yesterday's editorial I tried to illustrate some of the harmful devices the administration has been employing to achieve its goal. But one example which says it all for the administration, and one which is not very harmful to the American people, has been Nixon's order to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to remove all pictures and mention of Senator Muskie from every pollution publication put out by that branch of the government. It is as if Muskie, an early and important leader in the anti-pollution fight, never did or said anything about pollution. This gross misrepresentation of the facts shows that Nixon is concerned about Muskie as a foe in '72.

As long as Nixon worries about 1972, his policy will be primarily directed to the people who voted for him and for George Wallace in 1968. And while it is true that many Nixon supporters are "turned off" by Wallace and his ideas, how many of these would elect Richard M. after his "false" promises in '68? But the overwhelming majority of Nixon supporters will support him in '72 because he stands for the "status quo," a harsh, conservative line which they find appealing.

But his policy has alienated enough people in this country to put it in serious trouble. Many of our youth now feel as the Blacks have felt for generations, that it is impossible to influence the policies, both external and internal, of this nation from within the system. And that the policies are being made-up by a group of intolerant men whose only goal in life is their own welfare, rather than that of the people they are supposed to govern wisely.

But what will the result of this mood be? As youth becomes more and more alienated, their repression will cause them to work outside of the system so as to change it to one which is more acceptable. Traces of this can already be seen throughout the nation, and even on our own campus (i.e. the Humphrey incident). And while many oppose these radicals, they will grow in number until the bubble pops. And that bubble will be popped by the "silent majority" who will react because of a fear of them. We will then witness a period of ultra-McCarthyism which would even "turn off" a lot of today's conservatives.

However, the situation isn't hopeless. What needs to be done is to bring back to all Americans the belief that our government's contract hasn't expired, that changes can be made from WITHIN the system. A good move in that direction would be for the courts to decide that the war is a constitutional, and not a political question. The appointment of a qualified Black to the Supreme Court wouldn't be a bad move either. However, these developments are doubtful ones as long as the Nixon doll is in office.

It won't be too late in 1972 to put a new doll in power, one with a halo and not horns and a pitchfork. If we all start working together now, towards that goal then maybe they'll be no more Carswell nominations, and maybe we won't get involved in Cambodia. A coalition like this, started in 1970, not in '72, would have to make Nixon realize that if he wants any chance to be re-elected he had better realize that we liberals love America, and want her to work towards the realization that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liverty and the pursuit of Happiness." How about it Mr. President, want to be re-elected?

Generations

In my first column in this newspaper a few weeks ago I compared the relative affluence and freedom of the generations of the Twenties and Sixties. I mentioned that the world view of the Roaring Twenties was washed away by the Depression.

I then poked gentle fun at some of the vital institutions of this area - its drinking places. They seem to reflect our various natures. The Pub: formal drinking and "Playboy" sex, attractive but untouchable waitresses. The Drake: unkempt, noisy and generally a lot of fun. Sheehan's Cafe on King St.: out of another age, members of our generation not welcome.

Last week I rode Lance Reidy for his despair and utter rejection of our society, and along with it, of personal freedoms. I also tried to point out the ever-present Greek mentality so eloquently stated by Robert Ganley.

I did my undergraduate work in a small, Catholic university in Chicago. There were sixteen fraternities on campus, and until recently not a single house; until last year not even a dorm. Yet there were and probably always will be Greeks who pat themselves on the back and insist like Ganley that the more concerned people GO Greek.

There were few radicals. Tuition was high and nearly everyone worked. Most people lived at home, and the campus would empty every day at about 2 o'clock. It just didn't seem conducive to radicalism.

We were about as conservative as students could be.

I say to myself that a student as a man (or woman) is something above the question of where and under what circumstances he happened to get his education. His opinions ought to follow logically from well-thought-out assumptions about his fellow men.

Why, then, were the students at the commuter university so predictably conservative?

Why are those at UMass, removed from family responsibilities and tensions, unconcerned with the need to work, so predictably liberal and sometimes even radical?

Why are the students of our time so much more (relatively) liberal than the students of, say, the Fifties?

If we are the mere products of our time and milieux, what does this say about us as persons?

We must comprehend the way in which our educations affect our views of the war, of race, of politics and of money. For not to do so would be to defeat the purpose of an education.

Perhaps this is the reason we differ so drastically from our elders:

Unlike them, we know that when we leave here, there is little chance that we will starve. Making a life for us has become more a business of finding something worthwhile to do than of putting bread on the table.

Ours is a generation which has begun earnestly to question our elders. Perhaps it is also necessary to question ourselves.

Throwing Out the First Ball

By ART BUCKWALD

One of the most unfortunate aspects of the Judge Carswell nomination fight is that it has cloudec the constitutional issues on who has the right to throw out the first ball at the Washington Senators' opening baseball game.

Originally, President Nixon was going to throw out the first ball. But he decided that because of the press of Supreme Court business, he would designate the task to his Vice President, Spiro Agnew.

But, then, Republican Sen. Robert Griffin of Michigan at the last minute pleaded with the President to allow the Vice President to be in the Senate for the vote on Carswell and suggested that the President throw out the ball instead.

This angered the President because he felt that he was being challenged on his right to select someone of his own choice to throw out the baseball. He wrote a letter to Sen. William Saxbe of Ohio challenging anyone in the Senate to question the President's choice as to the opening day ball-thrower.

The question the President raised is what power does the Executive Branch have over the Legislative Branch on the opening day of baseball?

Our Founding Fathers, back in 1776, were well aware that this problem would crop up time and time again in our future history, and so after some bitter and acrimonious debate, they spelled out in the Constitution who would replace the President at the Washington Senators' ball park.

The article in the Constitution reads as follows, "If for any reason the President of the United States is unable to throw out the first baseball on the opening day of the season, and his Vice President is required on Capitol Hill, the President may designate another nominee with the advise and consent of the Senate.

"The Senate may only question the President's choice if it feels the President's nominee is not able to get the ball from the stands to the infield. If more than two nominees are rejected by the Senate, then the Speaker of the House must throw out the first ball."

It is interesting to note that on many occasions the Senate has rejected presidential nominations for hurling out the first ball.

The Senate has turned down the nominees of Presidents Washington, Madison, John Q. Adams, Tyler, Fillmore, Buchanan, Grant, Hayes, Cleveland and Johnson. In each case the Presidents had asked their sons-in-law to fill in for them.

The opponents of President Nixon's choice for throwing out the ball have claimed that the President's nominee is at the most a very mediocre ball player who was only selected because he was a southpaw. This, the opponents say, was nothing more than an attempt to appease the South.

While the baseball league has given Nixon's choice a "qualified" rating for the job, managers and coaches of baseball teams all over the country have expressed their concern that the person president Nixon selected to throw the first ball did not measure up to the great pitching arms of Presidents Harding, Hoover and Polk.

But Sen. Roman Hruska, who led the fight in support of the President's man, defended the President's choice.

He said, "Mediocre players should be represented on the opening day of baseball. We need them to balance the teams."

LANCE REIDY, LARRY TRILLO, KEITH BROMERY, ELLIOT EISENBERG AND ALL EDITORIAL DAY EDITORS

There is a meeting tonight at 7:30 in the Collegian Office to discuss writing about what probably will happen before it happens instead of after it happens. Peace!

(Convinced that some things are worth reading strictly for entertainment, the following is reprinted from a leaflet put out by the Yankee Color Corporation, Southborough, Mass.)

In May of 1919 at Dusseldorf, Germany, the Allied Forces obtained a copy of some of the "Communist Rules for Revolution." We quote from the Red Rules:

A. Corrupt the young; get them away from religion. Get them interested in sex. Make them superficial; destroy their ruggedness.

B. Get control of all means of publicity, thereby:

1. Get people's minds off their government by focusing their attention on athletics, sexy books and plays and other trivialities.

2. Divide the people into hostile groups by constantly harping on controversial matters of no importance.

3. Destroy the people's faith in their natural leaders by holding the latter up to contempt, ridicule and disgrace.

4. Always preach true democracy, but seize power as fast and ruthlessly as possible.

5. By encouraging government extravagance, destroy its credit, produce fear of inflation with rising prices and general discontent.

6. Incite unnecessary strikes in vital industries, encourage civil disorders and foster a lenient and soft attitude on the part of government towards such disorders.

7. By specious argument cause the breakdown of the old moral virtues, honesty, sobriety, self restraint, faith in the pledged word, ruggedness.

C. Cause the registration of all firearms on some pretext, with a view to confiscating them and leaving the population helpless.

IN

To the Editor:

It's been IN far too long now to cut down everything that is either reasonable or successful.

It's IN to look ugly. It's IN to shut down everything and everybody who slightly disagrees. And it's IN for stupidity.

I'm going to attack domestic acts of stupidity in the future. This setter is concerned with the current Anti-Jewish (it's not really Anti-Israel) campaign floating around. Miss Kaminsky brought it out into the open with her barely masked letter of hatred. Lots of prejudice, little savvy.

FACT: No one in the world can name one year in history when Israel was a locally ruled Arab state. FACT: The only "refugee problem" in Israel today is caused by Arab states who refuse to allow willing people to enter their borders. FACT: Where was Miss Kaminsky and all her friends when, from 1949 to 1967, over three hundred women and children were killed by Arabs EACH YEAR? Their crime? They had the nerve to enter unsued desert backlands and farm them. Some crime!

Stick To

To The Editor:

Do you know the difference between a news item and an editorial? Its apparent that in your fervor to print what you laughingly call "A FREE AND RESPONSIBLE PRESS" you lose sight of the facts.

I am referring to your editorialized coverage of our guest Jerry Rubin at Holyoke Comm. College Friday night. We thought Jerry was a worthy speaker and we wanted to hear his views which you mocked in your slanted article. So why don't you stick to covering your earthshaking Redmen and leave news reporting to professionals.

Stop-In

To The Editor:

Prior to the following incident I had been considering a collective move against the University, the Amherst Police, and Anderson's for their overt collusion against the people of this community. On Saturday, April 4, around ten o'clock p.m., my car was towed from Sunset Ave in front of Crampton House. Around 1:30 that morning I went with two friends down to Anderson's to get my car. No one was there and the gate was open so I drove my car out. Sunday morning mysteriously my car was gone. I reported it to the police, suspecting that Andy had taken it. I then went down to Anderson's where I found my car blocked off by one tow truck, savage dogs, armed guards, and barb wire. Anderson charged me twenty-two dollars - eleven dollars for each tow. I then went to the Police station where I filled out a complaint for larceny against Anderson's.

The issue is not merely one of my personal dilemma, but rather one involving the entire University community. Why isn't F lot adequately lighted and patrolled by our dutiful campus police? Why are students who live off-campus restricted to particular areas usually in F or Z lots? Why is Anderson allowed to tow our cars at 11 dollars a crack? Although this may seem trivial to some, things are wrong and can be changed. I propose that: 1. all towing for parking violations cease immediately; 2. all parking fines now outstanding be voided; 3. that the campus police refrain from ticketing cars; 4. that they concentrate on guarding cars in F and Z lots to prevent theft and vandalism; 5. that the campus police concentrate more on traffic directing and aiding the students. The only way these demands will be met will be if action is taken. This action consists of a stop-in entailing all owners of cars driving to some congested area on North Pleasant St. and thereby stopping all traffic going to the University and Amherst. I have filed a complaint of auto theft against Anderson's and will work to coordinate the stop-in. Anyone interested in changing this inane system call me at 549-1862 after 6 p.m., 43 Puffton Village.

Drug Violation Arrest of Americans Overseas

The Department of State wishes to bring to the attention of Americans traveling abroad, and particularly of young Americans, the serious consequences which may result from their arrest by foreign governments on charges of possessing, trafficking in, or smuggling illegal drugs. This announcement is made in view of a marked increase in such arrests reported by the United States consular officers.

There were 142 Americans under detention on drug charges in 20 foreign countries in February 1969 but by February 1970 the total had risen to 404 - the largest number of Americans held for narcotics violations since records have been kept by the Department of State.

Young Americans (under 30), who are now traveling widely and in larger numbers than ever before, represent the greater number of U.S. nationals arrested abroad for narcotics violations. Most of them are unaware of the grave potential consequences of violating the laws of a foreign country, and of the limited capacility of their government to assist them if they are arrested overseas. Some are the dupes of drug peddlers who subsequently inform on them to the authorities.

The penalties for narcotics violations in most countries are severe. The charge - whether possession or, more serious, trafficking - is usually determined on the basis of the quantity of narcotics involved. Possession of more than 500 grams (about one pound) results in a minimum of six years in jail plus a heavy fine in some countries, one to three years in a "detoxification asylum" - usually a mental hospital - in others. Trafficking in drugs evokes a penalty of ten years to life in others.

In some countries prison conditions are primitive (e.g., damp, underground locations; rats and vermin; insufficient light, heat, and food; absence of sanitary facilities; abuse by other prisoners). Pretrial confinement of those charged can be prolonged - in some countries up to 1 year without bail. Some of it is spent in solitary confinement. Language difficulties compound the tragedy.

Case histories like those which follow are increasingly common:

--An American coed traveling in Europe to tour the art centers went to prison on a 2 1/2 year sentence for the possession of narcotics.

--A U.S. college student on a summer vacation in a Middle Eastern country accepted from a friend a gift of a half gram of hashish which he carried in his pocket for several days, intending some time to try it. He was stopped by police and arrested after a search in which the minute amount of hashish was found on him. He was sentenced to 2 1/2 years in prison. An appeal was denied.

--Nine months in a dank underground dungeon before being tried was the fate of one college-age American traveling in the Middle East, where the law calls for 1-5 years for possession of hashish, and 3-15 years for trafficking. While serving their sentences in this area, some American youngsters have been removed to prison mental hospitals. Courts may not consider mitigating factors, such as the youth of a suspect or the absence of prior offenses. There is often no bail.

The increase in arrests of Americans abroad on drug charges is in part the result of intensified worldwide efforts by the U.S. Government, which is working closely with other governments in an international effort to suppress the illicit trade in narcotics and marijuana. It is also related to the increase in illegal use of drugs in this country and in attempts to smuggle narcotics and marijuana into this country, as indicated by Bureau of Customs seizures.

Americans traveling abroad are subject to the laws of the country they are visiting; they are not protected by U.S. laws. The U.S. Government can only seek to ensure that the American is not discriminated against - that is, that he receives the same treatment as do nationals of the country in which he is arrested who are charged with the same offense.

When a United States citizen is arrested abroad, U.S. consular officials move as quickly as possible to protect his rights, but the laws of the country where the arrest takes place determine what those rights are.

The consul reports the arrest and subsequent developments to the Department of State. He is in regular contact with the detainee, his attorney, and local officials to determine how the detainee is being treated, and to make sure that processing of the legal charges is not unduly delayed. He also does whatever is possible to solve any difficulties which may result from the conditions of detention. (For example, in some foreign prisons a bare subsistence diet is provided, and families are expected to supply most of the prisoner's food).

Under U.S. Law, official U.S. funds cannot be used to pay legal fees or other expenses for an indigent American detainee.

What Makes Musigals?

Take a small but energetic group of girls, add four part harmony and a small pitchpipe, and that's what makes Musigals.

Informality is the key to this group's lively presentations. All the music is contemporary folk and show songs, done in four part arrangements for soprano, lead, baritone, and bass. Since there is no outside director, Musigals is wholly dependent upon each member for varied responsibilities.

The group has been a part of the University for a number of years, appearing at campus functions. Miss University Pageant, Freshman Sing, and the Intercollegiate Talent Revue are major concerts each year.

In addition, Musigals often travel to other colleges in the area to participate in song festivals. Other groups appearing are from Amherst, Smith, Mt. Holyoke, Wellesley, Yale, North Adams, Springfield, and Bay Path. One such gathering of mixed talent was at Bay Path Jr. College in Longmeadow, and there is always the Bay Path Jr. College in Longfield.

After these concerts, there are often informal get-togethers with the other schools to talk over the show and gain new ideas for succeeding ones. It is also a means of becoming better known throughout a wider area and sharing common interests.

The spring schedule includes a joint college concert in Belchertown and an appearance at the spring celebration in the Northeast Area.

Viennese Chamber Ensemble Featured In Two Evening Concerts this Week

Die Reihe

Die Reihe, a Viennese Chamber Ensemble will begin a two-day residency at the University today under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council Concert Association.

This group of fifteen instrumentalists which is making its first trans-continental tour of the United States and Canada, will perform two entirely different programs in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. tonight, Tuesday, April 7 and Wednesday evening, April 8, under the direction of Dr. Friedrich Cerha.

The program for this evening will feature a performance of the Schoenberg masterpiece "Pierrot Lunaire" featuring vocal soloist Marie-Therese Escribano. The first part of the program will include "Multiple II (1969)" by Roman Haubenstock-Ramati; "Catalogue des Objects Trouves" by Dr. Cerha and "Kulminsation II" by Amestis Logothetis.

For their program Wednesday, Die Reihe will offer a program including "Ein Stelldichein" by Arnold Schoenberg; Six Songs, Opus 14" by Anton Webern; "Three Short Pieces for Chamber Orchestra" by Schoenberg and "Kammerkonzert" by the important Hungarian composer, Gyorgy Ligeti. Following intermission Die Reihe will perform Schoenberg's "Suite Opus 29".

Reserved single tickets for these concerts are priced at $1.00 for UMass undergraduates; $2.00 for UMass graduate students, faculty, staff and other students and $3.00 for the general public and may be obtained at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall until 4:00 p.m. today. At 6:00 p.m. the Box Office at Bowker Auditorium will handle remaining tickets. Telephone for both offices is 545-0202.

Film Series Spotlights '50's

This Friday evening, the Spring Film Series continues with a study of the 1950's. Two presentations are scheduled, "Jailhouse Rock" starring Elvis Presley, and an original TV Episode from the "Amos 'n Andy" series of the early 50's.

"Jailhouse Rock", made in 1957, was Elvis' third motion picture. It surrounds the life of a singer who is sent to prison for manslaughter, and who later reaches stardom. Probably of greatest interest is the general feeling and mood of this time, and the music, typified by a dozen or so of the rock hits of that year.

As an added attraction, one of the earliest television shows to come from Hollywood, "Amos 'n Andy" will be shown. The show, known to radio in the 30's and 40's, finds one distinction in that the cast is entirely composed of Black players. The short feature also provides a good chance to study television techniques of the early 50's.

These films will be shown Friday evening, at 7:30 and 9:45 in the School of Education Auditorium.

THE CANCE LIVING VENTURE

is now accepting applications from any male student for next year. This year Cance initiated student-originated dorm courses, financed student-initiated cultural projects, sponsored bands, movies, and off-campus trips, had resident graduate student advisors, and maintained a quiet and friendly study atmosphere. All this with no counselors or head of residence! Next year we can do much more. If this sounds like your kind of dormitory – applications are available from your Head of Residence, the Cance Table in the Union, and by calling 6-5077 for information.

Is there a Paulist in the crowd?

Believe it or not, a campus protest group is not an unlikely place to find a Paulist.

Why? Because Paulists are the mediators of our time . . . standing between God and man . . . understanding, helping, loving . . . trying to bring together the extremes of the world we live in and the Church.

Wherever he is . . . as a college chaplain, working in a ghetto or helping in a parish . . . the Paulist is serving.

If you're interested in finding out more about the Paulist priestly spirit, write for our illustrated brochure and a copy of our Renewal Chapter Guidelines.

Erotic Love Poetry Featured on Wednesday

Bob Zelman, a graduate student in philosophy, will present a reading of the erotic love poetry of Michael McClure in the Colonial Lounge Wed. April 8 from noon to 2 p.m.

Mr. Zelman was quoted as saying, "I discovered McClure's poetry in an anthology during the spring vacation. The strength and force and sheer beauty of his work stunned me.

"McClure created a word "MEATSPIRIT" which suggests the oneness of body and soul. This means that the physical act of making love is spiritual or holy. The poetry reading will celebrate the divine act of making love. I will also read pieces by Lenore Kandel, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Kenneth Patchen and Allen Ginsberg on this same theme," he added.

"There will be a ritual dance afterwards to help liberate the repressed forces of sexuality within us all." Free punch will be served.

UM Prof: Science OK in Sociology

"Sociology, Tomorrow" is a new book by University associate professor of sociology Peter Park in which he presents his case for making science possible in sociology.

In the introduction Dr. Park notes that although sociology is based on many complex theories, "there is not a qualitative generalization in sociology that can claim universal, or near universal, validity." He adds that the book is an examination of current sociological theories, methods and practices, in an effort to "discover the conceptual elements that need to be turned around or eradicated before sociology can function as a science."

According to the publisher's note, "the science of sociology emerges in this essay very much a thing of tomorrow--that is, a potential that can be realized only by a conceptual revolution which may presuppose a new vision of man."

The book has been published in hardcover and paperback by Pegasus of New York City.

At UMass, Park teaches courses in research methods and statistics in sociology. A graduate of Columbia University, he holds M. A. and Ph. D. degrees from Yale University. Prior to coming to UMass in 1962, he held research positions at the Yale Center of Alcohol Studies and the Finnish Foundation for Alcohol Studies in Helsinki.

Universal Church Opens Area Parish Plans "Air Afternoon" for Wednesday

The Universal Life Church held a service to begin the Amherst Area Parish last Sunday at the Campus Pond. The new church flag was unfurled -- white for peace and gold for prosperity -- and raised high into a brisk and sunny wind.

Sitting as a happy flock of birds in the willow tree, the ministry planned Air Afternoon. Prayers to air will begin this Wednesday at 1:00 p.m. with the raising of the church flag in the Campus Pond Meadow (in case of rain, Thursday or on the next dry day.)

What will happen--kites filling the sky, bubbles balancing themselves, balloons jiggling in the trees, a swing swinging laughing people and whatever else.

Everyone is invited to participate and the Ministry of Air welcomes bazzar air-born clothing and other heretofore unconceived prayers to air.

In a simple ceremony on Sunday the ministers gave birth to a tiny pine tree planted upon the grave of a giant tree. Then the various reverends, many recently ordained under the authority of the Mother Church of Modesto, California, came forward with their views of what lively events the parish might offer. Proposals ranged from a spiritual rock revival service to a delegation for the April 15 Peace Rally.

The Parish will meet again this Sunday at 1:00 p.m. on spiritual and business matters. Everyone is invited. Anyone may be ordained so long as "you believe in doing whatever you believe is right."

Ruggers Drop Opener to Beacon Hill Club, 16-0

BOSTON - Coming on strong early at Franklin Field in Boston, the Welch backs from the Beacon Hill Rugby Club nearly blew the UMass ruggers off the field in the first five minutes of the game, but ended up winning only 16 - 0, here on Sunday.

John-o Kirk, Beacon's Welch inside center, and Jim Marcellino, former Holy Cross football star, ran the ball extremely well, forcing two outside breaks for two early tries and a 10 - 0 lead.

The UMass forwards did not give up and took the game back to the Beacon Hill side of the field. Great forward play by Davidson, Fristbee, Ladner and Chanoweth brought the ball to within inches of scoring six times during the remainder of the game.

Although UMass outplayed Beacon for the remaining 70 minutes of the tilt, it could not capitalize on the numerous opportunities it had.

Outside center Jack Long kicked beyond the fullback from Beacon at one juncture in the game. Long covered the kick well, forced the Beacon Hill full back to release the ball, gathered it up himself but was tackled on the one-yard line. Beacon's backs recovered and kicked the ball to safety.

Jim Keating,on a penalty situation, drove the ball to within the two-yard line but did not have adequate support to drive it over.

From a line out, Davidson broke through to the two-yard marker, a ruck formed but the ball came back to the UMass backs and they could not take advantage of the situation.

There were two other costly errors in the game. Offside infractions led to two penalty kicks converted by the splendid Beacon kicker. Both kicks travelled well over 40 yards.

At the post-game party, the Beacon Hill veterans praised the progress of UMass rugby and called the club a "sleeper".

The B XV's met earlier in the day. UMass, with two-thirds of the team never having seen a rugby ball until a few weeks ago, went under, 22-0. Here again the inexperience was costly. At halftime the score was 17-0.

The club made adequate corrections against the veteran Beacon Hill seconds, allowing one try in the second half. There were several rays of sunshine. Dennis Chapman came on strong in the second half to lead the forwards. Craig Schiff and Jack Hamilton corrected first half errors and played aggressive ball.

The club tavels again this weekend to play Tufts University on Saturday. Tufts, one traditional rival, will be in for a surprise when the UMass club with, as Beacon Hill's vice president Jon Klarfield put it, "some of the best forwards in the East", arrives in Medford.

Catch This...

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon, often described as the nation's No. 1 baseball fan, turned over the ceremonial chores of tossing out the first ball to his son - in - law, David Eisenhower, Monday but still managed to see a few innings of the presidential American League opener at chilly RFK stadium.

Nixon was tied up at the White House when young David followed the President's advice and arched a high soft toss that reached the first base line, one of the longest opening day pitches in history.

Eisenhower's first of three tosses came after a cold light shower caused a 55-minute delay in the start of the game between Washington and Detroit, initiating baseball's second hundred years.

It was snagged by Senator outfielder Hank Allen, who caught the first toss of Nixon a year ago.

Nixon, who also performed the task in 1959 in addition to last year, could not make the ceremony this year because of a critical Senate vote on the Supreme Court nomination of Judge G. Harrold Carswell.

The President arrived at the ballpark in the top of the fifth inning.

Sox Set Sights for Summit

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - Just three years ago, the Boston Red Sox startled the baseball world by winning the American League pennant under a rookie manager at odds of 100-1.

Now they're seeking to win again under another rookie manager but bucking odds of only 12 - 1. Many observers feel the odds against them are too high.

Manager Eddie Kasko, who began managing in the Boston farm system when Dick Williams was promoted to field boss of the Red Sox in 1967, once again is following in Williams' footsteps. He hopes to duplicate Williams' rookie managerial feat.

Baltimore's defending champions have to be favored to win again this yar. However, it should be noted that no club has repeated since the New York Yankees' reign from 1960-64.

The Red Sox finished third behind the Orioles and Detroit Tigers, 22 games off the pace in 1969. However, they appear much stronger now than a year ago.

This observer hasn't picked the Red Sox to win a pennant in many years. However, after a long period of close observation in Florida the writer is convinced that this is a solid team with a good shot at the flag. If they stay healthy, the Red Sox can sip champagne as champs next fall.

The Red Sox have tremendous power and will score plenty of runs. They led the major leagues with 197 homers last year, extending their league record for 100 or more home runs to 24 straight seasons.

Everyone in Boston's starting lineup, including several pitchers, is capable of hitting a homer at any time. The Red Sox have a trio of sluggers in the outfield, with Carl Yastrzemski in left, Reggie Smith in center and Tony Conigliaro in right. Billy Conigliaro and rookie Mike Derrick will back up the top three.

The infield has hitters who also have outstanding gloves. Shortstop Rico Petrocelli and second baseman Mike Andrews form a double play combination earning more than $100,000 this year.

Little Luis Alvarado, who could become the darling of New England fans, has developed rapidly as a third baseman, and appears ready for a fine rookie season. His progress has enabled big George Scott to return to full - time duty at first base. Scott never has been happier, and enjoyed belting pitchers to a .442 tune in exhibition games.

Dick Schofield, the team's 35 - year old senior states - man who broke into the majors in 1953, and Tom Matchick, obtained from Detroit in a deal for Dalton Jones, provide experienced infield reserve strength.

Gerry Moses, whose biggest weakness in the past has been defense, appears more confident and has won the starting catcher's job. He will be backed up by Don Pavletich and Tom Satriano, both of whom can fill in at infield spots.

The Boston pitching could provide the biggest surprise. Veteran southpaw Gary Peters, acquired from the Chicago White Sox last winter, didn't allow an earned run in 32 innings this spring.

Veterans Jim Lonborg and Ray Culp are healthy and ready to go. Sonny Siebert, who underwent elbow surgery last fall, has been slow finding his touch, but is being counted on as a starter.

Another veteran, Lee Stange, may be used as a spot starter as well as long relief. He didn't allow an earned run this spring.

The bullpen looks good with veterans Sparky Lyle and Vicente Romo and rookie Ed Phillips of Colby College fame ready for short relief.

Young southpaws Bill Lee and Ken Brett and righthander Ray Jarvis will fit in as needed. Mike Nagy, who had a 12-2 record as a rookie last year, will join the club later. Nagy, recently released from the Army, was left in Florida to get into condition. Naturally, every club figures itself a possible pennant contender in spring training. However, the Red Sox must be considered a legitimate challenger. They've got the talent.

Orr's Title Worth $2000

NEW YORK (AP) - Bobby Orr of the Boston Bruins was officially crowned the National Hockey League scoring champion Monday, becoming the first defensemen ever to win the title.

The 22-year-old Orr annexed the title with 120 points built on 33 goals and a league-record 87 assists as he dethroned teammate Phil Esposito. Esposito finished in the runner-up spot with a league high 43 goals and 56 assists for 99 points, according to league statistics released Monday.

Stan Mikita of Chicago was third with 86, followed by Phil Goyette of St. Louis, with 78, and Walt Tkaczuk of New York, with 77.

Phil Esposito's brother, Tony, Chicago's goalie, won the Vezina Trophy with a low yield of 2.17 goals a game. Tony Esposito also set a modern record with 15 shutouts.

Orr's scoring championship was worth $2,000 to him. He received the Art Ross Trophy and $1,000 for winning the title plus $500 for being the leading scorer the first half of the season and $500 for also being the leader over the second half.

Tony Esposito's Vezina Trophy crown was worth the same, $1,500 coming for winning the title, and a total of $500 extra for leading in each half of the season.

Chicago 8 Defendant, Lawyer Will Speak at Cage Tonight

Rennie Davis, a defendant in the Chicago Conspiracy Trial and Leonard Weinglass, assistant defense attorney for the Conspiracy, will speak tonight at 8:30 p.m. in the Cage. The speech is sponsored jointly by the UMass Social Action Council, Student Union Program Council, Orchard Hill Area Government and Residential College, Central Area Council, Southwest Assembly, Class of 1970, Greenough House and the Valley Peace Center.

Davis was a member of the original "Chicago 8", the defendants in what is considered by some observers to be the most important political trial in American history. The defendants, who included nationally known proponents of a wide range of radical political viewpoints, were charged with "conspiracy to cross state line with intent to incite a riot" during the Democratic National Convention in Chicago during July, 1968.

Davis is a 29 year old native of Lansing, Michigan. He was among the first of the student activists during the early 1960's as an undergraduate student at Oberlin College, Ohio.

And in 1963 he received a masters degree from the University of Illinois.

From 1963 through 1965 Davis attended graduate school at the University of Michigan. He was one of the original founders of SDS and was the chief organizer and administrator of the Ten Economic Research and Action Projects.

Davis worked for two years in JOIN, a community action project in the North Side of Chicago. After visiting Hanoi in October of 1967, when north Vietnam was under heavy American bombardment he returned to deliver a personal account at the Pentagon peace march.

He joined the National Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam as a field coordinator, directing a movement to organize anti-war activities at military bases.

'Open Supper' to Precede Davis, Weinglass Speech

All interested members of the University community are invited to an open supper in support of Rennie Davis of The Chicago 7 and Leonard Weinglass, a Chicago 7 lawyer. The supper will be held in the New Hatch, tonight at 7:00 p.m. prior to the speech by Davis and Weinglass at 8:30 in the Cage.

The "Peoples Supper" is a substantial break with a long University tradition of inviting a privileged few to "entertain distinguished visitors" with an expensive dinner according to sponsors.

This open supper also stands for the idea that ordinary people are just as important as their spokesmen. Rather than hiring a catering service, the "dinner fund" will be used to buy hearty food. Volunteers will prepare sandwiches, which will be available to all as long as they last.

Unless unforseen transportation difficulties arise, Davis and Weinglass will be at the supper.

UMC Decides Schedule For April Moratorium

By JUDY PITTMAN
Staff Reporter

Last night the University Mobilization Committee (UMC) held an organizational meeting to decide on the schedule of action for April 13th and 14th, leading up to the Moratorium on the 15th. Area coordinators for the campus presented ideas such as Guerrilla Theater productions, films, bands, and speakers. Ted Kennedy has been invited to speak at the rally on the 15th and his reply is anticipated. Other noted speakers are expected to participate in the rallies.

Sidney Finehirsh, committee chairman of the UMC led the discussion and presented the following tentative schedule: Monday and Tuesday, community canvassing and leaflet distributing; Wednesday morning, campus canvassing for support of the march to the stadium; Wednesday noon, rallies in campus community areas, leading to a march to the pond; Wednesday early afternoon, march to stadium followed by a march to Amherst Center and a rally in Amherst Common.

The UMC voted to support anti-ROTC action by participating in the SDS-sponsored Teach-In on Monday. The Teach-In advocates the abolition of ROTC on campus without cutting of money to ROTC scholareship holders.

Drug Panelists Discuss Addicts, Legalization

By BILL WOODS
Staff Reporter

"The feeling you get from shooting heroin is like reaching the sexual climax all over your body." So states addict Teddy Loman at a panel discussion on drugs last night in the S. U. Ballroom. The program started with questions aimed at clearing up a few of the misconceptions about drugs from the more than 100 people in attendance.

Doctor William Romanos said that the main problem with addicts is not so much the physical addiction as the psychological addiction. "Most addicts depend on drugs to solve problems of frustration, dependency, or depression." An addict can be treated in a hospital, but he will seldom be cured there. "Only an agency that sees an addict as a person can hope to cure him."

Dr. Romanos offers halfway or marathon houses as the most successful in this area. He cited the lack of conclusive evidence in regard to whether smoking grass can lead to harder drugs or not and mentioned an unreleased biochemical report that says that marijuana can be turned into toxic alcohol.

On the question of possible legalization of marijuana, Attorney David Anderson foreseen some sort of regulation as to its use which would include an age limit and also some sort of government quality control. He does believe that in the interest of fairness, either grass, cigarettes, and alcohol have to be all legal or all illegal.

William Kingston, an area probation officer, said that although the laws for possession and presence are strict, the sentences are still up to the individual judge and are usually lenient for first-time offenders.

Dr. Romanos mentioned that although proof is still hazy concerning LSD and brain or chromosome damage, there are currently several experiments in Britain in which LSD is used to treat psychopaths or alcoholics.

April 10-11

The following are most of the topics presently scheduled to be covered on April 10-11 in Southwest and in Campus East (Orchard Hill, Central, and Northeast). A precise schedule including discussion coordinators and specific room assignments will be printed in Thursday's Collegian for use Thursday evening during the "Learn-In" and Friday by participants. Many students and faculty have expressed interest in more than one area. If you wish to participate in one discussion but have feelings or ideas about another, a note to the Master's Office, Coolidge Lobby (Southwest) or to Barbara Heron 409 Machmer, tel. 5-2043, will guarantee that your concern will be included in the deliberations of other discussion groups. The basic schedule is as follows:

Academic Affairs

1. CHANGES IN SOCIOLOGY - How can the sociology courses be changed? Basic sociology? Should the requirements of the major be altered? Are courses too large? to impersonal? Is more social action needed? Is the grading system effective?

@. ACADEMIC FREEDOM - An unpopular subject. What is it? What is its condition at UMass? Is HHH included? Are students included? What are the specific pressures at UMass?

3. UNSTRUCTURED COURSES - Can courses be run without syllabi? Can textbooks be chosen by students? Can courses evolve as they go along?

4. FUTURE OF THE LIBRARY - Should the tower go up - even if there will never be enough books? How can the building be best used? When can we get enough money for books? What sort of books do we need? What should be the policy on duplication of popular books? What study facilities do we need? What lounge space? Facilities for grad students?

5. NEW DIRECTIONS FOR GRADUATE EDUCATION AND RESEARCH IN SCIENCES - Is there proper training available for the pure researcher? Are there any jobs? Is there a proper balance between research and graduate training?

6. TEACHING ASSISTANTS - How are they selected? How competent are they? How independent can they be? How closely in touch are they with each other? How effective is an evaluation system of them?

7. HONORS - What is the Honors Program? How does it resemble honors programs elsewhere? What is its philosophy? What are its future plans? Who is involved in it and why? Proposals for changes? Proposals for staff assistance?

8. TEACHING OF MATH AND SCIENCE

need? What are the mechanisms? Who sbould do it? Is this a valid part of the educational process? What is the place of student directed learning?

The Nation and The World

Springfield Students Plead Their Innocence

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Twenty Springfield College students pleaded innocent in Springfield District Court Tuesday to charges stemming from Monday's three-hour seizure of the college administration.

Judge Socrates Geanocopoulo: continued the case until April 28. Eighteen of the men and women who had been removed from the building were charged with trespass, and two others arrested outside were charged with disturbing the peace.

The white demonstrators, who staged the take-over in support of a group of black students who were earlier suspended by the college, had been freed on bond of $200 each for the eighteen and $500 each for the remaining two students.

At an emergency meeting called by the Student Council Monday night, students voted about 2 to 1 to post bail for the protestors from available council funds. Some 1,200 of the total student population of 2,000 attended the meeting.

An estimated 750 students attended a lengthy noon gathering Tuesday outside the administration building at which a succession of speakers called for "student power" on campus.

The 20 students were suspended and barred from the campus pending hearings of their cases.

Helmeted police were called to the campus Monday to remove the demonstrators from the building. The black students whom the 20 were supporting had been scheduled to return to the campus Monday for disciplinary hearings in connection with their occupation of a dormitory earlier this year.

There are 49 black students at the school.

Kennedy Case Closed

EDGARTOWN, Mass. (AP) - The Dukes County grand jury abruptly ended a two-day special session Tuesday and reported no findings in its announced independent investigation of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's auto accident of last July.

Saying, "The case is closed," District Attorney Edmund Dinis said he will move immediately for public release of the transcript and report of Judge James A. Boyle in January's secret inquest into the death of Mary Jo Kopechne, 28.

She drowned when Kennedy's car went off the side of a narrow bridge into a tidal pool on Chappaquiddick Island.

The grand jury was dismissed by Superior Court Judge Wilfred J. Paquet after the foreman, Leslie H. Leland, reported the 20 members had "no presentment" - meaning that it made no findings at all in its session.

The grand jury had requested Monday that the inquest transcript and Judge Boyle's report be made available for the jury's study. Judge Paquet, as he announced in advance, rejected the request.

Paquet also had informed the jurors in his opening instructions Monday that there was no appeal possible on his decision on any questions submitted by the grand jury.

In dismissing the jurors whose year-long term expires in a month, Paquet reminded them they were sworn to secrecy and were forbidden to discuss with anyone anything that went on in the grand jury room.

After court adjourned, Dinis told newsmen on the courthouse steps that the case is ended. He added: "I will file the appropriate certificates as required under the decision of the Supreme Court, notifying the court that there is no proposed prosecution in this matter and that should clear the way for release of the transcript and the judge's report."

Dinis said he planned to prepare the certificate immediately on return to his New Bedford office.

Forced Busing

Supreme Court Decision Sought by Fla. Governor

BRADENTON, Fla. (AP) - Dr. Jack Davidson, saying he had regained control of Manatee County public schools from Gov. Claude Kirk, ordered his staff Tuesday to quickly put into effect a federal court desegregation program.

Kirk, meanwhile, facing a contempt hearing before U.S. District Judge Ben Krentzman in Tampa, told the opening session of the Florida Legislature his seizure of Manatee schools to block the desegregation program was not subject to federal district court review.

"I know that it is not," Kirk said. "I believe the issue of forced busing must be decided once and for all by the United States Supreme Court. This is my intent, and this is where I am headed, if I can but just get my day in our highest court."

Aides said at first that Kirk would appear personally in the district court but later said attorneys would represent the governor.

Krentzman directed Kirk to show cause why he should not be held in contempt for ordering Manatee teachers and pupils to defy orders to desegregate schools Monday. The judge also told Kirk and his aides to stop interfering with the operation of the school system and implementation of the desegregation order.

Davidson, suspended temporarily Sunday by Kirk, met at his school board office Tuesday with Betty Rushmore, president of the school board, and two Kirk aides, Dr. William Meloy and Dick Warner.

Davidson said he did not know if Kirk had lifted his suspension.

"I really don't know at this point what the governor has done," Davidson said. "The only thing I'm doing now is making preparations to implement the court order."

Krentzman 's order was to have gone into effect Monday, the day Kirk seized the 17,000-pupil school system in Manatee, a Gulf Coast county south of Tampa. The order calls for the mass busing of 2,600 pupils to achieve a racial balance.

"Our purpose is to come here to follow the directives of the court order and to begin to implement the desegregation program immediately," Davidson said. He said he hoped to complete implementation by week's end.

Monday, most pupils and all teachers followed Kirk's instructions and reported to the schools they had been attending all year. Nearly 1,600 pupils did not report for classes.

Within hours, Krentzman handed down the show cause order.

Senate to Vote On Carswell Today

WASHINGTON (AP) - The future of Supreme Court nominee G. Harrold Carswell rested uncertainly with a shrinking band of uncommitted senators Tuesday on the eve of the climatic confirmation vote.

"This could go down to the wire," said Majority Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana, "It's going to be a real horse race."

Both Mansfield and at least one Republican - Robert J. Dole of Kansas said Wednesday's vote could be decided by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew who could vote to break a tie to put the 50-year old appeals court judge on the Supreme Court.

Other Republican leaders continued to profess confidence in confirmation although by far less than the 52-44 Monday vote by which they beat back the effort to return the nomination to the Judiciary Committee.

But privately some of these same Republicans conceded they were nervous over the outcome.

Sen. Mark. O. Hatfield, R-Ore., announced Tuesday through an aide that he would vote against confirmation - an announcement which had been expected.

It raised to 40 the number of senators committed against confirmation in an Associated Press poll. The poll showed 44 for confirmation and 12 publicly undecided.

Four senators are expected to be absent.

Senate Passes 6% Pay Hike For All Federal Employees

WASHINGTON (AP) - Acting quickly in the aftermath of the first postal strike in history, a Senate unit approved unanimously Tuesday a bill giving all civilian and military federal workers a six per cent pay boost.

The measure, tied as an amendment to a bill already passed by the House, did not touch on postal reform, a further eight per cent pay hike proposed for postal workers or the administration's bid to pay for part of the cost by charging a dime to mail a first class letter.

But the legislation approved by the Senate Post Office Committee would extend the six per cent raise to the 29,000 Capitol Hill employees - not including members of Congress - to the five-man staffs of ex-presidents, and to judges in the District of Columbia.

Chairman Gale W. McGee, D-Wyo., said he expects little or no opposition when the bill reaches the Senate floor Wednesday or Thursday. He said there is a possibility the House could act and send the measure to President Nixon by the end of the week.

"We could see no merit in foot-dragging on this," McGee said when asked whether the quick action had anything to do with continued restlessness among postal workers, especially in New York City where the large-scale walkout began.

The collective bargaining session with officials of postal employees unions - the first ever agreed to by the federal government - tied a further eight per cent raise for postal employees to reorganization of the Post Office specifically, creation of a postal corporation to run the system on streamlined business principles.

And Nixon said a hike in postal rates - including charging a dime for the first-class stamp that now costs six cents - was needed to pay for the Post Office share of the settlement and to clear existing postal deficits.

Both those proposals face tough congressional in-fighting.

"I gather the sentiment is a little hostile toward the 10-cent stamp," said McGee. Sen. Hiram Fong of Hawaii, the committee's ranking Republican agreed.

Already there has been testimony from representatives of other Civil Service employees' organizations that if the Post Office workers get an additional eight per cent, the rest of the federal work force will expect it also.

As it stands, the six per cent raise would be retroactive for all employees to the pay period ending last Dec. 27.

Strike Postpones Debut Of New Campus Center

By CLAUDIA HAMBERG
News Editor

A strike by two local labor unions has caused yet another delay in the long-awaited opening of the UMass Campus Center. Work has come to a near standstill, and it now appears that graduating seniors may never have a chance to use the student-funded facility.

Construction Laborers Local 596 of the AFL-CIO and Carpenters District Council 1503 of the AFL-CIO have been off the job since April 1, when their contracts expired. Negotiations are underway, but the strike is expected to last anywhere from two to six more weeks. Only a minor work by plumbers and other specialists not in the striking unions is being done during the strike.

All hiring of workers to man the Center, which was to open April 27, has been halted, and all advertisements for the new positions cancelled.

All users scheduled for the Campus Center before June 5 have been notified that their dates are in serious jeopardy.

It is estimated that the Campus Center will be in full operation seven weeks after the laborers return to their jobs. Some areas of the Center may be opened four weeks after the strike is settled.

The state Democratic Convention to be held at the University in early June is not expected to suffer if the Campus Center still sits uncompleted. Only VIPs of the party were to be lodged in the Campus Center, and alternate accommodations have been reserved for them.

Learning-Resources to Begin New Communications Center

Learning-Resources will initiate its function as a communications switchboard Monday. Its efficiency is entirely dependent upon the interaction of the student community which it serves.

Up until now, it has been involved primarily in the organization of a plan of action. The immediate program will stress information on the upcoming moratoriums, organizations and events concerning quality environment, living-learning communities and on campus educational opportunities.

Those seeking involvement in their surroundings who don't know how to go about finding the necessary information can call and let Learning Resources locate and deliver the information to you.

More importantly, people already connected with some type of function, regardless of how exotic its nature, can let them know of its existence so that it can be filed for future reference. The switchboard, located at 320 South College, phone 5-0066, will be open Monday thru Friday from 12:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. starting on Monday, April 13.

DVP Elects New Officers

By BOB MANGIARATTI
Staff Reporter

The Distinguished Visitors Program Committee elected Harry Ellison '71 chairman last night at a meeting in the Student Union. Other officers elected were Nancy Viall vice chairman, Betty Solovei, treasurer, and Joel Mayer program director.

The committee is beginning to prepare next year's program. The new chairman hopes to prepare more symposiums and festivals similar to the recent moratorium poetry festival. He welcomes suggestions from the student body.

Ellison also encourages interested students to write to people they consider prospective speakers and to attend D.V.P. meetings.

Speakers coming up this month include author Arthur Clark and as part of the Martin Luther King lecture series psychologist Kenneth Clark and Ralph Abernathy. There also will be a mid-east symposium with Arab ambassador El Zayyat and Israeli ambassador Moshe Leshem.

He served with David Delinger, another defendant, as co-project director of the Mobe's demonstrations during the 1968 Democratic National Convention. Later, he served as national coordinator of the Mobe-sponsored Counter-Inauguration in Washington during January, 1969.

Recently, he returned from another trip to Hanoi, during which he was instrumental in gaining the release of three captured American pilots. He is presently free on bond pending appeal of a five-year sentence imposed after his Chicago conviction for "inciting to riot". He was also sentenced by Judge Julius Hoffman to serve twenty-nine months in jail for "contempt of court". Presently he is serving as National Coordinator of the New Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam.

Leonard Weinglass is a 36-year-old civil liberties lawyer whose practice is based in Newark, New Jersey. He attended George Washington University and Yale Law School and served as a Major in the United States Army. During the trial he served as assistant defense attorney to William Kunstler. For his actions in defending the Chicago 8, he received a twenty month "contempt" sentence from Judge Hoffman.

He is presently free pending appeal and is engaged in preparing the appeal of the conviction of himself, Kunstler and the eight defendants.

Findings on Marijuana: Non-Addictive, But Dangerous Drug

WASHINGTON (AP) - Preliminary government findings on marijuana are that it does not necessarily lead to heroin addiction but is a dangerous drug and strong preparations might produce brain damage in some chronic users.

The preliminary findings by the National Institute of Mental Health after three yers of study were included in a report released Tuesday by the House Select Committee on Crime.

The committee concluded marijuana traffic is a minimum $850-million-a-year big business that is leading increasing numbers of young Americans into tragic lives- but that present stiff penalties are threatening respect for law in general and should be reduced.

It suggested a maximum one-week jail sentence for first-offense marijuana possession, during which the violator would be required to take a drug abuse education course.

"The growing drug culture," said Chairman Claude Pepper, D-Fla., "is rapidly undermining respect for law and doing serious damage to the ability of the criminal justice system to safeguard the lives and propoerty of the American people."

The committee's 120-page report said this is largely because while marijuana helped boost all drug arrests 322 per cent from 1960 to 1968 - when 167,177 people were arrested including 43,200 under 18 and 6,243 under 15 - judges jailed few of the young people because the penalties are unduly harsh.

"I think a jail sentence of a week would be readily enforced," Pepper said in an interview, "and would be accepted by the public."

The Senate has passed the Nixon administration's proposal that the present two-to-ten year penalties for marijuana possession be reduced to a misdemeanor with a maximum one-year jail sentence.

The committee's $850 million-a-year figure is one of the first ever estimated on annual marijuana traffic and the report said users probably spend far more.

The committee staff computed, on the basis of raw government estimates, that six million people used marijuana in 1969 - 600,000 habitual users spending at least $20 a week for a total $624 million, 2.4 million spending at least $100 during the year for $240 million and three million experimenters spending an insignificant amount.

The preliminary findings on marijuana effects, given by NIMH Director Stanley F. Yolles in response to questions from Pepper, included a study showing that one-third to one-half of chronic marijuana users also try barbiturates and pep pills and less than 5 per cent try narcotics including heroin.

The paper said the institute hopes to have definitive answers on long-term marijuana effects in two years.

For now, it said marijuana is known to be an intoxicant and like any intoxicant can affect mental judgment and physical coordination.

COME TOGETHER APRIL 10 11

BE A WINNER!
Drink Florida orange juice...win this orange bug.

Guess how many Florida oranges in this bug and it's yours!

It's a two-door 1970 Volkswagen sedan. From floor to ceiling and windshield to windshield, it's packed with Florida oranges. All you have to do is figure out how many—to win it, or one of the 56 other prizes listed at right. Pick up an entry blank where you dine or snack, and use these clues:
1. Diameter of the oranges ranges from 2 15/16" to 3 1/4".
2. In volume, the oranges range from 13.3 cu. in. to 17.9 cu. in.
3. The Volkswagen has 88.7 cu. ft. of space without the trunk (but remember, the seats take up some of that room).

No purchase required. Prizes will be awarded for the answers closest to the correct number. In case of ties, the entry with the earliest postmark will be the winner. Three second prizes: RCA 12" TV's. Three third prizes: Fridgette 2 cu. ft. refrigerators. Fifty fourth prizes: Orange inflatable chairs.

Get your entry blank at your school cafeteria, student union, or local dining or refreshment spot.

Copulate for Co-Existence

"To Fuck is to Love Again" (Quote from Lawrence Ferlinghetti).

"The condition of alienation, of being asleep, of being unconscious, of being out of one's mind is the condition of the normal man... When our personal worlds are rediscovered and allowed to reconstitute themselves, we first discover a shambles. Bodies half-dead; genitals dissociated from heart; heart severed from head; head dissociated from genitals...Man cut off from his own mind, cut off equally from his own body - a half-crazed creature in a mad world."

("Politics of Experience" by R.D. Laing)

Yes, we are all mad. But to be mad or alienated is to be fooled by words.

We have words for divine, or spirit, or soul and other words for body, matter and animal. We only think that they are different.

We feel that the acts of the body are dirty, while the acts of the spirit are pure. But in reality they are not different.

THE HOLY ACTS OF THE SPIRIT ARE JUST THOSE OF THE ANIMAL. THE PHYSICAL ACTS OF THE BODY ARE HOLY.

The physical act of making love helps to bring into existence the spiritual emotion of being in love. It is also the highest expression of this feeling.

The emotion of spiritual love incredibly enhances the physical act of making love.

We need new words to express the forgotten reality that "spirit" and "animal" are not contradictory terms. They are joined in nature - in reality - although not in language.

YOU ARE DIVINE.

YOU ARE AN ANIMAL

YOU ARE A DIVINE ANIMAL.

Poet Michael McClure has created a word to cure this perversion of reality in our language. It is a new word which expresses the harmony of the soul and the body, - the word is MEAT SPIRIT.

We are all made of MEATSPIRIT. Rejoice in this news. Exult in it. Share the joy of your MEATSPIRIT, the exuberance of your divine animality in holy acts of physico-spiritual love with your fellow beings.

TO CELEBRATE THE HOLY ACT OF LOVE, I will present a reading of the poetry of Michael McClure, Ginsberg, Ferlinghetti, Parchen and Lenore Kandel.

TO LIBERATE THE REPRESSED FORCES OF SEXUALITY IN US ALL, there will be a ritual dance.

This will all happen TODAY AT THE COLONIAL LOUNGE FROM 12 to 2 FOR FREE. (Free "Punch" will be served).

You Politicians

Some will read this, some won't, some will just skim over this and say, "Oh, yuh!", others will call me a dirty no-good communist, and still some will say, "He's our boy". Well frankly I don't care what you think of me, but you'd better give a damn about what I'm going to say.

Revolution is defined as a complete change in/of government. When there's revolution there's hate, destruction of property, and the taking away of that great gift called life. But what's the difference between that and what we're doing in Vietnam? Well people, if things don't seem to improve around here that's just what we'll have. Man, we can't even live together in our own country, and here we are going clear across an ocean, killing American G.I.'s to show the Vietnamese how to take care of themselves. Well people, don't you think that such charity, and generosity should begin at home? Why don't some of you 'high class' politicians shack up for a while in Harlem, or in some of the low cost rental areas in Roxbury. Maybe then you'll realize that your own people need your 'help' desperately.

Just the money that the government spends on military in that pit could be spent on starving Americans, or maybe to put someone in a better home.

Our whole country is being mishandled by only a very small minority, namely you politicians. With what little money the people get, do you give it to them? No, are you kidding? You've got to have a committee first to see how things are, then you form more committees to gether reports, information etc. But it's a different story when you people want a raise, all you have to do is go down to your local Congress House (I guess that what you call it these days) and 'vote' yourselves one.

Oh, but you people are trying to make up for your bad points by giving us Americans protection, by throwing those hoodlums in that Chicago scandle in jail. But what are they griping about? They got a fair trial, and that judge was a delightful old chap. Or is it by the way the police and N.G. handled the Newark situation?

I'm also fascinated by the way in which the races (or should I say the different races) in this great land of ours get along. How thoughtful of the residents of Lamar, S.C. to warmly welcome the two bus loads of black children. Or how about the luxurious, opened-spaced way in which the Indians live, and the friendship that they share with the white man?

Let me ask you a question - what else do you know about S.D.S. and the Black Panthers besides the shit you read about them? Think about it. Well, did you know that these 'freaks' (as they are called) have set up programs in which they feed hungry people (in the ghettoes), or they might have something for kids to do, and maybe sometimes take them on little trips. I think that those organizations are nice things.

Come on man, give us a chance, give peace a chance. Why don't we become just what the name of our country is 'United States'. Doesn't that sound nice? We (meaning my generation) did it at Woodstock. You politicians are forcing me and millions of others like me to make a decision, one which we both might regret. I'd sure as hell like to take my children into a world in which Peace, Love, and Happiness were a dominant factor. To start off with, why don't you give us people a choice to whether we could join programs like 'Vista' in which we can help our own. I think bringing joy to people is a lot better than shooting them. Think about it. For it's only a matter of time, but you'll have to make your decision first, then we make ours.

PEACE

My Response: I Do Care

To The Editor:

My response to your question "Do you care" is that I do. I care enough about the world around me to observe and fight something I believe is wrong. Unfortunately the author of a letter to the Collegian did not exactly imply so in his letter on April 6.

The world of curriculum which Mr. Helming founded his notions on, is all too fragile outside the insulated University barriers. Knowing all too well that the education received here is 15 years behind the current trends is another indication of just how shallow the curriculum stream runs. Mr. Helming, however, would further like to keep the individual, if not misinformed, at least non informed in a world of books; sealed off "from the activist world of social and political debate."

This idea of sealing one's mind off from current events is another way of making study, books, and curriculum just so much sawdust. Motivation does not derive its base from sawdust, nor does creativeness. The student in grade school, high school, and finally college gets all drive, motivation, and creativeness ground out of him all too rapidly in the present "Bible of Curriculum". The outside world has a way of doing that fast enough alone without education doing more.

Another point Mr. Helming belabored was that of the activist student. "When does the activist reflect soberly about his faults, his obligation?" To challenge something intelligently, first one must know what one is challenging, secondly one must know what one wants. Mr. Helming's rhetorical question did not look deeper than the ink mark on this sheet of news print. The student constantly buried in books COULD be merely assimilating another's views, accepting them as "WRIT". If the individual in this milieu were further insulated in a super non activist guarded bastion, safe from outside influence, this would only heighten the assimulation, the absorption, the unchallenging, the following. However, if one is assessing his values against another in the political arena, HIS views, His faults are constantly being challenged and changed.

The idea of having frivolous causes smacks to me of the following sheep, where nothing the sheep does is worth any merit. Small steps combined add up to a total step. This is how the present English language we speak was formed by people accepting grunts and moans as meaning something and gradually the sizeable language we have now evolved. The world didn't start with Webster's Unabridged Dictionary in one big heap.

When a great or small decision or crisis arrives the people looking at everything but books and curriculum as frivolous may let the binder pass without examination, to the misery of all.

Validity

To the editor:

Mr. Austern's remarks on Miss Delnore's letter were extremely unfair and erroneous in substance. Without any evidence whatsoever, Mr. Austern accuses Miss Delnore of advocating genocide, when nothing in her letter suggests anything of the sort. Mr. Austern would do well to examine the validity of his remarks before he sets about viciously slanderizing people.

Although Mr. Austern refuses to admit it, there is, as Miss Delnore points out, a considerable amount of pro-Israeli bias in American mass communication. It is no coincidence that "terrorist" and "Arab" are practically synonymous in the American press. Nearly every American magazine and newspaper (with the notable exception of the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITER) is strongly prejudiced in favor of the Israelis. This is a matter of fact and not theory. One example of documented evidence appears in an essay by Michael W. Suleiman entitled "Mass Media and the June Conflict," which appeared in Vol. XIV, No. 10-11 of THE ARAB WORLD. I encourage Mr. Austern and other interested persons to read this essay. Before Mr. Austern comes back at me with the charge that I am relying on "Arab propaganda," I ask him to read the article and then decide its validity.

Farce

To the editor:

Last Friday evening, I was unfortunate enough to be one of the many who attended the so-called "Spook Show" held at Mahar, supposedly showing "Abbott and Costello meet Frankenstein" plus an added feature of "Frankenstein meets the Werewolf" or something similar. What a farce!! Anyone who attended the show will tell you that these two features were cut up so badly that together they couldn't have totalled any more than four minutes of showing. Why on earth they were even advertised along with "The Raven" I'll never know . . . we missed seeing 3/4 of each, excluding the Raven of course. Also, whoever was running the camera up above the audience must have slipped off to see another movie as several times during the course of the evening, the film was left no-where (unattended it appeared) and the sound was runreal - like deafening? I realize that 50¢ isn't too large a sum to hand out individually, however, the class of showing should not be based on the cost nor the audience. Whoever is in charge of this whole set-up, I strongly urge you to show what you advertise in future, in their entirety and not try to sap people in by false advertising in order to sell more tickets!!!!!!!

Upset!

To the editor:

Mr. Helming, you just blew me away with your letter of April 5, 1970, entitled, "On Caring". In my opinion you epitomize what is wrong with education - the stalwart, tight-minded, know-it-all "educator" who is more concerned with covering what is on the agenda, and stuffing his favorite subject down peoples' throats than with the students and their thoughts and feelings.

You say, "Our business is the development of minds and characters; and I believe that any business as complex and delicate as this can be accomplished only by concentration on intellectual activities carefully insulated from the activist world of social and political debate." This is junk!!

First of all Mr. Helming, stop to consider the fact that students' minds are not made of clay and that "minds and characters" are something that a student already has before he comes to college. In fact, unbelievable as it might seem, the average man on the street has a mind and a character!

You call the development of minds and characters "a business", and indeed, it is - the business of brainwashing individuals into a state of unthreatening complacence. Tricky Dick would LOVE your philosophy, Mr. Helming.

If intellectual activities are "insulated from the activist world of social and political debate" what good are they?? Not a damn bit, Mr. Helming!! And I think you'd better face up to the fact that what students want and what you want are not the same. We want stimulation not insulation!! You might try caring a little more about your students and caring a little less about your courses and fitting in every single class.

Mr. Helming, I went through four years at this school "listening to speaking, reading or studying 'difficult books' and courses" and, let me tell you, I nearly came out a sterile minded individual. My "education" had so stifled my mind that it took me almost six months just to learn HOW to relate to what was happening in the world. This has been a very maddening and frustrating experience. I have seriously considered charging this University with voluntary mind slaughter. That's right, Mr. Helming, mind slaughter - and you are GUILTY!!

Come down out of your ivory tower, Mr. helming! When was the last time you went to Harlem? How long has it been since you've read Eldridge Cleaver and/or W. E. B. DuBois? Ever hear of Jerry Rubin? Julius Hoffman?

Get it together, Mr. Helming, before you go blowing an y more minds with your hyped-up intellectual jargon!

Support

To the editor:

The English Department Undergraduate Council strongly urges that the students support and participate in the activities scheduled for April 10 - 11. We feel that these events provide an opportunity generally unavailable to students to conduct peaceful, organized discussions dealing with educational problems (including racial and community). The allotment of the two days within the academic schedule will afford a time for unprecedented concentration on the issues and will provide an atmosphere free of the tension which delayed confrontation would create. The effects of these meetings will be only as significant for the individual as you, the student, make them.

Loss

To the editor:

It seems to us as if the Collegian has again been "shirking" its duty to the students on this campus. Although we may be wrong, we feel that the students especially the males, would be more concerned over their Draft status and rights than whether or not the Chicago Teamsters are going to strike.

Our wonderful (?) student newspaper places on the front page of Monday's issue news of the Teamsters while it seems to hide an article about the Arlo Tatum lecture on the third page. Because of this gross oversight many people on this campus missed an extremely informative lecture and may suffer because of their ignorance about the Draft.

One wonders if the Collegian is being paid by General Hersey and Jimmy Hoffa instead of the students.

Support

To the editor:

I support the effort of students and faculty who are planning campus-wide discussions on April 10-11. Discussions for examining the educational atmosphere of the university and for developing new ideas. Not as a sure thing, but as a calculated risk.

Many other universities have passively ignored their festering sores and have seen them erupt into uncontrollable crisis. Can we here manage our conflicts more creatively?

T. S. Eliot once wrote: "For us it is only the trying; the rest is not our business." There is no guarantee that the April 10 - 11 colloquoy will succeed. However, doing nothing at all is certain to fail. Do students and faculty here care enough to involve themselves?

More Background

To the editor:

In the Monday April 6, 1970 issue of the Collegian appeared an article on the Baha'i faith and apparently there are more to come! First of all, the publication of religious-teaching articles in the Collegian is questionable. Secondly, the study of the Baha'i faith without reference and study of the political activities and interests of British Imperialism in Persia in the second half of the nineteenth century is a great error.

The policy of "divide and rule" which was used by the British so effectively in creating so many wars between the Persian Empire and the Ottoman Empire on religious basis alone was, in my opinion, the basis of the creation of the new religion, the Baha'i faith, in Persia. It is a well-known fact in Persia today how Baha'U'llah, the father of the Baha'i faith, was encouraged and supported by British Imperialism. It is therefore easy to point out the close relationship between the interests of British Imperialism and the nature of Baha'i faith teachings and purposes through their ties.

The appearance of articles on the teachings of the Baha'i faith, without political consideration of its creation and teachings are thus, in my opinion, harmful in the sense that they are misleading.

Come in and see a brand new Porsche. With its engine in the middle.

A sports car built just for racing doesn't need a back seat. So its engine can be mounted in front of the rear axle, near the middle of the car.

That distributes its weight more equally, so it holds the road better and corners better than ordinary cars.

We think it's time you shared those advantages, so we're selling a couple of mid-engine cars you can drive on the street.

The 4-cylinder 914 model costs $3595.00* It has an electronically fuel-injected engine, goes 110 mph and does 0-60 in 13 seconds.

The 6-cylinder 914/6 model costs $5999.00* goes 125 mph and does 0-60 in 9.9 seconds.

Both come with a built-in roll bar, removable fiberglass roof, 5-speed stick or optional 4-speed Sportomatic, two trunks, and the kind of craftsmanship expected from Porsche.

So if you're thinking about a true, two-seat sports car, think about this:

When you don't get a back seat, you should at least get an engine in its place.

Honors Program Seeks New Image Under New Officers

By WILLIAM WOODS
Staff Reporter

For some time now the University's Honors Program has been thought of as just special kids taking special courses. An en masse meeting of these same "University Scholars" last Wednesday night produced a serious effort to change all that. "We do not want to become an elite intellectual community" affirms Mark Kaufman, newly elected Vice Chairman of the Honors Board.

Started in September the program now consists of 162 people, mostly freshmen plus a few sophomores, who were chosen on the basis of four criteria:

1) Students who really wanted an education, i.e. people who wanted more out of this University than that which the regular core curriculum could provide.

2) Those who were eager and able to participate in seminar courses where each member is required to debate and defend his views.

3) Students capable of a vigorous academic program. This usually meant an exceptional high school record, or a 3.0 cum in college although the latter requirement could be waived if a candidate had remarkable strength in another area.

4) Candidates who have interesting or unusual views or those who have a very particular interest in a certain field.

The major goal of the program was to provide an opportunity for each student to be responsible for designing his own educational blueprint while at the same time establishing a sense of community among the members of the group. The Honors Program offers three steps in attaining these goals:

1) Students do not have to meet regular University core requirements although they still have to satisfy requirements for their major department.

2) Each student has his own preceptor who helps to shape his program. It is hoped that the preceptor will be come not just another academic advisor, but a real friend. To this end it is hoped that everyone would pick any faculty member of his choosing to be his preceptor.

3) Courses are of a seminar type where the emphasis is on small numbers (usually 8-10 people), intensive work in a specific area instead of just a broad introduction to a field, and informal atmosphere.

The newly elected officers of the program, Rich Henderson, chairman, Kaufman, and Cathy Christopher, secretary are all very excited about the tremendous potential of a bold experiment like this, but stress the need for some sort of organization.

As it is now the program's ideal of "individualism" has far outshadowed its other main goal of "a sense of community." The kids are not all together, and ideas often die just because there is a lack of communication among members.

To remedy this, four standing committees have been established:

1) The preceptor committee, whose members will try and interest as many faculty members as possible in becoming preceptors.

2) The course committee who will explore the possibilities of starting new courses in any field where there is sufficient interest and a teacher.

3) The communications committee, whose job it will be to bring the group together and let everyone know what is happening.

4) Admissions committee. As it is now the program will add a number of freshmen as well as upperclassmen to bring the total to 300.

As Cathy says, half-seriously, "We'd like to see the program expanded to include the whole University." They are at present, however, trying to open some courses to even non-members in an attempt to avoid becoming an elite community.

Those who wish to join can see Professor Everett Emerison, head of the program, who will arrange interviews with both the student committee and a faculty panel.

According to Professor Emerson, most of the students in the program reject the convential values of a traditional education. They distrust grades because they measure performance against a standard and are not an accurate gauge of learning.

In contrast to the "honor" students of former years these kids are not so bent on graduate school or even in the degree as a paper, but rather as a display a vitality towards their work. To them, an education is a dynamic thing and the Honors Program offers a growing challenge to that dynamism.

E Lot Parking Discontinued

According to Mr. Robert Ferriter of the Parking co-ordinator's office, E lot will be paved in two parts starting with the north section this morning.

Construction from the water towers to the intersection of "E" lot and Orchard Hill Drive will necessitate moving of vehicles off the "E" lot area.

Cars maybe parked on both sides of Orchard Hill Drive all this week.

The Town of Amherst will allow parking roadside WEST SIDE--SOUTH BOUND on East Pleasant Street until the "E" lot construction is finished.

Thursday work will continue from the water towers down to Clark Hill Road.

Vehicles should be moved onto Orchard Hill Drive or East Pleasant Street as outlined above.

Veteran Educational Benefits To Be Increased

More than 777,000 veterans, servicemen, wives, widows and children will receive increased educational allowances under a bill signed recently by the President.

All trainees under the G.I. Bill and other VA educational programs were assured by Donald E. Johnson, Administrator of Veterans Affairs, that they will receive the increases automatically and retroactive to Feb. 1. He stressed that it is not necessary to contact the VA to receive them.

Johnson said most of the studying under the G.I. Bill in institutions of higher learning will receive one check about May 10, which will reflect the new regular monthly rate, and include retroactive increases from February through April.

The bill increases from $130 to $175 a month the rate for single G.I. Bill veterans studying in an institutional full-time program.

A veteran with one dependent will receive $205 a month, two dependents $230, and $13 for each additional dependent. Rates are scaled downward for less than full-time students.

Single G.I. Bill students going three-quarters time will receive $128 a month, $152 with one dependent, $177 with two dependents, and an additional $10 a month for each additional dependent.

Half-time G.I. students will receive $81 if they have no dependents, $100 with one dependent, $114 with two dependents and an extra $7 for each additional dependent.

The rate for a single veteran under the vocational rehabilitation program was increased from $110 to $135 a month for full-time students. A veteran with one dependent will receive $181 a month, two dependents $210, and $6 more for each additional dependent. These rates are also scaled downward for less than full-time students.

For wives, widows and children receiving allowances under the dependents educational assistance program, the new monthly rate s for full-time students are $175, three-quarter time students $128, and half-time students $81.

The new law also sets up special programs for servicemen with educational handicaps. One, the predischarge education program, pays for schooling of educationally disadvantaged servicemen before discharge without charge to their earned basic entitlement.

Administrator Johnson urged veterans interested in applying for education or training benefits to contact their nearest VA office now for a certificate of eligibility.

Baseball Swings Into Action

Astros 8, SF 5

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) - Norm Miller, Houston's No, 1 right fielder last year but replaced by Joe Pepitone this season, delivered a three-run pinch-hit homer in the seventh inning yesterday to lead the Astros to a 8-5 opening day victory over the San Francisco Giants.

The Giants rallied for two runs in their half of the seventh.

Willis Mays singled twice for the Giants, drove in a run in the first and moved into 15th place on the all-time major-league base hit list with 2,928.

O's 8, Injuns 5

CLEVELAND (AP) - Paul Blair and Dave Johnson each doubled home two runs in the eighth inning leading the Baltimore Orioles to an 8-2 opening day victory yesterday over the Cleveland Indians.

Blair's hit broke open a close game in which the Orioles took advantage of wildness by Cleveland starter Sam McDowell and reliever Mike Paul in the seventh to score two runs and take a 3-2 lead.

Southpaw Dave McNally, who won 20 and lost seven last year, got the victory by scattering four hits, striking out 13 and walking three.

Twins 12, Sox 0

CHICAGO (AP) - Grant Alyea, Minnesota's new left fielder, slammed a pair of three-run homers and drive across seven runs on four straight hits as the Twins routed the Chicago White Sox 12-0 in a season opener yesterday.

A sun-drenched crowd of 11,473 watched the White Sox inaugural wrapped up by the American League West defending champs with a six-run seventh inning.

After singling to open the fourth, Alyea chased Sox starter Tommy John with a three run blast into the upper left field stands in the fifth and greeted Danny Murphy, third Sox hurler, with another three-run homer to left in Minnesota's six-run seventh.

Phils 2, Cubs 0

PHILADELPHIA (AP) - Left - hander Chris Short, returning after being sidelined a year with an injured back pitched a five-hitter yesterday as the Philadelphia Phillies defeated the Chicago Cubs 2-0 in a National League baseball opener.

Short got hitting support from rookie second baseman Denny Doyle, who had three hits including a run-scoring triple, and third baseman Don Money, who doubled in another run.

Mets 5, Bucs 3

PITTSBURGH (AP) - Pinch hitter Donn Clendenon drilled a bases loaded single in the 11th inning, driving in the tie-breaking runs and world champion New York Mets won their first season-opener ever yesterday by downing Pittsburgh 5-3.

The Mets who had lost eight straight openers, and Pirates struggled into the 11th knotted at 3-3 when rookie Mike Jorgenson, a defensive replacement, opened with a single.

Ron Swoboda attempted to bunt and when catcher Jerry May threw high trying for the force play at second, both men were safe. A sacrifice advanced the runners and then Jerry Grote was intentionally walked, loading the bases.

Ken Boswell, a left-handed hitter was sent up to bat for relief pitcher Ron Taylor and the Pirates countered with southpaw Joe Gibbon. Then Clendenon, an ex - Pirate, batted for Boswell and rapped Gibbon's first pitch past second for two runs.

Calif 12, Mil 0

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Andy Messersmith allowed only four hits and the California Angels ruined Milwaukee's American League debut yesterday, thumping the Brewers 12 - 0.

A crowd of 37,237 watched Milwaukee's return to the majors.

The Angels' long ball attack started in the second inning when Jay Johnstone opened with a triple and scored on Jim Spencer's sacrifice fly. The Angels scored three more the next inning, all with two out.

Brewer started Lew Krausse left in the fourth.

A's 6, KC 4

KANSAS CITY (AP) - Sal Bando and Rick Monday led an early Oakland clubbing of Kansas city pitcher Wally Bunker, then the A's relied on Rollie Fingers' sparkling relief pitching to claim a 6-4 victory over the Royals in an American League opener yesterday.

Bando smashed a two-run homer, highlighting a three-run Oakland third inning which staked the A's to a lead they never surrendered.

Sox 4, Yanks 3; Lee Aids Peters

NEW YORK (AP) – Reliever Bill Lee bailed out winner Gary Peters yesterday and the Boston Red Sox edged the New York Yankees 4-3 in manager Eddie Kasko's successful debut. Peters, acquired from the Chicago White Sox during the winter, had a four-hit shutout until the Yanks broke through for three runs in the sixth on a hit batsman, a walk, Bobby Murcer's single, a throwing error by Carl Yastrzemski and Curt Blefary's two-run double.

Lee overcame a wild streak to get out of the inning and controlled the Yanks the rest of the way.

Peters knocked in the first Boston run with a ground rule double that bounced into the Yank bullpen in the second.

Rico Petrocelli's first of two doubles drove in the second run in the third after Yastrzemski and George Scott singled. Petrocelli's fifth-inning double followed a long triple by Scott to right center. Jerry Moses' single then scored Petrocelli.

Mel Stottlemyre, the Yanks' 20-game winner of 1969, was roughed up for 10 hits and four runs before he was lifted for a pinch hitter in the fifth. Rookie Ron Klimkowski, Joe Verbanic, making his first appearance since 1968 because of arm trouble, and Jack Aker finished up.

GARY PETERS, new Boston lefty, shown before he changed his sox, had a four hitter going until the sixth when Yankees knocked him around for three runs. Bill Lee got the save as Red Sox won opener.

Frosh Baseball Opens Today

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Tom White will be on the mound this afternoon as the freshman baseball team meets the Connecticut freshmen in its home opener at 3:00 p.m.

White is a very promising lefthander from Amherst who last year was a Hearst All-Star and subsequently was drafted by the Houston Astros of the National League but chose instead to come to UMass.

Pitching is about the only position on which coach Tony Williams has made a final decision, as a lack of outdoor practice has forced him to formulate a very tentative lineup which will not be definitely decided upon until just before game time.

Williams, however, did name a few probable starters including catcher Bill Ryan from Revere, center-fielder Earl Manley from Springfield, shortstop Rick Marchette from Barre, third-baseman Mark Palau from Elmont, N.Y., and second-baseman Dan Kelly from North Reading. Positions in left-field, right-field, and first base were still being fought for as of yesterday's practice.

Although not quite sure what to expect from his team this year, Coach Williams does feel that he will get a good job from his pitchers. He also had words of praise for his infielders, especially Ryan and Palau, and expects the infield to be very solid defensively.

Bruins Ready for NY

BOSTON (AP) - Gerry Cheevers will be defending the Boston Bruins goal tonight with ironman Ed Giacomin performing a similar task for the New York Rangers as the two National Hockey League teams begin their quarterfinal battle for the Stanley Cup.

It has been a long time since either team captured a Stanley Cup. For the Bruins, 1941 was their last season of glory. For the Rangers it has been a year longer since achieving hockey supremacy.

Both teams have just come off hectic battles in the league's East Division. The Bruins lost their battle, finishing second to the Chicago Black Hawks, although tied in total points. The Rangers were more fortunate, edging Montral for the fourth and final playoff spot.

"This is a slick outfit," Bruins Coach Harry Sinden said of the Rangers. "They score a lot of pretty goals. We need sound positional play against them. They also have a potent power play, so we must avoid penalty trouble. And we need a good offense to beat Giacomin. You don't get him with only 20 shots on the net."

For the 30-year-old Giacomin, it will be his 7; it game of the season. Giacomin had his troubles late in the season as the Rangers slipped from first to fourth. However, the Rangers had injury problems, with defensemen Brad Park and Jim Neilson and forward Don Marshall all missing ice time.

"It should be a tough series and should go six or seven games," Sinden said. "We'll be ready. Losing out on first place quite naturally was a disappointment, but winning the cup should make up for it."

Court Rules Green Charge To Stand

OTTAWA (AP) - The trial of Ted Green of the Boston Bruins began yesterday with a defense attempt to have the charge of common assault quashed on a technicality.

But provincial court Judge M.J. Fitzpatrick of Cornwall ruled against the 25-year-old defenseman will stand as worded.

Green's counsel, Ed Houston, then said his client pleads innocent to the charge arising from a stick-swinging duel last Sept. 21 with winger Wayne Maki, then of the St. Louis Blues, in a National Hockey League exhibition game here.

Maki and Green were charged by Ottawa police after the fight which caused Green to undergo three operations for head injuries. But he has been pronounced fit to resume play next season.

Maki was cleared on a charge of assault cuasing bodily harm and a similar charge against Green was thereupon reduced to common assault.

League President Clarence Campbell suspended both players, Green's suspension to be served when he resumes playing with Boston.

Masters Not Easy for Young Pros

AUGUSTA, GA. (AP) - Larry Hinson stood there in splended isolation on one side of the putting green, unnoticed and ignored while the gallery oohed and aahed at every casual move of Jack Nicklaus and Arnold Palmer.

He was getting the treatment accorded many outsiders in the staid, tradition - bound Masters Golf Tournament - a relegation to obscurity while the great names of the game basked in the limelight.

"Oh, this is great," he said derisively.

"I get to town and there's no place to stay. I get out to the club and they're already assigned all the lockers.

"Yeah, they really know how to run a tournament."

Hinson, a slim, tow-headed blond, is a 24-year-old who is making his first start in the Masters, one of the world's four major tests of golfing greatness. He won his way into the elite field by his performance on the regular tour.

But his sentiment was shared by some of the others making their first appearance here.

"It's all they said it was," Dick Lotz said yesterday with a trace of awe in his voice.

"It's great," said Bert Greene, "I love this place."

They are three of the brightest young stars on the pro tour who are challenging golf's greatest shot makers in the 72-hole test that begins Thursday on the famed Augusta National Golf Club Course.

All have their work cut out for them. But Hinson, a Georgia native who overcame a polio-withered left arm to make a place for himself in the game, has a little extra incentive going for him.

"I'd like to win this tournament and dedicate it to the man who taught me to play," he said. His mentor, T. C. Laughter, is gravely ill at his home in Hendersonville, Ga.

Jack Nicklaus, South African Gary Player, Arnold Palmer, Billy Casper all are among the top choices for the famed green jacket that goes to the winner.

The total purse is never announced in advance, but it went over $186,000 last year with $30,000 to the winner. The prize money is almost incidental, since many pros figure the endorsements that follows a Masters triumph may be worth up to $1 million.

Surprising Penguins Set for Oakland

PITTSBURGH (AP) - The Pittsburgh Penguins meet the Oakland Seals tonight in the first National Hockey League playoff game in the Penguins' short history.

The Penguins, who finished in second place in the Western Division, will tangle with the fourth-place Seals in the first game of the quarter-final playoffs.

Second place for the Penguins was almost a compromise between the views of General Manager Jack Riley and Coach Red Kelly, now in his first season at Pittsburgh after two years with the Los Angeles Kings.

Riley said several months ago he would be happy just to make the playoffs. "But Red is shooting for first place and that is good," the general manager said.

The Penguins never had a chance to catch the first-place St. Louis Blues, but they clinched second a week before Oakland and Minnesota knew they would be in the playoffs at all.

The Penguins lost the last game of the season to the North Stars, who clinched third place with the 5-1 victory.

Against the Seals, Pittsburgh has an over-all record this season of 2-3-3. At home they are 2-0-2 and at Oakland they are 0-3-1. The big problem could be winning in Oakland, but the Penguins say they don't see it that way.

"We could have saved ourselves a five-hour plane ride, that's all," said defenseman Bob Blackburn. "It doesn't really matter who we play."

"Anybody can give you trouble in the playoffs," said Kelly. "It's just a short, short, short season."

Carswell Nomination Blocked, 51-45

500 In Galley Cheer As Agnew Reads Talley

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate rejected the Supreme Court nomination of G. Harrold Carswell Wednesday by a surprising 51-45 vote that touched off pandemonium in the staid and ornate old chamber.

Wild clapping, cheers and a few scattered boos from the galleries greeted Vice President Spiro T. Agnew's solemn announcement of the tally that marked President Nixon's second straight defeat on a nomination of a Southern judge to the high court.

"On this vote the ayes are 45, the nays 51 and the nomination is not agreed to," declared Agnew with a rap of his gavel, a sound lost in the rising tumult.

Five months ago Agnew had made a very similar announcement as he declared the 55-45 rejection of Nixon's nomination to the court of Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., a result which met with silence.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told newsmen that Nixon was of course disappointed at the Carswell vote. The press secretary said the President will submit a new nomination in due course-but not necessarily before the November elections.

Demonstrations in galleries are against Senate rules but this one went on for perhaps two minutes. At one point the majority leader, Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., called for order but was not heeded. Senators took no part in the demonstration.

Sen. Richard B. Russell, D-Ga., who came from a hospital bed to vote for Carswell, rose to shout something which was lost in the din. Then he slumped back into his chair.

The jubilant crowd of some 500, mostly from senatorial staffs, moved out into the corridors and mingled with another 350 persons who had been unable to get into the galleries.

As senators left the chamber and passed through the crowd there were cheers for those who opposed confirmation but mainly silence for his supporters.

Thirteen Republicans joined 38 Democrats to reject the 50-year-old Carswell, a Georgia-born federal appeals judge accused of racism and of lacking the judicial laurels to occupy the same seat once held by the great dissenter, Oliver Wendell Holmes.

Despite a 52-44 reversal two days earlier in an effort to shelve the Carswell nomination by sending it back to committee, the liberal opposition refused to abandon the fight.

In the final hours it became clear that the outcome lay with no more than three Republican senators, with one of them Maine's Margaret Chase Smith-perhaps the key.

The first indication that the administration's cause was lost came with a firm "No" from Kentucky's Marlow W. Cook. It was the fifth 'no' vote cast, but a crucial one since the freshman Republican had remained tight-mouthed to the end despite an hours-long visit alone with Nixon at the White House Monday night.

Cook's vote was greeted with light applause - strictly forbidden - and a rustling among spectators in the seats, lining the walls behind the high galleries and kneeling four-deep along the walls on the Senate floor, to which higher-ranked aides are admitted.

"No" said Vermont's Winston L. Prouty, the second crucial vote. and louder came the applause.

"No" said Mrs. Smith, in a barely audible voice and the applause became a roar. Sen. Robert J. Dole of Kansas, a leading Republican spokesman, said Mrs. Smith had spent a long time alone with Nixon at the White House Tuesday night and that she presumably had told the President what she intended to do.

With the defeat, Carswell becomes the 25th Supreme Court nominee in history to fail to reach the bench through outright rejection, by declining the appointment, having his name withdrawn or by action being postponed.

The Tallanassee, Fla., resident who has spent 12 years on the federal district or appeals bench in the South, was the 11th nominee to be rejected outright.

Most pressing issue raised by the defeat was who would Nixon turn to now as a nominee for the vacancy on the nine-man tribunal that was created last May when Abe Fortas quit under fire.

There were immediate suggestions for cadidates, including some from a leader of the opposition to Carswell.

"There are many great jurists and lawyers throughout the South," said Sen. Joseph D. Tydings, D-Md. He listed 10 names on the Senate floor.

On his list: federal Judges Robert Ainsworth, John Minor Wisdom, Frank Johnson, J. Braxton Craven, Bryan Simpson, Walter E. Hoffman, and Elbert Tuttle.

"Take this Country Back"— Chicago 7 Defendant Davis

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Chicago 7 Conspiracy defendant Rennie Davis last night called for a "generation that takes this country back by any means necessary!"

Davis' remarks to a crowd of a thousand students in the Cage followed a speech by Chicago 7 lawyer Leonard Weinglass concerning the recent 100 day trial of the seven defendants. The two speakers were sponsored by the UMass Social Action Council, Orchard Hill Area Government and Residential College, Central Area Council, Southwest Assembly Class of 1970, Greenough House and the Valley Peace Center.

The Cage crowd gave Davis a standing ovation upon the conclusion of his speech when he stated that, "We are what they (Nixon, Agnew, Mitchell) say we are. We are anarchists, society's misfits, and revolutionaries." Led by former UMass grand student Eric ("The Rat") Waldren the crowd then began chanting "Ho, Ho, Ho Chi Minh."

A former founder of Students for a Democratic Society (SDS), Davis said that the U.S. "has been taken over by dynasaurs (Nixon). We must recognize that dinosaurs stink and die!" He then urged UMass students to shut down for the student strike on April 15 Moratorium, a massive turnout for the trial of Bobby Seale in New Haven, Conn., and a "movement led by women."

Davis devoted only the opening remarks of his address on his involvement and impressions on the Conspiracy trial in Chicago. He merely said that the government by presenting its evidence against the defendants was trying to prove that all the demonstrators at the Chicago convention and trial witnesses were "dupes" of the eight defendants.

He said that to understand the full implications of the trial one must look at the men behind the prosecution, U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell, Chief Government prosecutor Wm. Wilson and Judge Julian Hoffman. What they were about was aimed at "thrown back the revolution so as Nixon can win back the nation."

The Vietnam war then became the focal point of Davis' speech as he said that there is a "new war under Nixon, more vicious, genocidal than anything Lyndon Johnson ever thought of." According to the guest speaker the war contains a "profound lesson, that against such modern U.S. weapons as the electron bomb and anti-personnel bomb, "ordinary people can win." Davis based much of his remarks here on impressions he received on a trip to Hanoi in 1967.

Preceding Davis, Leonard Weinglass told the assembled students that there was "over-riding hostility in that (court) room." He spoke at length on the history of the Chicago trial and Judge Hoffman, the defendants and the witnesses, and evidence involved.

The 1968 law used to indict the Chicago defendants, that of making it a federal crime to cross state lines with the intent to incite a riot, was described by Weinglass as "the first time the federal government ever attempted to legislate traveling with a state in mind." And he continued that with the choice of prosecution of the seven defendants involved that the government had a "very tidy package - from pacifism (David Dillinger) to black liberation (Bobby Seale). It was the symbolic leadership of every major movement this country has ever had."

Weinglass said that during the 93 days of the trial, the defendants were never really in contempt of court, at least not to the extent of the 19 years worth of jail terms which Judge Hoffman handed out. On this day, however, "all order broke down, and there were outbursts," from the defendants, he stated.

The noted lawyer concluded his remarks by quoting the court testimony of defendant David Dillinger who told Hoffman on the last day of the trial that there existed "a travesty of injustice," and that "The people are going to speak out!"

THE CROWD OF ABOUT 1000 had to wait about a half hour before Weinglass and Davis arrived at the Cage. (MDC photo by Gary Alpaugh)

Tippo Strips Johnson Of Security Authority

The administrative responsibility for the Campus Security Department has been shifted from the Treasurer's office and Kenneth W. Johnson to the Chancellor's special assistant for student affairs, Dr. R.W. Bromery, it was announced yesterday by Chancellor Oswald Tippo.

The shift in responsibility is the result of an independent study conducted by a consultant firm, the recommendations of the President's Advisory Committee on Campus Security and consultation with the Treasurer's Office.

The transfer takes effect immediately according to Chancellor Tippo, who said, "This action is in direct response to the critical need to provide extended support and liaison for the campus security department at this administrative level and to indicate the current need for a closer relationship within the entire campus community.

"It is the responsibility of the University to make available career improvement opportunities and professional educational experiences for members of the Campus Security Department," he added.

In February, 1969, the University retained the services of John W. Powell Consultants, Inc. of Connecticut, consultants on police matters, to examine the entire security program including police duties, residence hall safety and security, and the organization and equipment of the University security forces.

Their findings were turned over to the President's Advisory Committee on Campus Security, a student-faculty group, which made the recommendation for the transfer of responsibility after discussions with the Treasurer's Office.

2000 Sign Strike Pledge In Support of Moratorium

Nearly 2000 members of the University Community have pledged to strike against the War in Southeast Asia on April 15, the University Mobilization Committee announced yesterday.

The Strike Pledge is being circulated by UMC through tables at the Student Union and the Dining Commons, and in dormitories and Greek Houses. UMC is continuing to circulate the Strike Pledges which will be published in the MDC on Monday.

The Strike on April 15 as an anti-war gesture was called for by the Student Senate. All students are urged to sign the Pledge and attend the anti-war activities scheduled on Wednesday the 15th by the Committee.

The UMC schedule includes leafleting and canvassing on and off campus on the morning of Moratorium Day. At 12:00 rallies will take place in the living areas of campus and on the r side of the campus pond. The rallies will include bandsand guerilla theatre. At 1:00 people should begin going to the Stadium for the Peace Commencement scheduled for 1:30.

After the program at the Stadium a mass march will be held to the Amherst Common where a rally will be held. All permits for the march and rally on the Common have been granted by the Town of Amherst.

The UMC also plans leafleting in the community on Monday night and Tuesday afternoon. The leafleters will be going house to house and standing at factory gates in order to inform people in the area community about the Peace Movement and march on Wednesday. All interested in leafleting or who can provide cars should contact Steve Gross at 206 JFK, 546-7610, committee member.

The Strike Pledge can still be signed and the UMC can still be joined by contacting the chairman of the living areas Mobilizing Committees. In Southwest contact Steve Gross (phone and address above). The Visual Language

The Art Department and the Fine Arts Council of the University of Massachusetts will present a series of programs during the first two weeks of April dealing with the arts as a visual language. The series will explore visual literacy and sensory perception as learning devices for the arts, general education, and environmental and cultural studies.

On Thursday, April 9th there will be a pair of programs dealing with the Art of India. Professor Milo Beach of Williams College will be surveying the world of Rajasthani Miniature painting, while Professor Gary Tarr of the University of Massachusetts will be investigating the concept of the Hindu Temple. As these two programs will focus on mood, mileau and the timeless world of Indian visual forms, they will be given simultaneously and continuously in adjoining rooms so those attending can pass freely from one to the other and back.

Inquest Report Release Blocked

BOSTON (AP) - Release to the public of the inquest report on how Mary Jo Kopechne died was blocked Wednesday by the Massachusetts Supreme Court. The full court ordered Clerk Edward V. Keating of Suffolk Superior Court, who has custody of the inquest papers, not to release them until the high court orders him to do so.

The Supreme Court gave no reason for its action. However, the directive came after the court heard arguments by an attorney for McJeil, Lipman & Rostai, the stenographic form for the inquest last January.

It could not be learned immediately what the attorney asked the court.

The abrupt order came as Judge Wilfred Paquet of Suffolk Superior Court, who holds legal control over the inquest papers, was preparing an order to release them, possibly within a week.

Judge Paquet acted after District Attorney Edmund Dinis filed a certificate with Keating stating no further criminal action was planned in the case.

The certificate was the key step required by a Supreme Court hearing last fall on the inquest, before the transcript and judge's report could bemade public.

The 763-page transcript and 12-page report by Judge James A. Boyle of Edgartown District Court, who presided have been held in the vault of Suffolk Superior Court.

The case involves the drowning death last July 18 of Miss Kopechne, whose body was found in Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's car after it went off a bridge into a pond on Chappaquiddick Island.

Release of the inquest papers is considered virtually the final chapter in the nine-month-old case.

Teach-In's, Clean-Ups Highlight 'Earth Day'

(AP) - Teach-ins on the environmental pollution crisis and overpopulation are plannedon hundreds of college and high school campuses across the country April 22 - the first Earth Day.

Bringing together students, scientists, politicians, businessmen among many others, Earth Day activities will be focused on educational programs through discussion, lectures and films.

"We've kind of come to the conclusion that people know about the problems now and we want to try to offer them solutions," said Greg Painter, a junior at Aquinas College in Grand Rapids, Mich. He heads a teach-in group.

Reflecting the views of some scientists, other environmental activists on college campuses said too little is being done to halt pollution of the land, air and water at a time when many forms of life are threatened by corruption of the environment.

On many campuses cleanup efforts were being planned and students in other areas were organizing bicycling and walking campaigns to highlight air pollution problems produced primarily by automobiles.

At the University of Colorado, for instance, a three-day bicycle parade down the Rockies from Boulder is scheduled to culminate Earth Day in Denver with the presentation of an "ecological bill of rights" at Gov. John Love's office.

School officials on many other campuses have sanctioned teach-in events and are cooperating with students in organizing them.

Governors, senators and congressmen among other political figures of both parties are speaking at many events.

The most noticeable observance in New York City will be the two-hour closing of Fifth Avenue for 46 midtown blocks, a move by Mayor John V. Lindsay that has brought protests from merchants and warnings of traffic chaos. The mayor also ordered 14th Street closed from Second to Seventh Avenue from noon to midnight, giving an Environmental Action Coalition an opportunity for an outdoor exposition half the width of Manhattan Island.

After the idea for Earth Day was put forth by Sen. Nelson joined by Rep. Paul McCloskey, R.-Calif., a student-run organization, Environment Teach-In, Inc., was formed in Washington to coordinate and encourage activities.

The teach-in group estimated in January that 350 colleges and 200 high schools would participate in Earth Day-related events, but the total will probably exceed that.

For the most part, teach-in activities get under way April 17 and run through April 25 with the bulk of them coming on Earth Day itself.

Psychologist to Visit Campus; Teach Classes, Lecture in SU

Distinguished psychologist, educator, and author Kenneth B. Clark will be the guest speaker of the UMass Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture Series on Tuesday, April 14.

Mr. Clark will speak in the Student Union Ballroom at 8:15 p.m. after a full day of scheduled appearances on the University campus.

During the course of the day, he will speak to three classes on subjects ranging from history to sociology. Mr. Clark has chosen to present a brief lecture and leave most of the class time for questions and open dialogue and discussion.

The classes that he will speak at are: Professor G. Putnam Barber's Sociology 101; Professor Jack Tager's History of the American City; and Professor John Lee's Sociology of Education.

Other events during Mr. Clark's day on the UMass campus will include a reception at Mills House from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m., his lecture in the Student Union at 8:15 p.m., and a reception for the University community in Memoiral Hall immediately following the lecture.

Mr. Clark, who is presently a Professor of Psychology at the City College of New York, is the author of three books, one of which DARK GHETTO has become a classic in social psychology. The New York Times has called the author "the scholar of the civil rights movement."

DARK GHETTO is based on the author's personal experience while serving as chief consultant to the Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited (HARYOU). The book probes the pathologies of Harlem and destroys the fallacy that ghetto inhabitants are responsible for their own condition.

The other books written by Mr. Clark are: DESEGREGATION: AN APPRAISAL OF THE EVI – DENCE; and PREJUDICE AND YOUR CHILD.

Among Mr. Clark's activities are Research Director for Northside Center for Child Development, Consultant for the NAACP, Consultant for the U. S. State Department, Member of the New York State Youth Commission, Director of the National Child Labor Commission, and Director of National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture Series Committee is composed of members of the Distinguished Visitors Program and the Senior Class Executive Council. The lecture series was formed shortly after Dr. King's death and Mr. Clark opens the third year of its program. Dr. Linus Pauling, recipient of two Nobel prizes, was the speaker in 1968 and Vice - President Hubert H. Humphrey was the series speaker in 1969.

One week after Mr. Clark's appearance, the MLK Jr. Memorial Lecture Series for 1970 will present a second speaker, Dr. King's successor as head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Dr. Ralph D. Abernathy.

US Denies Entry To Mrs. DuBois

Mrs. W. E. Burghardt DuBois who was scheduled to participate in the Third World Teach-In at UMass Saturday and Sunday, April 11 and 12, has been denied entry to the United States.

Mrs. DuBois, wife of the Black author and leader W. E. Burghardt DuBois, was living in Ghana, Africa for the past few years. She is currently conducting research and study on Black affairs in Cairo, Egypt.

She was scheduled to come to the United States for a lecture tour in different campuses and universities.

The Justice Department has refused her an entry visa for her visit. Mrs. DeBois is a Black American who was born and raised in the United States. She was scheduled to speak on Black Struggle and the problems of change and development in Africa.

This is not the first time the Justice Department has denied well known authors a visa to lecture in the United States. Professor Earnest Mandell and British Student leader from Pakistan Tariq Ali were also recently denied entry to the United States.

Other Black leaders will make a special appearance at the Third World Teach-In to replace Mrs. DuBois and to express solidarity with her. Among them is Mr. Bobby Williams, a Black labor leader who will come from Washington, D.C. for a special appearance at the Teach-In.

The panel discussions will begin at 12:00 noon at the Student Union Ballroom at the University.

Fire Damages Field House At Springfield College

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Springfield College officials said Wednesday two early morning fires that damaged the college fieldhouse were apparently due to arson.

Scott Wilson, vice president for public affairs, said fire officials found several gasoline containers in the building, some still filled with flammable materials.

The "evidence points definitely to arson," he said. The state Fire Marshall's office was called to investigate.

Wilson said the building had been locked securely Tuesday night, and credited the early alarm sounded by passing students with keeping damage within bounds.

Volunteer students worked through the early morning hours to clean up water damage in the field house.

One of the blazes damaged the field house roof.

The fire came after several weeks of student ferment on the campus.

The 20 students arrested Monday after a three hour sit-in at the administration building issued a statement Wednesday saying they were all away from the area during the time of the fire.

April 10 and 11

The University – its present structure in all areas (social, academic, philosophical and governmental) are to be examined this weekend. The obvious problems which burden the school's existing structures, the April 10-11 Committee hopes, will be disected and alternatives will be proposed.

Granted, there have been "University sensitivity sessions" in the past – the annual S.W.A.P. conference is an example. But what makes April 10-11 special is that it will involve the entire University at once.

The people who will be suggesting changes will be the people who live under the existing structures and systems, and who therefore, best know the school's faults and who should be most qualified to formulate alternatives.

The faculty Senate's act of calling off classes is clear indication that the University must change; it must redirect many of its programs and give new emphasis to new goals. For the faculty Senate, historically a very conservative body, to admit that drastic changes are needed amounts to a dramatic call for action.

The logical people to take action in changing this University are the students. And students can not use the excuse that they are too bust on April 10 and 11 to participate. If a large student turnout does not materialize this weekend, then students can no longer say that the University, its faculty or its administration, are resisting change, for it will then be the students who are blocking change.

Think about your University and what you want it to be. Care. Participate in April 10 and 11; you may never again have this chance.

Carswell's Defeat

In spite of an illhumored rumor that Judge G. Harrold Carswell would be the latest addition to the United States Supreme Court, the Senate yesterday rejected his nomination by a 51-45 vote. Truthfully, we did not expect the Senate to reject Carswell, but we are nonetheless overjoyed.

No doubt a few opponents of Carswell, notably Senator Cook of Kentucky, will find the road to re election a little more difficult in the future. And no doubt, our very sensitive President will sulk a day or two over the defeat of his second attempt to seat a southern judge on the Supreme Court bench. But in spite of the damaged careers and the hurt feelings that may result from Carswell's canning, the public, which the Senate is said to represent, will not be compelled to obey the dictates of a judge of "dubious character".

The question now is whether or not the Senate can maintain its current rampage of responsibility when the third version of Nixon's concept of a Supreme Court Judge makes his appearance.

Ideally the Senate will approve the nomination of a judge who is progressive and competent, after all we are dealing with the Supreme Court. But perhaps the best we can hope for is that the Senate will continue to block Carswell-like nominees.

Academy Awards

The 42nd annual Academy Awards ceremony came to an end last Tuesday evening with an obvious indication that the 3,100 Academy members are finally giving at least some past due recognition to the new breed of films and film makers.

Three out of the five pictures nominated for best picture were of this type, "Midnight Cowboy", "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid", and "Z". The other nominees in this category were "Anne of the Thousand Days" and "Hello Dolly" which represented the old and seemingly dying type of massively produced film spectacles. In all fairness "Anne of the Thousand Days" must be spared here from inclusion with the "Hello Dollies" and the "Wizzards of Oz". It was saved from same inclusion by two expert performances; that of Richard Burton and Genevieve Bujold. The obvious favorite of those who saw all five productions was, of course, "Midnight Cowboy" which took the Oscar.

In the best actor category with Richard Burton pitted against John Wayne, the seemingly obvious choice would have been Burton for "Anne of the Thousand Days". The Academy members saw things a different way however and gave the Oscar to John Wayne for "True Grit". Could it have been that maybe the Academy members didn't see Burton's performance??? The other contenders, Jon Voight and Dustin Hoffman for "Midnight Cowboy", were in the Academy's eyes hardly a threat when placed along side the old pros. It could have been the base type of characters which they portrayed in "Midnight Cowboy" which turned the Academy members to the choice that they did make. But even so, for the most realistic, blood and guts performance, Voight and Hoffman should have taken the gold man standing still. It is apparent that the Academy members are just not ready for what is today and real and not dressed up in some super-characterization apart from actual existence. The award very obviously should have gone, if same is given for true to life, realistic performances, to Voight and Hoffman. But even so, Wayne over Burton?

Maggie Smith took the best actress award for "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" which was a surprise. The obvious toss-up should have been between Genevieve Bujold in "Anne of the Thousand Days" and Jane Fonda in "They Shoot Horses, Don't They?" How Maggie Smith slipped through these two fine performances is beyond me.

All in all, this 42nd Academy Awards ceremony will without doubt mark the beginning of the prominance of the new breed of films. The fact that so many of these films and their casts were nominated numerous times for different awards! The fact that one of these types of films won "Best Picture!" The fact that many nominations and awards were handed out to these productions in categories involving technical excellence in the production end of these films. All goes to show that the new breed of films and film makers will be in the future the standard type in this country. I think that we can look forward to a year where realism will replace the fascade, where life will replace fantasy, and where the film industry will thusly mark an era of radical improvement having moved away from the Hollywood standard and taken on a world standard in exposing issues and depicting realism throughout same. Goodbye Hollywood, hello life!

Moratorium

(First of three parts)

Next Wednesday will be the 15th of April. Next Wednesday there will be an enlarged, expanded demonstration by the people of the world, demanding peace, now. Next Wednesday, the hearts and minds of civilized mankind will once again unite in a forceful call for sanity and the humanity of man. Within this movement, in thousands of different locations the world over, aware men and women, arm in arm, united behind common beliefs, will emotionally, rationally, and peacefully demand regress of the most grievous grievance in an entire generation of time.

Here, in Amherst, you also can participate, if you feel that you should. For, on April 15, demonstrations are planned for this regional community. To begin with, the more passive means of airing dissatisfaction will be organized. These include letter-writing, leafleting, and petioning. However, as recent history has shown, these means are essentially ineffectual, and, indeed, are viewed with contempt by the offices that they are directed towards. Therefore, more active alternatives would seem to be necessary.

So, in response to this sad necessity, the more personal and sometimes flamboyant alternatives, familiar to everyone from last Autumn, will once again be employed in the war upon war. Door-to-door canvassing, perhaps the only promising method of forcing a significant change, will be employed. This "grass-roots" appeal would seem to be the only method of compelling the Washington offices to heed the sentiments of the people over those of the financial community, presupposing, of course, that the idea of participatory democracy has not moldered beyond resurrection in the hearts and minds of America's silent sentinels. Let us hope not.

Finally, in line with the absolute necessity of being recognized and heard, mass demonstrations are planned. On Wednesday, April 15, there is roughly a 75% chance that the goal of filling the stadium will be met. This bodes hope, to say the least, but is, as yet, by no means an absolute certainty. People from all over the Amherst area, including, significantly, a great many non-students, the "common people" to which the machine has laid claim, are planning to stand up and be counted, to fill the stadium, to hear the speakers, to march into Amherst center, and to rally for peace and love on the Amherst common.

Do your part. If your temperament allows, go talk with people in their homes. We all need their support. And fill the stadium. After all, to cry out against an injustice is to affirm your own liberty. And, when you get up Thursday morning and look at yourself in the mirror, I don't think that you'll find yourself quite so unpleasant to gaze upon. This I personally guarantee.

Peace now (and forevermore).

New Puritanism

Puritanism ...ho no ... tiddleywinks you say... o.k. the pilgrims were being persecuted and they found the vibrations bad and they had to leave the safe normal stageset of their mother country and the sin and vulgarity that the monarchy presented. The monarchy being the go-between between the people and God... an unknown mystery-shrouded deity -- only one: the big question mark --? So... the king and his nobles were reflectors having the vast majority pay homage to them in singing praise and fighting wars and crusades. The masses followed like sheep while the pilgrims and the puritans saw that there was no mortal go between to God...the divine right of kings was false. So they dropped out... in a day when there was a new world to run to.

But what new world have we now? the moon? gosh - geewhillikers it must be brave if it's to be new. The new world of 1492 and 1620 is old...the old world of yesteryear - Europe is hanging like a work of art. Well so...free your mind instead of evading the issue by going to the moon. Those are the lines that trickle in right now like mountain spring water. No go-betweens and no vanity-exchange establishment ...so what is God all about now? is he the unknown deity who we all vote on and pick Jesus as the voodoo doll? In the liberate your mind bit the emphasis is on transcending superstition after a little superstition of our own...the fruits of technology...god is everywhere... god everywhere. To smile like real animals for once and for all... fallen man reads too many mirrors and tries to draw conclusions that are never as good as the original. So...leave it! New religious sacraments -- chemicals that we ingest and swim in rather than the bible's printed page that intellectualizes our fantasies.

Like the puritans... western civ. is dropping out...but in the other direction...instead of purging we find ourselves urging... and the middle-man is nowhere except to pose for sick society pictures holding a decent-citizen's service award medal or something. I don't know...that's so stoop-id. We're all stoop-id at times but let's not keep track of it and blush when it gets on camera. What's a camera! Some are more free and easy than others but we have reached a point when all stage sets are predictable. Your act is as good as his if you believe in it...the ball is rolling.

1 2 3 red light...you goofed... I saw you...do not pass go do not collect 200 dollars... it's just a question of what to believe in and is one afraid. Either I evolved smoothly and gracefully or... crash! one day I woke up to find God had put diapers on my bare ass. hey dear the cave is clean now! o.k. harold supper's at six. spread the floor wax...Oh! it's new six-months-floorwax now! straight from heaven's kitchen o.k. hubby/aprons aweigh! the dishes are dirty ...fantastik! mom's got false teeth! Who is really free: number one number two or number three? sorry no decisions needed. Justice is in the air but it is not to be captured for eyeballs to mumble about in any spoken way. pulsating... pulsating polynomials. I wonder what they say.

Rubin!

To The Editor:

With regards to Robert Northshield's article of April 6, concerning Jerry Rubin's recent appearance in Holyoke, I don't agree with the singling out of the city as the culprit in this pitiful incident. It was the students and faculty of Holyoke Community College who wanted and invited Mr. Rubin to come and preach to them, not the people of Holyoke. It was, therefore, the College's responsibility to provide him with a place to speak. Furthermore, a large majority, perhaps as many as 80% of the enrollment at the College are not Holyokers. Why then should the city have had to cater to the whims of outsiders who merely attend classes there a few hours a day, and risk the chance of having violence occur in an otherwise peaceful town?

After all, it is no secret that Mr. Rubin's "occupation," as he calls it, is to incite riots. He even stated so in his "speech" at Mackenzie Stadium, and also urged his audience to "run through the streets" with him to "keep warm" as there was a cool breeze in the air. I think he had more than just a jog through downtown Holyoke in mind.

The citizens of Holyoke made it quite clear that THEY didn't want him, and after all, it IS their town. So, why then should they have to provide a place for 2,500 outsiders to listen to someone whose specific purpose is to incite them to riot. Besides, there isn't even an auditorium in Holyoke large enough to accommodate the 2,500 people who were on hand that night for Mr. Rubin's "performance", including the curious "townies who left early in stunned disgust" ---and who can blame them? Is there anyone who thinks for one moment that any of the surrounding communities of Western Mass., from where the students of H.C.C. come, would have allowed Jerry Rubin to visit their towns, let alone provide him with a place to speak? ---take Ware for Instance.

So, before Mr. Northshield used Holyoke as a scapegoat for the denial of someone's right to speak, he should have taken a better look at the townspeople's right to protect their property.

Carswell!

The refusal of the United States Senate to be bullied into accepting Judge Harold Carswell has many implications beyond the obvious importance of keeping the incompetent Florida judge off the highest court in our nation. To begin with President Nixon literally was told that he had better consult with Senatorial leaders before trying to put anything through the Senate again.

What the Senate said is that it is more than a Reichsatg, and will not do what Dicky want it to when he wants it to. Rather it is going to protect the rights of the people in this nation as it was intended to when the 17th amendment was passed.

Also obvious was the courageous action of Senators Cook of Kentucky and Fulbright of Arkansas who voted against confrontation even though they were greatly pressured to do otherwise. Perhaps the Senate is going to try and unalienate America, bring everyone back together no matter what Nixon tries to do. For the next nomination Dick, how about Wallace?

Learning

To The Editor:

We from Learning Resources Center want to extend to you our services. We want to get you together with people, groups, and things you want to be together with. Learning isn't merely a classroom phenomenon. It's in every facet of this University community and in every individual. We want to help you to take advantage of that.

But we can't do it unless you're willing to help us. Let us know what you're into and we'll try to find people that will help you share it, or make it happen. Let us know what you know so that we can let the rest of the campus in on it. How else can we get things together?

And come and work with us if you can. The more help we have, the more we can give.

Starting Monday, April 13th., we'll be in our office from 12 noon to 9 p.m. Give us a call 5-0066 or drop by to talk (320 South College - in the Free University Office). I hate to end with a slogan, but better communication DOES build a better community.

Bob Brickman discusses the evil of marrying Gentile girls with Joanne Clapp and Judith Gringorton in this scene from NJG.

New Student Group to Stage Original Play this Weekend

By HARRIET C. DECKER

When I sat down to watch NJG I didn't realize that I was an integral part of the play; the audience is cast as the main character. I had the feeling that I was riding on the old fashioned 'El' in New York City and listening in on the petty arguments that would float from open windows so close to the subway car that they seemed within arm's reach.

The biting words that flew back and forth between Gert Hersh and her son David spoke a familiar theme. The issue affecting the Hersh family is a universal one. Interfaith marriages pose problems not exclusive to the Jewish people. The author's treatment of the encompassing love of God in terms of identification and her analogous explanation is thought provoking and well taken.

This initial attempt of the Writers' Theatre Repertory Company has been well done. The play is student written and student directed by Naomi J. Berkowitz; it is also student performed. But the cast does more than merely act. There is a strong feeling of group unity where each person is responsible for sharing in the projection of the whole scene; each of the characters interprets not just his own role but how his performance will bring out the theme of the play itself.

Joanne Clapp and Mo Bernstein are very effective as the typical Jewish parents of the boy David, about to commit the most grievous sin of all, that of marrying a Gentile and not a NJG (nice Jewish girl). Bob Brickman has the lead role as David. He is typical of the boy whose home ties conflict with college life and is line and mood perfect.

Miss Berkowitz has been most astute in her understanding of both generations and their inability to communicate with each other. They were easier to identify with than were the characters portrayed by Donald Quatrale and Geraldine LePage as the Gentile father and daughter, Dr. Baker and Caroline. Their intellectual levels are so well tuned in that he is unable to be the least bit of help in advising her. He is purposely stuffy and emotionally barren, a "Ph-u-D." Caroline is his mirror image, smug and shallow. Both do a true presentation of their parts.

Barbara J. Lewis does an excellent job of comic relief when she breezes on stage as Debbie Stern; her part is more than that however and ties in the universality theme that is underplayed at this point of the story. Joseph Arsenault is tremendous, both off stage and on stage, in his role as Paul Evans. After you have "mingled" a bit with the audience and cast you will grasp how he has accomplished this. Both Paul and Debbie have a strong effect on David and Caroline.

Miss Berkowitz has been fortunate in her selection of her technical staff. Karen Tarlow, Marjorie Goodwin, Leslie Seldin and Patricia Christoon have done a smooth job of coordinating their separate talents.

There is a nostalgic feeling of the old radio show with Molly Goldberg when Aunt Fanny and Betty Fleischer are on stage. Judith Eve Gringorten and Susan Goldenberg do not have large parts but do a very good job with their lines, providing the necessary flavor -- without them the Jewish home scenes would seem "put-on" and unrealistic.

Mo Bernstein plays the role of the quiet and understanding father in this ethnic play.

The exhibition is open to the public without charge Monday thru Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The gallery is at Room 123 Herter Hall.

Drug Drop-In-Center Open On Limited Basis

ROOM TO MOVE DROP-IN Center opened on a limited basis last week. The center represents the culmination of eight months of planning and training. It was believed by many students that no place existed from which to receive honest information regarding drugs. It was also felt that there was no place to get aide for drug problems.

At present ROOM TO MOVE is located on the second floor of South College in Room 256. The staff composed of students, mans the center Wednesday and Thursday from 2:00 p.m. to 6:00 p.m., Friday from 7:00 p.m. to 3:00 a.m. and Saturday from 6:00 p.m. to 3:00 a.m. The students have collected a great deal of information and have studied the possible services available to drug users in the area.

Students seeking information regarding drugs on a legal, medical or psychological basis or looking for help with drug problems should go to the center and talk with other students. An extensive library is in the process of being built as well as a referral system of reliable professionals.

The center is also available on an emergency basis. The telephone number is 545-0400 or 545-0401. Only one request is made to students using ROOM TO MOVE — Leave any dope somewhere else. The nature of this service requires the place to be clean so that it may continue.

THEY SHOOT HORSES, DON'T THEY?

Espo Nets Three, Orr Two, As Bruins Crush Rangers, 8-2

BOSTON (AP) - Phil Esposito scored three goals and spectacular Bobby Orr put on his usual dazzling show with a pair of tallies as the Boston Bruins blitzed the New York Rangers, 8-4, Wednesday night in a brawling opening game of their best-of-seven East Division Semifinals of the Stanley Cup playoffs.

The wild, bruising encounter was marred by five fights, including three in the closing minutes with the Rangers hopelessly outclassed.

Leading 2-1 on a pair of first period tallies by Esposito, the Bruins broke open the game with a five-goal outburst in the second session.

Orr, triggered the explosion, cashing his own rebound on a 15-footer at 4:56. That ignited the Bruins, who appeared weary at the start of the period.

Boston's Don Marcotte was penalized for tripping at 7:21, but that only served to further fire up the Bruins, who are bidding for their first Stanley Cup since 1941.

The Rangers had a man advantage, but the Bruins nailed down the decision on two goals within 44 seconds. Orr interrupted a rush at mid-ice, spun around and wheeled across the New York blue line before letting go a long slapshot for his second goal.

Then Derek Sanderson, who specializes in scoring short-handed goals, hiked the count to 5-1. Sanderson went in all alone and easily beat New York goalie Ed Giacomin.

Esposito completed his hat trick by scoring on a power play traffic-jam from just outside the New York crease, and Wayne Cashman, set up by Esposito and Orr.

Attention all softball and soccer team managers. Games originally scheduled for Monday, April 6, will be played on Friday, April 17. Those scheduled for Tuesday, April 7, on Friday, April 24. The fields and times will remain the same as originally scheduled.

IM Softball, Soccer Start

By BRONA SIMON

Did you ever hear, "for it's one . . . two . . . two strikes you're out," or "ball Th-Ree, take your base"?

How about a six man soccer team?

You'll see these and other changes as another season of intramural softball and soccer begins this week on the new fields in front of Boyden.

The popularity and action of modified slow pitch softball is well known on campus. 146 teams, the highest ever, have been organized this year. In order to complete competition within the 22 leagues through round robin and position play, 20 games will be played every Tuesday and Thursday, and subsequently 36 a day during Daylight Savings.

Among the 44 Residence Hall, 74 Independent, nine Graduate-Faculty, and 19 Fraternity teams, there is no favorite.

"Personnel changovers make it difficult to have repeat champions," said intramural director Ted Schmitt. "Softball is such an uncertain game. It's hard to predict who'll win."

Schmitt recalled the winner of last year's series, the Hamlin Pied Pipers.

"They didn't look as strong as some of the other teams, but worked hard in extra practices.

UConn Entertains Redmen In Conference Opener

UMass Opens Defense of YC Title
Lefty Colabello Gets Starting Nod

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

After an 11-day layoff, Redmen baseball swings back into action this afternoon with a 3 p.m. encounter with Connecticut at Storrs.

The Huskies own a 3-6 record; they were 2-6 on their southern trip and Tuesday they beat Wesleyan, 5-0. UConn and UMass usually rank as pre-season favorites when Yankee Confrence baseball is mentioned and early-season games, such as this one, loom as indicators of the shape of things to come.

Over the last five year, the Redmen and the Huskies have won two league titles a piece, in 1966 they shared the crown with a third team, Maine. Last year, of course, was all UMass' as the Redmen clipped UConn in the opener, 4-1, and sailed on to a 9-1 Conference mark. UConn's 6-4 slate placed it in a second-slot tie, with Maine.

The Huskies, coached by Larry Panciera, are a sophomore-dominated team, having started five of the lower classmen against Wesleyan. They were shortstop Harry Trohalis, first baseman Neil Barbatini, second baseman Tom Stanulis, third baseman Keith Kraham and right fielder John Slosar.

Three of the starters in that game were seniors, left fielder Charlie Perrotti, catcher Ron Romaniello and pitcher Pete Carlin. Only one starter was a junior, center fielder Howard Gura.

Other players of repute for the Huskies include outfielders Tom

Talbot and Dom Carlucci, both sophs, and Jeff Filmer, a senior, sophomore Ray Brickley and senior Chuck Periotti, both catchers.

On the mound for UConn will be a name to keep in mind for the next couple of years; he is sophomore Jim Jachym. He is a 6'2-170 pound lefthander who picked up the outstanding player award in the Miami Baseball Tournament, a six-game affair which the Huskies took part in on March 23-28.

Redman baseball coach Dick Bergquist speaks with respect about today's opponent. He points out that the UConn pitching will be improved with the addition of Jachym and that the Huskie defense has also seen improvement.

Bergquist will call on a lefthander of his own to handle the UMass pitching chores in the person of senior Lou Colabello. Colabello recorded an excellent 3-0 mark on the Redmen's recent 5-2 southern swing. He has hurled 14 innings so far this young spring has allowed on e earned run for an ERA of 0.64.

Starting behind the plate will be senior Chuck Newell. Senior Ray Ellerbrook gets the nod at first and junior Joe Gugliotta will open at short. Junior captain Tom Semino will either be at second base or third, while the fourth infield slot is still up in the air. Best bets are that right-handed hitting soph Hosea Kelley will be the second baseman, against the lefty Jachym.

The Redman outfield will have Brian Martin, a sophomore, in

Regarding the 11 days off from game action, Bergquist commented "I'm concerned about it. I wish we had had some competition during this time." He was quick to indicate, though, that the Redmen faced a similar situation last year.

At that time, UMass was coming off a poor southern trip, winning only two tilts, while dropping five. To make things worse, star shortstop Joe DiSarcina was inflicted with an injured wrist, causing him to miss the UConn opener. However, despite such situations, the Redmen came through with that important 4-1 verdict.

This afternoon's contest had been scheduled to be played in UMass' ballpark but the construction of new dugouts on that field has not quite been completed, forcing the switch to Storrs. On April 28, UMass will host the Huskies at home to complete the trading of dates.

Asked if the above exchange of sites will have any psychological effect on the team, Bergquist answered, "I really don't feel so. I just think we're ready to play baseball."

And so, with the 11-day layoff about to be terminated and with thoughts of building upon their present 5-2 record, the Redmen reflect the words of their coach when he says, "We're eager to get going."

READY TO GO – Varsity baseball Coach Dick Bergquist seems prepared to lead his Redmen in defense of their Yankee Conference title against UConn today.

Tennis Team Opens Season at Home Against Holy Cross

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

UMass tennis swings into action this afternoon with a 3 p.m. encounter with Holy Cross. The Cross is ranked as one of the top two teams in New England and will be a tough opponent to open the season against. The Crusaders are led by John Hughes and John Mayot, two excellent singles players.

Last year the Redmen broke a 22 match winning streak of Holy Cross at Worcester, and with a winning streak of their own on the line in this first match, this shapes up as an outstanding season opener.

Playing number one singles this afternoon for UMass will be Gus Peron, who will be appearing in his first varsity tennis match for the Redmen. Peron is from Costa Rica and has been a tournament winner there.

Alan Goldberg has the number two singles assignment against the Crusaders. Goldberg lost in the finals of the Yankee Conference Tennis Championships last spring and will be counted on for a good season again this spring.

Mike Katz is this year's tennis captain and gives Coach Steve Kosakowski a very strong third man for this match. Katz was the YC champ in his flight last spring and Kosakowski is counting on him to continue his fine play throughout the schedule.

Steve Gervickas and Jonathan Bloom have been fighting it out for the fourth spot since practice started and their positions will not be known until this afternoon. Both players are steady performers and give the Redmen strength in positions four and five.

The remaining singles position is being vied for by Jim Bornheim, Ferdinand Wilder, Warren Kahn, and Chris Coffin. By this afternoon this position will be filled.

After the six singles matches come three doubles matches. Goldberg and Bloom are the number one doubles team for the Redmen with Katz and Cervickas holding down the number two position for this afternoon. The third doubles team will not be decided on until this afternoon. This third position will be a problem for UMass throughout the season as it will be an unexperienced position.

As for the remainder of the season, Coach Kosakowski is pointing towards a third straight Yankee Conference title for his team. He points out that this year's team is very bit as good as last year's but also that the YC is a much better balanced league then it was last year. Rhode Island is the favorite as it was the last two seasons, but the Redmen have beat them when it has counted and Kosakowski is hoping that history will repeat itself once again.

The team has practiced hard this spring, with practice during vacation and double sessions on the weekends. The players have shown plenty of desire and as the coach put it, "if desire means winning, we've got it."

IN THE SWING OF THINGS – Tennis Captain Mike Katz looks in mid-season form as he readys himself for today's important season opener today against Holy Cross.

Frosh Tie UConn, 6-6

By DAN KAMAL
Staff Reporter

Facing UConn, the hitting of first baseman Dan Esposito and the pitching of Tom White paced the UMass freshmen baseball team yesterday in a game that was called on account of darkness with the score tied 6-6 after nine innings.

Esposito drove in three runs with a single and a triple. His triple was a tremendous shot to left center in the seventh inning with two out and Redmen runners on first and third. It gave the frosh a 5-3 lead after seven innings.

White was lifted in the bottom of the sixth for a pinch hitter with UMass leading 3-0 at the time. Coach Tommy Williams figured the southpaw had gone long enough at such an early stage in the season.

Tony Blanco replaced White on the mound in the seventh and was touched for six runs in the two innings he worked. Although he gave up only three hits in the two innings, Blanco was victimized by his own wildness and two costly errors.

The six runs off Blanco enabled UConn to pull into a 6-5 lead going into the last of the ninth, but UMass catcher Bill Ryan drew a walk with one out and moved to second on a wild pitch.

Williams then removed Ryan for a pinch runner, Ed Kurr, who scored the tying run on a single by right fielder Fred Kielbasa.

April 10-11: The Mood

Ripe for Change

By RICHARD C. HANSON

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst seems to be faced with the prospect of changing itself.

"April 10-11" is symbolic of the need to define the roles this University must accept. The ability to approach change within the University is a skill the people within the administration, faculty, and student body are beginning to develop. Success for "April 10-11" will probably never be declared. Change and the ability to change are long and tedious processes.

After interviewing those people who might be considered pivotal in bringing about a better future for the University, several things became evident. Perhaps the most striking was the gap between what we seek to create at the University and how this searching within the University is viewed by those not involved with the campus.

The academic changes which are needed can take many directions. Some people favor the establishment of more and better residential colleges. Others see solutions within the realm of reordering faculty priorities. There is a definite need for further curriculum requirement changes.

Many students, faculty, and administrators are pessimistic about the number of students and faculty who will extend the weekend, because classes are cancelled. Possibly the number of participants in the April 10-11 discussions is not important. Quality, not quantity of change is needed at UMass.

There are many factions within the University which clash. There are extremely conservative departments and there are extremely innovative departments. We have a student body as diverse as any institution of higher education in the nation.

The recognition in a meaningful manner of this diversification could be the most important step taken by this University. Change at the University will have to come from the grass roots.

"Learn-In" Provides Discussion Of General University Problems

The first step was taken in the efforts of the April 10-11 Committee to bring the University Community together.

At a "Learn-In" held in the Student Union Ballroom last evening, approximately 200 people met to discuss the general problems of the University, and to receive information on the planned events. All attending were encouraged to air grievances and to make proposals for additional discussion sessions to be included in the week-end schedule.

Al Kamil, a coordinator of this event, stressed that this entire program is aimed at more than an exposure of issues but they will be a definite means for faculty, students and administration to actually formulate specific proposals for changes at every level of the University. Kamil explained that this movement had grown from a small faculty conference in February into the current involvement of the entire university community.

Chancelor Oswald Tippo was present at the meeting, explaining that he was there mainly to listen to the students' comments and proposals. He also gave a brief account of the issues with which he will be concerned as a participant in a discussion tomorrow, especially with the need for a coordinating device to remove the chaos rising out of the existence of three separate senates on campus.

Student comments at the 'Learn-In', centered on specific issues which they felt needed attention or desired changes. As each topic was presented, the student concerned was referred to a specific discussion that is scheduled to deal with it.

Generally, the students' proposals were concerned with improving the overall quality of education at the University. Their suggestions included the improvement of the classroom situation itself, changes in course requirements and offerings, and involvement of the entire community in the educational process.

The Co-ordinators of the Learn-In clarified the point that it will be possible for students to participate in more than one discussion section. Since the meetings will run continuously from 9:30 to 5:00, participants will be able to drop in on as many as are of interes to them.

New topics added last night at the "Learn-In" were:

1. THE AMERICAN INDIAN AND UMASS - Pierpont TV Room, 9:30 a.m. Movie "The Exiles", Grayson Lounge 7:30 p.m.

2. SEX EDUCATION ON CAMPUS Berkshire Commons Clubroom, Dr. Gage, 1:00

Administration Opinion: A Series of Interviews

Oswald Tippo

"It was not too much to say that American Universities across the nation are in a crisis situation."

Chancellor Oswald Tippo is not prone to cancelling classes for any occasion; moratoriums or snow storms. The decision on his part to make exception to his policy of "no cancel" represents a very grave commitment on his part to the seriousness of the state of education

Chancellor Tippo travelled extensively throughout the nation during the spring vacation. His evaluation of what was occuring at places like Berkeley, U. of C. at Santa Barbara, U. of Oregon, U. of Buffalo, and Cornell played a great part in his decision to support April 10-11 as a time for seeking new direction within the University.

The immediate causes for concern at UMass, according to Tippo, are reflected in events such as the Mills House Incident and the Humphrey Disruption. Changes are needed within the University structure, curriculum, and life style. Tippo cautioned that "we can't move too fast."

A growing concern of the Chancellor is the public image of the University.

The Chancellor, at recent legislative committee meetings, told of spending much time just answering questions about the "gory things" which individual legislatures alleged were taking place on the campus. Apparently, many parents have impressions of the University as being some kind of den of iniquity. Legislatures hear stories of immoral happenings at the University and respond with proposals for repressive measures for the campus.

Tippo named the major problems facing the University right now as "providing an environment for education" and "money."

The Chancellor predicted that the Trustees will not be willing to approve many new things at this time.

J. Allen

"The whole problem of teaching is towards bring ing students into the learning process."

Associate Provost Jeremiah Allen speaks of these times as a "period of profound change." The basic differences between the changing "life-styles" of the younger and older generation are both "quantitatively and qualitatively different," said Allen.

Allen called for "more alternatives to the educational process." He sees a "new breed" of younger teachers who are more interested in stimulating education then giving knowledge.

Allen thinks that April 10-11 is "worth doing." But he emphasizes that "it would be naive to think it will solve the problems faced by the University."

Dwight Allen

"The University is now saying, We want to listen to students."

Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Education, is optimistic about the University of Massachusetts. He sees a Chancellor "working hard to make this a unique place." He feels that the "opportunity" for people to bring about a better university is now "there, if you want it."

Allen, during the time he has been at the University, has converted the School of Education into one of the more unique in the country. When asked what he thought was the basic problem within the University of Massachusetts, he responded, "The University does not take into account the sophistication of the student or the complexity of the social problems."

"The University must be a diverse society?" Allen approaches the April 10-11 activities with this in mind. He feels that if only "10%" of the people on campus participate it "will be a dramatic success." The main thing, argues Allen is a "dedication by the University to say we are willing to consider alternatives."

"Historically," says Allen, "the University tells us what to do. Allen does not place the responsibility for changing the University on the Administration. He emphasizes that the pressures on administrators are "treacherous." "Administrators feel dumped on" in matters which should be the concern of individual faculty members and students.

Randolph Bromery

Dr. Bromery stepped into the newly created position of Asst. to the Chancellor on Student Affairs as part of a general movement towards the establishment of positions designed to take the burden of recognizing and solving the diverse problems of the University from the Chancellor.

The volume of business passing through Bromery's office is tremendous. Now, responsibility for the administrative control of the University Police, Bromery is buckling down to the task of filling his still largely undefined role.

"No one knows what things should be changed to," says Bromery. He feels that the April 10-11 actions will have to "open up the campus" to more of the "input" that is behind decisions on the campus.

Bromery feels that there are two major "resources" on campus; the students and the faculty. He expressed the opinion that faculty "have the easiest job." "The faculty don't have to get involved beyond their classroom."

Speaking about future police roles within the University, Bromery expressed the hope that Students would "police themselves."

One of the basic problems within the University as seen by Dr. Bromery is the relationship of the University to the "Outside World." "We are political. That is a fact of life." He emphasized that the people at the University will have to "protect themselves."

"take an active, responsible part in your student government"

Measles Postpone Apollo 13 Launch

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla. (AP) - The exposure of Astronaut Thomas K. Mattingly II to German measles was confirmed Thursday, and the launch of the Apollo 13 moon voyage hung on the ability of a husky blond rookie to do a whirlwind job of plugging the gap.

John L. Swigert Jr. thrust from a backup astronaut's role into the prime crew with just two days to catch up, began a crash training program with James A. Lovell Jr. and Fred W. Haise Jr.

Medical experts at the National Institutes of Health in Bethesda, Md. tested the blood samples of another backup astronaut, Charles Duke, and reaffirmed an early diagnosis that he has German measles.

Duke, suffering from a rash, fever, and arthritic-like inflamation of his fingers and wrists, exposed both the prime and backup crewmen last week. Lovell, Haise and Swigert are immune to the disease, but Mattingly is not.

Based on these findings, doctors recommended that Mattingly not fly Saturday. The final decision on Mattingly will be made by NASA Administrator Thomas O. Paine, but officials said he undoubtedly would accept the recommendation.

The 38-year-old Swigert went through critical rehearsals with Lovell and Haise of lunar orbit activities and abort situations for the launch pad and near the moon. All require perfect, split-second teamwork.

The ultimate decision on whether to blast off as scheduled Saturday at 2:13 p.m. EST or postpone until the next favorable date, may 9, hinged on flight commander Lovell's judgement whether the last-minute replacement would affect the team's coordination.

Again the decision will be made by Paine, but Lovell's recommendation will have considerable weight.

Although Mattingly has not developed measles symptoms, the astronauts' physician, Dr. Charles A. Berry, said earlier that he had a "very, very good chance" of coming down with it.

And if he did, it would be as Apollo 13 was approaching the moon and Mattingly would be left alone in orbit while Haise explored the jagged uplands of the lunar surface.

Making the prime team in the time allowed to him would be a masterful achievement for Swigert. The original crew had practiced together more than two years, first as backup pilots for Apollo 11, the first moon-landing mission.

The added cost to taxpayers for postponing the $375-million Apollo 13 voyage was estimated by officials at $800,000 split between overtime pay and the maintenance of downrange recovery forces.

Nixon's Vietnam Report To Center on Troop Cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon next Thursday will make his fourth broadcast report to the nation on Vietnam, probably to signal further U.S. troop cuts and perhaps to talk about a new chief peace negotiator in Paris.

Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Thursday Nixon is asking for television and radio time at 9 p.m. EST April 16 to give an "update report" on the conflict. Ziegler said Nixon would talk 10 to 15 minutes.

There was speculation here that a fourth-phase troop withdrawal announcement might total about 50,000 men. The three previous withdrawals amounted to 115,000 troops.

According to well-founded reports, some military chiefs - particularly those closest to the war zone - have been recommending that fewer armed men be withdrawn from South Vietnam at a slower rate. The Joint Chiefs of Staff reportedly do not favor as cautious an approach as the field commanders.

One recent published report had it that the military wanted Nixon to order a six-month freeze on further withdrawals from South Vietnam. However, Pentagon sources insisted that no formal proposal along those lines has been submitted.

Ziegler was asked if Nixon were about to fill the long-vacant post of Chief U.S. negotiator at the Paris talks with representatives of North Vietnam, the Viet Cong and the Saigon government.

Marguerite has another para.

"There's nothing to give you today on that subject," he said. This is a phrase he has often used to indicate that an announcement of some kind is fairly imminent.

Nixon's Next Court Choice

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon dramatically announced Thursday he will nominate a conservative judge from outside the South as his next choice to be associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Nixon told newsmen he had "reluctantly concluded" that the Senate, "as presently constituted" would not confirm a judicial conservative "if they happen to come from the South."

The Chief Executive appeared at a hastily arranged session in the White House press center just a day after the Senate by a 51-45 vote rejected his nomination of G. Harrold Carswell of Tallahassee, Fla.

Sterilize Instead!

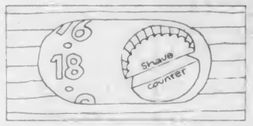
BOSTON (AP) - A noted popuation control advocate predicted Thursday the public would become disillusioned with present methods of birth control and turn to sterilization.

"I think we are going to see a growing disillusionment with current methods and a strong trend toward sterilization - both male and female - and public programs for sterilization," said Dr. Roy Hertz of New York, an associate director of The Population Council.

His remarks came during a discussion with newsmen after he delivered a paper on the future of contraceptive methods at a meeting of the American Association of Planned Parenthood Physicians.

Hertz said the dissatisfaction with present forms of contraception would stem from the various unknown factors related to many birth control methods. Studies have indicated that unpleasant side effects and possibly harmful side effects can be traced to oral contraceptives and internal devices.

Norelco can shave you closer than a blade, and count how many times it does it.



1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9,10,11,12,13,14,15,16,17,18 shaves. On a single charge.

The Norelco Rechargeable Tripleheader Shaver was made to do two things.

To shave you as close or closer than a stainless steel razor blade.

And to give you up to twice as many shaves per charge as any other rechargeable shaver.

Here's how it works.

The Rechargeable Tripleheader has 18 self-sharpening rotary blades, inside of 3 Microgroove™ shaving heads.

The heads actually float, to follow the curves of your face.

They go in where your face curves in, and out where your face curves out.

And because the blades are rotary, they shave your beard in every direction at once. (If you don't think that means anything, feel your face. Feel how your beard grows in different directions on different parts of your face?)

The Norelco Tripleheader also has a pop-up trimmer, so you can see exactly what you're trimming.

It has a Charge Indicator that lights up when it's charging.

It has a Shave Counter to count your shaves.

And it gives you nearly twice as many shaves per charge as any other rechargeable.

So if you're shaving with a blade, feel around your chin and neck and upper lip.

If it feels like you could use a closer shave, get yourself a Norelco Rechargeable.

And shave your whole face for a change.

Aggie Staff Evaluated In Computerized Project

To evaluate teaching in the College of Agriculture at UMass, the college staff has called on a specially qualified group of experts--the students.

"Since students are the teacher's primary audience they ought to be considered as a first source of information concerning the teacher's ability to teach," explained Ernest M. Buck, assistant dean of the college and director of the evaluation project.

The College of Agriculture Educational Policies Committee in cooperation with the student committees has completed a computerized teacher evaluation project involving some 90 courses with 2500 students. Results have been so good that the evaluation will not only be continued annually at the college, but it is also under study for possible use in all schools and colleges on campus.

"The primary purpose of the evaluation is to provide each instructor with feedback on his effectiveness as a teacher," Dr. Buck explained.

Participation by faculty was voluntary and distribution of results was controlled. Each participating faculty member received a computer printout with data on his own course and averages for other courese to provide a comparison basis. This printout was for his use alone and was not sent to administrators. The faculty member was encouraged to reveal and discuss his evaluation results with students, colleagues, and administrators, but was not required to do so.

A second series of printouts averaged all results for all courses, by department and overall, but omitted individual course evaluations. This information was sent to department heads and deans. Its purpose was to give an over-all picture of teaching effectiveness without identifying individual performance.

The project started with a 35-part questionnaire covering the instructor's grading system, examinations, lecture material, ability to communicate, and many other areas. Students filled out the questionnaires in class and handled their distribution. Answers were entered on punch cards automatically for computer processing. The student responses were kept anonymous and results were not released to participating instructors until final grades were recorded in the registrar's office.

Davis, Weinglass Are Greeted With Cheers of Supporters

by ROBERT NORTHSHIELD
Staff Reporter

(Ed. Note – Certain facts were erroneously reported in yesterday's COLLEGIAN account of the Davis, Weinglass lecture at Curry Hicks Cage. 1,000 people were reported to have been at the Cage when actually there were over 3,000. And, Mr. Davis was misquoted on several occasions, much of Mr. Weinglass' address was omitted as was the entire question and answer period. The DAILY COLLEGIAN regrets any embarassment or inconvenience the article may have caused.)

When Chicago 7 defendent Rennie Davis and Conspiracy lawyer Leonard Weinglass arrived at a packed Curry Hicks Cage Wednesday night, they were not met by marshmallows or confetti as an another Chicago, August 1968 principal Hubert Humphrey was. Rather they were met by the raised fists and standing ovations of sympathizers.

Davis and Weinglass did not have to face demonstrations; or protest. But after 100 odd days of Julius Hoffman, maybe they have faced enough for a while.

It was rather a carnival atmosphere that characterizes most movement events. These are members of the family, who are returning from the battle. And they were greeted with open arms.

Weinglass spoke first, and in an hour plus address given completely without notes (a feat remarkable even for a Civil Liberties Union lawyer) the shaggy haired counsel for the Chicago defendants spoke of the absurdities of the Hoffman court.

He related how before the Oct. 15 Moratorium Day, the defense requested an adjournmant for that day, presenting the political and religious support the day had received. This was denied. Weinglass told of pacifist defendant Dellinger's act of reading the names of war dead from both sides, from behind a table draped with a U. S. flag and a Viet Cong flag, before court convened Oct. 15.

The result was the flag's being ripped away by U. S. marshals and the media reporting that the defendants had draped the jury box with the enemy flag when actually the lawyer said, the jury was not in the room.

Weinglass also told of Hoffman's pathetic concern for a plaque in his honor at a hall at Northwestern University being ripped down, of Hoffman's now-famous denials of routine defense motions, of the trials and oppression perpetrated on Bobby Seale, of the history of the anti-riot law, and much more.

Weinglass spoke with the whimsical and detached air of a fireside chat. He related the past, a past trial that was stormy and humorously sad, a trial so wrought with absurdity and injustice that he did not really have to emphasize it with rhetoric. It was more than evident just by his presenting facts.

Therefore the contrast between the detachment and humor of Weinglass and the fire and brimstone of Davis was even more pronounced. It takes a damn good speaker to rouse a crowd that already has sat more than two hours in the scenery of the Cage, but Davis succeeded.

He told a rambling story of FBI pursuit of him during a Washington demonstration against Richard Nixon's inauguration. It was funny while being frightening. He related his joy at hearing news of the now-famous UMass Humphrey incident. He related some humor from the trial.

But Davis swiftly changed his tone. A lengthy part of his address was directed toward his visit to North Vietnam last fall. Davis told a stirring story of his making the acquaintance of a young Hanoi girl who had a machine gun strapped to her back.

Davis told her he was an American. Instead of reacting as if in the face of the enemy, she reacted as did the 400 people who gathered around the couple with curiosity and friendship. Davis made the pointed observation, "what would have been the reaction of 400 Americans to a North Vietnam youth in a part in Chicago? They'd beat him to death.

The co-founder of SDS then went into an extended and detailed analysis of the bombing done under the Nixon administration, stressing its genocidal effects on the Vietnamese population. He also, however, stressed his wonder at the resiliency of the Vietnamese and likened their attitude to the "distance runner who has run 20,000 kilometers and won't stop with only 20 left."

Davis concluded his prepared remarks with a call to take back a country that has been lost to dinosaurs, "close the University on April 15 and turn out in huge numbers at the trial of Bobby Seale in New Haven." He concluded a rousing speech with a rousing ending.

The inevitable question period usually just a mutal admiration society, surprised. There was one questioner who said that Davis, in his opinion, stank. He was met by boos. There was another who asked why Davis and Weinglass were allowed to speak but Hubert Humphrey wasn't. Davis' reply: "As I understand it, Humphrey gave up his right to speak because he didn't want to engage in debate. I personally welcome adversity from by audiences."

The Conspiracy has cometh to the Connecticut Valley and they had no worries of adversity.

R. Gluckstern

Robert Gluckstern, Acting Provost, characterized the April 10-11 action as an "exchange of ideas."

"What is needed is an administration open to the faculty and students. Not one to impose solutions...The major problem at the University today is that students are dissatisfied with the present education."

"We need more and varied ways of evaluating teaching performances and academic needs."

"I don't know what the alternatives are."

Gluckstern is fairly new to the provost's office. As most other administrators, he works very long hours on the many problems facing the University today. Primary in his arguments is the fact that the Administration cannot play the role of ultimate policy and decision maker.

Gluckstern approaches the major problem of the University's relationship to the rest of the state somewhat philosophically: "The University has always been subject to criticism from the outside." He views the role of the administration and Trustees as one of "interpreting and defending" the movements within the University.

Seymour Shapiro

"I, as a Biologist, believe that the inevitable process of change is made up of a series of small, continuous changes."

Seymour Shapiro, Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, is deeply committed to the improvement of education at the University. He feels that change is necessary and natural, but he cautions that changes have to be able to adopt the environment. "An organism which evolves too quickly will not be able to adapt to its environment and will die out."

In practical terms, Shapiro is working towards even more alterations of the core curriculum requirements, but realizes that changing too quickly may bring about harmful effects.

Dean Shapiro is waiting to see the effects of the changes made last semester. He does believe that the elimination of requirements is a "good idea."

"A student, when he comes to the University, has limited experience. Requirements make a student consider different subject areas," said Shapiro. "That is a real obligation for the University."

When questioned about alternatives to forcing students to take requirements, Shapiro admitted that the "University has to fill many roles" and that as High School courses in basic subjects improve, the need for requirements will decrease at the college level.

Recently the criticism of professors who are very involved with research has come to public attention. The idea that teachers who devote much time to research are not functioning effectively in their role as teacher evokes a quick response from Dean Shapiro. Shapiro cited surveys which showed that the teachers whom students consider mediocre or unqualified are not the people who are involved in research. Shapiro cautioned against drawing any conclusion, but added that there are a lot of teachers involved in research who make the lists of popular teachers.

Regarding the April 10-11 "Come Together" Shapiro expressed the hope that people can discover "how broadly they agree on what the problems of the University are and agree on a direction to solve them. We need to get more people involved who have not been individually involved in the past."

William Field

William Field, Dean of Students envisions the April 10-11 "Come Together" mostly as an opportunity to "open issues."

To make any broad statements about this type of activity is impossible. Dean Field, who has been in the middle of many of the most impossible situations that the University has had to face, recognizes the uncertainty of any attempt to motivate and engage large numbers of people in a common effort. He sees the effort, however, as a vehicle for "breaking down that frustration" which students often feel when attempting to bring about change.

Field emphasizes the need for "differentiation of roles" within the University. The recent appointment of Dr. R.W. Bromery as Asst. to the Chancellor on Student Affairs was a necessary and important step. In the past one of the main problems within the administration was the large amount of responsibility placed on a position such as the Provost, who was responsible for student and academic reports to the President.

Speaking about the direction of education at the University, Field mentioned that UMass had to fulfill many roles. "We can't become a Community College," said Field. The state institution at Amherst is the only state institution for PhD's. "It has to offer specialized and advanced programs."

Field views undergraduate education at the University as "important."

"The university has to broaden the opportunities for people," says Field.

Dean Field said that he would be "overjoyed" if 20% of the students on campus participated in Friday and Saturday activities.

Car Registration Fees Increase to 5 Dollars

In a meeting held last night, the Parking Authority presented proposals to the Student Senate Services Committee to raise the cost of registering a car on campus from the present fee of $1.00 to approximately $5.00.

Mr. Robert Ferriter, head of the authority, stated that it now operates at a considerable deficit; the income provides only 25% of the operating costs. Increased fees would alleviate the problem and also provide improvements in services and facilities, such as lighting, radio-equipped patrol cars to reduce vandalism, and general improvements to parking lots.

Also recommended by the Parking Authority was the financing of studies to determine the feasibility of such possible projects as a student run service station, additional above-ground garages, cross-walk bridges over North Pleasant Street and traffic lights.

The Senate Committee will make its recommendations to the Senate after further study. The only proposal passed was one which would increase the registration fee of commercial vendors such as Coke and Gordon Linen from $1.00 to $25.00.

The Draft: Always Was and Always Will Be?

(Ed. Note: The following is a semi-weekly column written special to the DAILY COLLEGIAN by the Valley Peace Center and the Committee to Repeal the Draft.)

One basic misconception about the draft which has tended to cloud the minds of most students is that there always has been a draft and there always will be a draft. A brief history of conscription in the U.S. will help explain this misconception.

Conscription is not peculiar to the U.S. Most countries have had some form of conscription at some time, although at present, at least twenty-two countries, including Great Britain, Canada, and Japan, have no conscription. Modern day military conscription began in France during the Revolution. It was continued after the Revolution as a tool for Napoleon's military adventures.

The draft was not used in the U.S. until the Civil War. It was not well received, nor was it very successful. For a mere $300., the more wealthy conscripts could hire someone to serve in their place. Draft riots, thought to be a recent phenomenon, were quite evident even during the Civil War. The New York City riots, perhaps the most famous, were quelled only after 10,000 troops were transferred from the battlefield to New York.

An additional concept of the draft, aside from that of defense, was created when the draft was reinstituted in 1917. "The selective conscription which the United States used in both world wars and subsequently is based on the assumption that in a society with advanced technology and complex economy men are needed not only for the armed forces, but also to keep the agricultural, industrial, educational, and economic life of the nation running. These men are not conscripted. Others whose role is deemed less essential to the ongoing social process are 'selected' for military training and duty."

This, of course, was the introduction of the channelling procedure which the military has found to be an extremely effective process. Conscription has never been easy to bring about with Congressional or public approval until recently. There was heavy debate against it even after WWI had been formally declared for the U.S.

"In my state," said Rep. John Nicholls of N. Carolina, "they have the feeling that a conscript is a slave. Would this not be a great government to go to Germany and free slaves with an army of slaves?" Senator Charles Thomas of Colorado said, "Opposition to compulsory military service is characteristic of every government fit to be called a democracy...Democracies abhor that principle of compulsory service, the exercise of which menaces and may destroy their liberties...We are now told that compulsory military service is democratic...that is a libel and a reproach upon the name of democracy. It is as repugnant to democracy as any despotic principle which can be conceived."

One example of the public reaction can be seen by the fact that over 50% of those called in the first draft in 1917 put in formal claims for exemption. This soundly conflicts with the view of President Wilson, "It (the draft) is in no sense a conscription of the unwilling; it is, rather, selection from a nation that has volunteered."

Congressman Carl Haydn made a perceptive point when he said, "Much as I dislike to believe it, yet I am convinced that most of the propaganda in favor of selective conscription is founded not so much upon a desire to win the war as it is to accustom the people to this method of raising armies and thereby to establish it as a permanent system in this country."

Voluntary recruitment reappeared in 1920. The U.S. military powers were successful in getting a draft law passed in 1940. Many thought that the presence of a draft was an important determining factor in U.S. involvement in WWII. The 1940 draft law was extended through 1947, renewed in different form in 1948, largely due to a campaign by the army and some business and other groups including the American Legion in support of peacetime universal military training. Extensions in 1950, 1951, 1955, 1959, 1963, and 1967 maintained substantially the 1948 peacetime conscription law.

Several studies of the draft have been made by Congress and the President during the last 5 years. Most have suggested reforms which could make the draft more equitable, the most notable recent reform being the random selection system. However, not until this year was a study made concerning the repeal of the draft in favor of voluntarism.

Although the Gates Commission report, favoring repeal and the institution of a volunteer armed force is considered by many to be revolutionary, radical, unAmerican, undemocratic, unethical, and dangerous, it is imperative that one understand the history of the draft to realize that a voluntary armed force has existed much longer in the U.S. than has conscription - only about 33 of our 182 years of U.S. history have had conscription!

One should also consider that "coincidentally" almost every war or conflict which the U.S. has been involved in recently occurred not when there was a volunteer armed force, not when the decision to become involved in a conflict was left up to the people, but when a CONSCRIPT armed force was ready and waiting for the President to command its participation in a military adventure.

Parade Permit Granted

A parade permit has been granted by the town of Amherst for an antiwar march between the University stadium and Amherst Common. The parade will start at Sunset and Fearing Street, passing east along Fearing to North Pleasant Street, and then south to the Common. Several thousand marchers are expected to take part in the demonstration, march, and a 4 p.m. rally on the Common.

Canvassers will cover the Amherst area after a 9:30 a.m. meeting in the Student Union ballroom. The parade will leave the stadium at 1:30 and proceed through the town until about 3:30. Demonstrators are expected to disperse following the rally on the Common.

Elections will be held Thursday, April 16th, in the Student Union Ballroom.
It should be noted that the responsibility for the expenditure of $4200 of the Commuter's money this year will be in the hands of this Council.

A good cry cleanses the soul

After all is shed and done, your soul may be saved . . . but your contacts need help. They need Lensine. Lensine is the one contact lens solution for complete contact care . . . preparing, cleansing, and soaking.
There was a time when you needed two or more different lens solutions to properly prepare and maintain your contacts. No more. Lensine, from The Murine Company, makes caring for contact lenses as convenient as wearing them.
Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the eye, reducing tearful irritation. Why? Because Lensine is a compatible, "isotonic" solution, very much like your eye's natural fluids.
Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses. And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.
It has been demonstrated the improper storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and in some cases can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.
Lensine . . . the solution for complete contact lens care. Made by the Murine Company, Inc.

Life Is Precious

Your life is precious. My life is precious. Every single man alive wants to live, if he doesn't, it's through the fault and neglect of those who want to - like you and me.

Where are YOU? Maybe you don't know where you're going yet, and sometimes perhaps you'd like it all to stop for a while and let you rest (me too). But it doesn't and life goes on - but does yours?

Have you ever paused a minute and thought about life - the one gift we all have, the stuff from which all our dreams and disappointments come? Have you looked at a stranger walking by you and thought - man, he is just as alive as I am and has he experienced the highest ups and the lowest downs just as I have?

But where does this all end? Where does one draw the line and say - no more for him, it's me now?

What happens to a man when he takes the responsibility of blowing the life out of another human being - through thought or action. What happens when a man can look at a silent dead body and forget that it/he can never move, speak, laugh, or touch you ever again - can never experience the height of ecstasy once more? To me, he becomes less than a man or a victim of the genocide policy of America. Can this man feel better, more secure that at least he himself still exists?

When a man cannot stand in awe at the miracle of another man's life, humanity is past.

Now thousands of young American soldiers are being asked to forsake a great deal of their humanity so that we can continue our on-going policy of racism, genocide, exploitation, and insensitivity. Doesn't it ever make you uncomfortable to think about it? But do you then continue to accept it with no struggle? You too then are losing part of your humanity - remember, "you better not compromise yourself, it's all you got." (Janis Joplin)

So, I want to live, I want you to live also - please come out and support life, come out April 15.

Community Action Foundation

Here at the University of Assachusetts I am not so impressed with academic refinement as I am with concrete programs which will better the lives of oppressed peoples. Philosophical discussion and plastic rhetoric intellectualizin' must always be sacrificed for the sake of satisfying a concrete need, and THIS is the objective of Community Action Foundation. For those of us worried about the university's role in the development of an honest learning experience, it is obvious that the structure, academic considerations and freedoms be in direct conjunction with and total reflections of the drives, needs, and future objectives of the community.

It happens that there are some inventive people releasing this "sun of reality" today, April 10 in the Student Union Ballroom. Their (and our) sole objective must be the development of a "communiversity". The politics of education and community sociology can, in no wise, be separated for they are directly responsible and answerable to one another. In the eyes of the Community Action Foundation "schools are physically and spiritually isolated from the surrounding human community where real events occur. Professional educators . . . learning . . . and people who actually do controversial things on the outside are almost never invited to enter the sanctuary." Consequently, a program has been formulated (CAF) and they are presenting a program entitled "university and the community" which is being presented this afternoon (Friday, April 10) in the Student Union Ballroom. The purpose is discussion and action upon proposals in the field of drop-out education and its alternatives (street academies), and most important "communiversity" involvement.

Speaking will be representatives from CAF, Action Lab, Springfield community organizations, and the theory and practice of street academies will be presented.

The very reason for which the Community Action Foundation exists is because, at this point the university has been unable to relate to and serve the community. Not only has it ignored the apparent shift towards community involvement but it has shamefully debilitated the ever-expanding spiritual, physical, and mental growth of each and every student in attendance.

Just look around you!

Are all of your brothers and sisters happy and are they growing?

Please come and help us clarify and unite the family of MAN!

Equality: The Issue

This university is in dire need of a fundamental reordering of the decision-making process. Viewed in proper perspective - that is, against the background of deliberations of the University governance Commission - the current self-examination assumes a special significance. That Commission is (perhaps too rapidly) about the formulation of a radically different means of campus governance. Since the Board recently evinced willingness to allow "internal" (definition unclear) policies to be decided on campus, Dr. Tippo has been feverishly at work to bring about a means for the campus to speak with a unified voice: two of the three Senates agreed with his call for a Commission, which is at this point prepared to report for some kind of single senate, with separate student, faculty, and graduate caucuses, each of which would have certain areas reserved to their sole jurisdiction. The nature of Commission negotiations ought to be apparent. Apparent too - and entirely predictable - has been the attempt of faculty representatives to preserve exclusive faculty jurisdiction over hiring, rehiring, promotion and tenure policies, and faculty domination of curriculum matters. The faculty almost universally (UMA being an exception) dominate institutional decision-making, particularly in these areas. But the faculty here cling to an illusion of power, an illusion whose existence is due to the remarkable, continuing, and deep-seated faculty disposition to absolute extra-classroom inactivity.

Perhaps it becomes clear why the current discussions are so crucial: students must pursuade faculty, who must pursuade themselves, each other, and their Senate, that the time has come long since for the admission of students to a position of full equality in all decisions which affect this institution and therefore their lives. For only in this way can students feel a commitment to campus decisions, can this institution consequently be secure against serious disruption. The decisions of a legislative body constituted upon this principle will properly be regarded as the will of the community. Anything less will invite that feeling of impotence, which leads to frustration which leads eventually to violent disruption. The administration has evinced its sympathy; but a Senate of such a nature is likely to run aground in the Faculty Senate. But those students on the Commission, as well as the Student Senate, should be prepared to carry such a quest for equality to the Board if necessary, in the firm belief that nothing less will insure that sense of participatory democracy which will create that loyalty to institution and decision upon which all violent disruption dissipates.

This is the message that needs desparately to be communicated to the campus faculty, today, tomorrow, and beyond tomorrow.

My-Lai and Seals

When reports of the My-Lai massacre were first made public, President Nixon called the incident obnoxious and "unAmerican." He was right when he said that it was obnoxious, but he wasn't right when he said that it was "unAmerican."

First of all, being an American connotes being a human being, and that incident was just an example of the cruelty which we display every day. Before Upton Sinclair showed us what the meat-packing industry was like, animals were butchered alive in Chicago; and even in today's advanced society we allow animals to be butchered senselessly. Take for example what has been happening to baby seals in Canada. The seals are beaten to death. They are then skinned and left outside with their flesh rotting. Why beat them to death you say? For the very simple reason that while beating them to death injures the seal internally, it does no damage to the skin. This great sport pays one dollar a skin.

When a society cannot or will not realize that every living thing which can feel pain must be killed humanely, if at all, then how can what happened at My-Lai be surprising. Captain Madonna was charged by the army for 11? deaths, but was it really his fault, or has he just reacted to our kill-crazed society? You know, the one where little boys get guns to play cowboys and Indians, or war; where violence is the highlight of the evening at hockey matches; where violence on television is so plentiful that one can watch numerous deaths on the screen every night without any feeling of horror, shock or outrage.

But is our government's policy any more inhumane than that of Madonna. We boast of having MIRV, use napalm and other "killer" weapons in Vietnam, yet we prosecute Madonna. Our lords in Washington scoff at those who say they will not fight and kill in Vietnam because the Vietnamese are right, or they do not believe in killing. The pacifists then cite the Nuremburg decision (presided over by a U.S. judge) that a person is responsible under international law for what he does, and under that same law, he may refuse to commit the action if he finds it wrong. These people either flee our nation, go to jail as a convict, you know one who is socially sick and bad for our society, or are sent to Vietnam as medics. Medics go to the front lines unarmed, and have the highest morality rate in Vietnam.

Let's say you are in that position and are drafted. The armed forces then makes their type of man (a killer) out of you. You are then shipped off to fun and games in Vietnam where you become frustrated and lonely. One day you see all your buddies killing people at My-Lai; you don't want to be different or they might kill you, so you kill people too. Big fun.

This column does not believe that Madonna shouldn't be frustrated. What he and his men did, if they did do it, was a barbaric act which shames humanity. But is as bad as the little they had for Vietnamese. Every action is caused, why not stop the causes and do some real good?

Tax Time Hints

By ART BUCHWALD

WASHINGTON - In order to pay for wage increases for postal employees, President Nixon has asked that the cost of a first-class letter be increased 66-2/3%, a second-class piece of mail 12%, parcel post 15% and bulk or junk mail only 5%.

This was a big victory for the "Citizens to Protect Junk Mail," a nonprofit organization set up to see that everybody in this country got his fair share of junk mail. The president of the CPJM was elated when he read President Nixon's message.

"This is a triumph for the little fellow," he said.

"How's that?" I asked.

"The American citizen will now be assured that no matter what happens to the rest of his correspondence, his junk mail will get through."

"Then you're not disturbed by junk mail going up 5%?"

"We're not happy with it, of course, but we can live with it. We may have to adjust our prices accordingly, but the President has shown great courage in keeping junk mail within range of ALL the people."

"Why do you think he gave you the break?"

"Because he knows that the cornerstone of the free enterprise system is junk mail. When a mother writes to her son, or a girl writes to her boyfriend, it produces no commerce for the country.

"First-class letters are luxuries and if people want to keep writing to each other for pleasure, they should pay for it."

"But," I said, "some people in this country would prefer to get a letter from somebody they knew, before they got one which was addressed, 'RESIDENT'."

"That's ridiculous. Everyone knows the joy that junk mail brings to the American home. Show me a man who would rather receive a letter from his mother than a catalogue from a gift company, and I'll show you a very unhealthy mother-son relationship."

"Would you advocate doing away with all first-class mail as a method of lightening the burden of the post office?"

"Not at the moment. There are times when someone must communicate with another person by first-class mail, and there probably are certain people in the country who enjoy hearing from their friends and loved ones. So we're not arbitrary about it. All we say is that as long as first-class mail doesn't interfere with the delivery of junk mail, then it should be kept as an added postal service."

"But," I said, "if the time comes when the government must choose, then first-class mail has to go?"

"Correct. You see, at one time this nation could afford the luxury of having every kind of mail. But as the public has demanded more junk mail, the post office has been forced to slow down on other classes of mail. Ten years ago, the American citizen was content to receive three pounds of junk mail a year. But today he is demanding 10 pounds per year, and he gets very upset if he doesn't get his quota."

"Would you say your citizens group was instrumental in defending the sanctity of junk mail?" I asked him.

"I wouldn't say that," he said modestly. "President Nixon knew what he was doing when he cut most of the financial burden on first-class mail. Had he raised the rates more than 5% on junk mail, you would have had citizens all over the country storming the post offices. You don't mess around with people's junk mail during an election year."

Shirking

To the editor:

I am writing in rebuttal to the letter from David Veale (Pres., Class of 1970) and Walter Mullin (Chairman, 1970 Draft Series Committee) that appeared in the Collegian's April 8 (Wednesday) issue.

First, I would like to make perfectly clear the fact that I, in the capacity of Monday Issue Editor, am not in the least influenced by General Hersey or Jimmy Hoffa, as the authors of the above mentioned letter insinuated.

Their insinuation arose from the appearance of a front-page headline in Monday's issue concerning a possible Chicago teamsters strike. They felt, and I emphatically agree, there were stores in that issue more deserving of front page notice.

Therefore, in explanation of this "gross oversight", as Mr. Veale and Mr. Mullin so aptly referred to my mistake, I would like to say that the error I made was merely done in rushing to get a newspaper out on schedule (in this case, sometime past midnight Sunday evening).

Instead of the Collegian "shirking its duty to the students of this campus", gentlemen, I find that those same students are ignoring their responsibility to become involved in functions of campus life, be it the campus newspaper or any other activity. The infinitesimal Sunday night staff would not have to rush to get a paper done if this were not the case; they would have enough help and time to correct possible mistakes.

Constantly criticizing the caliber of this newspaper does not improve it in any way. Putting work into it does. My sympathies are with Mr. Veale and Mr. Mullin, both seniors, for not finding this out sooner. As Collegian staffers for the past four years, they may have had some rewarding experiences.

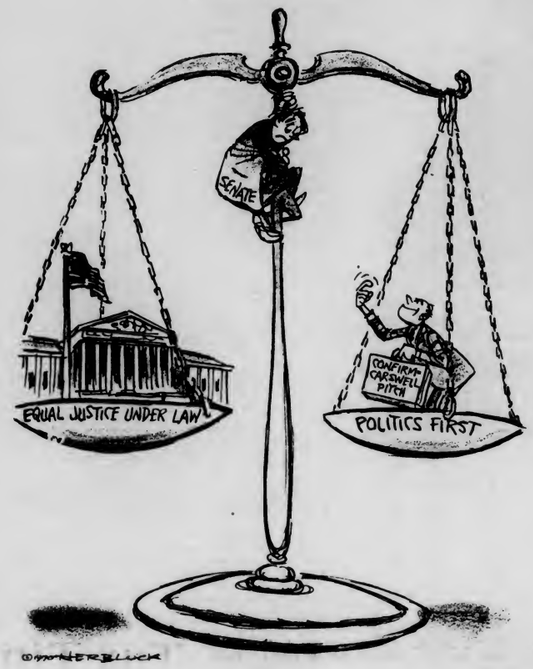
Balanced Court



Unstagnate

To the editor:

What are the present state of affairs at UMass? We find ourselves spending most of our energy worrying about such personnel interest as; our bad food, our next date, and our dope. Sometimes we do a little cheating, and so we occasionally find that honesty doesn't pay off. It also seems that we can't get ourselves together. We could never deal with an issue under the banner of "the student body of UMass". Because we are pretty much content with things, we find ourselves in a stagnant situation. At the present we are a worthless mass, we could be a strong force in motivating new change.

The programs on April 10 & 11 are a step in the right direction of "unstagnating" the campus. But the campus of issue itself is one of the past. We now find the students at U. of Wisconsin going into the cities, Madison Wis., is their first, and cleaning up the slums, organizing rat control programs etc. We find the "student body" of U. of Michigan cleaning up the area's environment. The idea of purifying the university was dropped a few years back. We realized that it didn't matter who was going to be our president and that problems outside our campus were really the areas that required our immediate help. If we can get together on April 10 & 11 and solve the problems here, then hopefully we'll be able to get outside and do things that really need our energies. I think we are still too immature and April 10 will probably just be a day off for most of us. If we fail April 10 & 11, we will be two long steps behind our other universities who are now concerned with April 15.

Rights of One Man

(Reprinted from the Greenfield Recorder)

He weighs perhaps 145 pounds but he looks even more slim in the red tee-shirt and blue jeans as he sweeps the floor at the Amherst cafeteria.

His brown hair has grown full and long and he has chopped it off all around just below his ears. He looks, from the rear, like a walking cocoanut tree - that tall trunk of a torso topped by that drooping outcrop.

He wears the tiniest pair of Ben Franklin glasses you've ever seen. Except that there really is glass in them, the glasses look like somebody took a piece of wire and wound it into two loops with an arc for a nose bridge. His blue eyes peer through the glasses and the lids don't blink often.

His cheeks, his chin and his upper neck are covered with a couple days' growth of whiskers.

But for all of that, Tommy is attractive because he has a smile that makes you forget that crummy shirt and the forgotten thatch and the scruffed shoes. That smile is like a bright beam.

"You joke to keep from crying," he says, shaking his head. "And that's the truth."

Tommy is a senior in college. He is older than most of the others. That's because his class graduated three years ago. First, as an undergraduate, he dropped out of a few classes because he was too busy being the editor of the school's newspaper. Then, because he had to get away, he joined the Peace Corps and served on a Pacific Island for two years.

Now he is back in Amherst and working to straighten out his academic record and get his degree this semester. He sweeps the floor and washes dishes at this student hangout to make money.

If you didn't know Tom, you could take him for any sort of man. You would never, even if you stared at him for a month, guess that he told a judge last week that he will not wear a motorcycle helmet because "it's against my religion."

Tom means it. He tolerates with humor that smile of his the good-natured jabs of his friends. But he is serious about it. Serious enough that he appealed this week a lower court finding of guilty. Massachusetts law requires motorcyclists to wear helmets. Tom claims that he feels closer to his spiritual self when he rides and lets the wind through his hair.

Pointing at a tormenter's tummy, Tom said: "You look about 10 pounds overweight. How could you like it if you were fined so much for each pound."

You didn't have to draw a picture for the fatty. He knows that doctors say excess weight contributes to heart strain. Heart strain can be hazardous to your health, as the saying goes.

So can not wearing a helmet while wheeling the highways on a bike, say the state's law people.

"Do you," asked somebody in a group around the shaggy-haired Tom the other night, "do you believe that you should be allowed to risk killing yourself?"

"Certainly," said Tom. "I'm prepared to take the risk."

Tommy had done his homework. He knew about a court decision that required school children to take vaccination inoculations. The court ruled that failure to do so could jeopardize the health of others who might catch smallpox. Tom didn't use that for an analogy. "The odds aren't very high," he smiled, those bright blue eyes staring at his audience, "that an unhelmeted motorcyclist will be a greater danger as a missile than one wearing a helmet."

A pre-law major looked at him admiringly. "You'd make a good lawyer." But Tom expects to be an English teacher. He likes the language and he especially enjoys teaching it as a foreign subject.

When it comes to civil liberties, he is for the dignity of man. What else could one expect from a young man who, as the college newspaper editor, presided at his own impeachment. He found himself guilty, resigned and rejoined the staff as a reporter.

That's the kind of guy Tommy is. Somehow, when he tells about it, wearing a helmet while riding a motorcycle doesn't seem terribly important.

Journalism?

To the editor:

We wish to express our public disgust at the quality of news coverage which Richard Lane, "Senior" Reporter, offered in reporting the speeches of Rennie Davis and Leonard Weinglass in the Cage on Wednesday night. We submit that Mr. Lane's article exhibits an unwarranted distortion of fact, censorship by omission, misrepresentation, and general lack of even the smallest iota of the objectivity required of any competent journalist.

In the first place, Mr. Lane implies that the entire evening consisted of a call to violent revolution by Davis. Each quotation from Rennie Davis' speech is taken completely out of its context; the prime example of this being the lead-in sentence: "Chicago 7 Conspiracy defendant Rennie Davis last night called for a generation that takes this country back by any means necessary!" Mr. Lane did not bother to mention that Davis a few moments later explicitly stated that he did NOT advocate violent revolution at this time. It is interesting to note that Mr. Lane devoted four paragraphs to develop a fraudulent stereotype of the wild-eyed revolutionary, but only one paragraph to the general body of the speech - which concerned continual Government harassment of Davis, the war in Vietnam, and a detailed account of Davis' trips to North Vietnam in 1967 and 1969.

Mr. Lane also chose to omit references to substantial, significant portions of Davis' speech, to wit; lengthy narratives of episodes describing incredible repeated harassment of Davis by U.S. Government lackeys are lucid, meticulous descriptions of the United States genocidal bombing of the Panhandle region of North Vietnam.

In addition, the emminent journalist betrayed his penchant for sensationalism by allocating 7-1/2 column inches of space for his distortions about Davis and only 5 for Weinglass, who spoke twice as long as his client. Again, Mr. Lane sought to ignore a tremendous quantity of factual information which Weinglass imparted to the audience about the Chicago trial; the absurd manner in which the juries were chosen; the gagging and shackling of Bobby Seale; Judge Hoffman's unprecedented use of his contempt powers against the defendants and their attorneys; and innumerable examples of Judge Hoffman's unquestionable prejudice against the defendants.

A few more obvious flukes in Mr. Lane's attempt at journalism: In reference to President Nixon, Davis did NOT say: "We must recognize that dinosaurs stink and die". He did say dinosaurs "become extinct and die". Judge Hoffman's first name is "Julius" and not "Julian". Dave Dellinger's last name is not "Dillinger", and so on.

The final query which we raise concerns the size of the audience which heard Davis and Weinglass speak. The photograph beneath Mr. Lane's rather puerile attempt at newspaper writing carries the caption: "The crowd of about 1000 had to wait about a half hour before Weinglass and Davis arrived at the Cage". Any semi-conscious cretin could attest that the Cage was filled to capacity which is something in the range of 4000 persons.

But perhaps the real culprit is not Mr. Lane, but the editors of the Daily Collegian, whose naivity in expecting objective reporting of such an event by a member of the local ROTC contingent is completely beyond our comprehension. We demand that the Collegian exert all possible efforts to prevent the possible recurrence of a debacle of this magnitude.

"To Dr. Martin Luther King," is among the drawings by Tecla, the widely known East Harlem artist, on display April 13 to April 16 in Colonial Lounge.

TECLA Exhibition Dedicated to Poor

From April 13th to April 16th, TECLA, the noted artist from Harlem will be visiting the University of Massachusetts to exhibit a collection of her works, including painting, charcoal drawings, and sculpture, dedicated to the struggle of poor people in America.

In addition to being an intense, deeply emotional artist, TECLA is a political artist. She believes that "today especially, in order to live as an artist, a Human Being, one must be concerned with People...for they possess a sense of Reality and a Soul, a Soul neither still nor silent -- in need of Life, in strife for Freedom, Justice, Truth and Beauty -- to change Society. The root of True Art, the world over, from African sculpture to Michaelangelo, Rembrandt, Goya, Van Gogh, was born in living experiences -- in communication with others, the People on the Street."

TECLA lived and painted on Monhegan Island, Maine; in Mexican villages with Indian people; among fishermen on beaches of Malaga, Spain; and in a mining village of Ystradgynlaid, South Wales. She is presently living and teaching in East Harlem, painting, drawing, and sculpting life around her and exhibiting her works in the streets, market places, and neighborhood gatherings. Inspired by the works of poets and actors, TECLA has created drawings and paintings relating to THE THREE-PENNY OPERA by Bertolt Brecht; AT THIS HOUR a play by Jewell Gresham based on the life and thoughts of Henry David Thoreau; and MEDEA IN AFRICA, performed by the East River Players.

TECLA has studied at the National Academy of Design, the Cincinnati Art Academy, Otis Art Institute in Los Angeles, and the Art Students League in New York. Her exhibitions have been shown at the Brooklyn Museum; Howard University; Butler Institute of American Art, Youngstown, Ohio; Bates College; Karamu House Gallery, Cleveland, Ohio; Western Maryland College; in the Museum of Bowdoin College; Beth-Yam, Israel; also in galleries in New York City and London.

TECLA's exhibit, sponsored by the Committee on Poverty, will be displayed in the Student Union lobby corridors and in the Colonial Lounge. On Wednesday evening, April 15th, the artist will host a poetry reading, accompanied by folk singing and dancing, in the Colonial Lounge. Anyone who wishes to read poetry or perform in another artistic capacity is requested to contact Paula Layfield, Dept. of English, 545-2575, by 5 p.m. Tuesday.

NJG Presented This Weekend

A talented University of Massachusetts junior, Naomi J. Berkowitz, has written, produced, and will direct a new play, "NJG," to be presented by University students on April 10-12 in the Student Union's Commonwealth Room.

"NJG," which stands for Nice Jewish Girl, will be performed in the round, utilizing simple sets. The play is a humorous and compassionate portrayal of student life. The main action takes place in a campus dormitory and in a lower middle class home. According to Miss Berkowitz, the intimacy of theatre in the round helps to achieve the effect of having the audience become the main character in the play.

The play is being sponsored by the Student Union Program Council, and the group performing and producing "NJG" has no formal affiliation with a University department. In addition to the regular schedule of performances, (Friday and Saturday nights at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoon at 2 p.m.) is a special dress rehearsal on Thursday, April 9 at 8 p.m. to which the public is invited.

All performances of the play are open to the public without charge, but reservations must be made in advance at the Student Union Box Office (545-2006).

Oxford, UMass to Debate Crowning of President

Oxford University (England) is sending two members of its debate team to compete against University of Massachusetts debaters on Monday, April 13 at 8:15 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. The debate is on the proposition RESOLVED: THAT THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SHOULD BE CROWNED. Oxford assumes the affirmative; Massachusetts assumes the negative. The public is invited and there is no admission charge.

For the past three years, debaters from Great Britain have appeared on our campus. Each debate shows the stark contrast between the flippant style of the British and the more serious style of American debaters. Presumably this year's debate will be no exception.

Oxford is sending two very highly respected members of their debate team. Kevin John Packenham completed his secondary education at Ampleforth College in York and received a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in Economics from Oxford in 1969. Besides debating, his other activities include founding and editing "Cover" magazine, participating in dramatic productions, making documentary television films, and being active in the Labour Club. He has also done some hot-air ballooning and photography work. His father, Lord Longford, is a prominent Labour Party Peer serving in the House of Lords. Mr. Packenham hopes to pursue a career as a development economist.

ERIC PARSLOE

The other Oxford debater is Eric Parsloe. He is a modern history and economics major who has spent nearly nine years in the British Army as a member of the Royal Engineers. Receiving his army discharge in 1962, he spent four years working in printing and engineering. During those four years he also served as a Labour Party Agent and as an elected member of the Andover Borough Council. He has experience in public speaking both as a Councillor and Agent, and has spoken in debates at Labour Party Annual Conferences. He has reached the quarterfinals in the Observer Mace, Britain's a nnual debate tournament.

Russell Johnson, Peace Secretary for the N.E. office of the American Friends Service Comm. will discuss his research visit to Cuba, made in Nov. 1969. Louis Necker, a Latin American history graduate student at UMass will also participate in the program. He was in Cuba in January 1969.

OUTLOOK hosts will then talk with Christopher S. Riley about an invention of his that may revolutionize the learning process of speed reading. The invention will be demonstrated on the air. Listeners can participate in the discussion by calling in collect at 545-0100. OUTLOOK is presented at 9 p.m. on 88.5 FM.

Anti-Aircraft to Demonstrate Against Defense Contractor

The Anti-Aircraft Conspiracy will demonstrate at Pratt and Whitney (a subsidiary of United Aircraft Corporarion) in East Hartford, Connecticut on Tuesday, April 14. The protest will coincide with the annual U.A.C. stockholders meeting.

People who own stock will voice the five demands of the Conspiracy. On the outside from 10:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m., U.A.C. workers, students and citizens will protest U.A.C.'s celebration of death. The five demands the people are calling for are:

1. an end to U.A. war production;
2. conversion to life-supporting production;
3. improved treatment of U.A. workers;
4. no lay-offs over the period of conversion;
5. an end to the U.A. pollution of the environment.

U.A.C. is the fifth largest defense contractor in the nation with $997,000,000 in Department of Defense contracts for fiscal year 1969-1970. Through its many divisions and subsidiaries U.A.C. produces napalm, fire bombs, Minuteman Missiles, almost all of the helicopters used by the Army, Navy, and Air Force, engines for the new Air Force F-15 and the Navy F-14B, and does work on the Sidewinder Missile, the Sparrow Missile, the Phoenix Missile, and Advanced Manned Strategic Aircraft.

In a letter sent to Mr. William P. Gwinn, chairman and Chief Executive Officer of U.A., the Conspiracy said, "We hold you and the other directors of United Aircraft to be the real WAR CRIMINALS in Vietnam and Laos and we hold you to be responsible for the deaths of over 40,000 of OUR fellow American young people in Vietnam and for the policy of genocide in Southeast Asia."

Many brothers and sisters are going to Hartford on April 14th, to join the Anti-Aircraft Conspiracy to protest U.A.C.'s celebration of Death. After the protest, the people will have a Festival of Life to counteract the death machine. Jerry Rubin and others will speak at a rally from 2 p.m. to 8 p.m. in Bushnell Park, Hartford.

If you wish more information on the Conspiracy, have a car and would drive some people from Amherst, need a ride, call Mark at 545-0648 1-4 p.m., M-F or 1-367-2072, Sat., Sun., or evenings and leave your name and number.

CEQ's Next: Trash Walk

The Coalition For Environmental Quality will sponsor an environment walk from Amherst to Northampton on April 25. The purpose of the walk will be to point out the deterioration which is occurring every day in the Connecticut Valley. An ox driven cart will be used to collect trash which has accumulated along Rt. 9 and when the cart is filled, it will be put on display in Northampton.

Brief stops will be made to depict some of the more outstanding examples of environmental decay such as the pollution of the Connecticut River, billboards, etc.

Interested individuals are asked to attend a meeting Sunday evening April 11 at 7:30 in the Student Union. If you cannot make this meeting but would like to help please call C.E.Q. at 50618 or 50619.

Also any groups wishing to contribute projects to the Environment Fair on the Amherst Town Common on April 18th should reserve space as soon as possible.

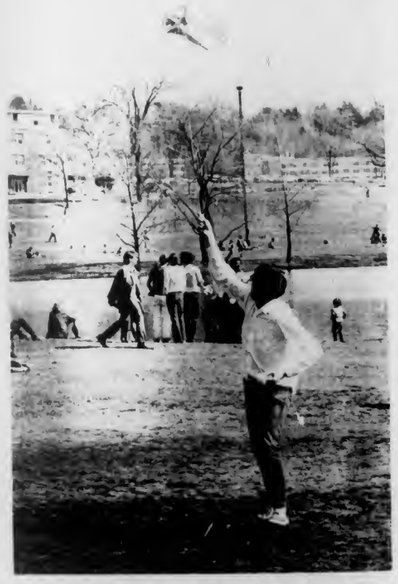
Go Fly A Kite!



Now that spring may finally be here, UMass kiters are taking their kites out of mothballs and heading for the campus pond. (MDC photo by Bob Mangiaratti)

Now that Spring is here, the next time somebody says, "Oh, go fly a kite," go.

Kite-flying is especially popular on the UMass campus. Perhaps it is a kind of ritual to invoke Spring. It may even be a publicity stunt for a certain sorority whose badge is the kite.

The kite is not such a new invention. The flat kite has been used in China for more than 2000 years. The ancient Chinese flew kites above their houses to drive away evil spirits. From that practice has come Kite's Day, a great Chinese holiday, which is celebrated on the ninth day of the ninth month.

Kite-flying is an important part of the Boys' Festival held on May 5 in Japan. During the festival, a carp kite is flown for every boy in the household. The fish is the Japanese symbol for courage.

In the East, kite-flying is significant to the culture, and sometimes borders on ceremony. In the Western hemisphere it has had considerable practical and scientific application.

As early as the Battle of Hastings in 1066, kites were used as signals in war. Kites were first employed to aid science in 1749 when two Scotsmen attached a thermomenter to a kite to record temperatures above the earth's surface. Three years later, Ben Franklin conducted his famous experiment with electricity by means of a kite and a key.

Among the first improvements on the kite was the invention of the tail-less kite by American William A. Eddy. The box kite was invented about 1893 by Lawrence Hargrave of Australia and became of importance to weather bureaus. By 1920, balloons and airplanes, because of their greater efficiency, began to replace kites for meteorological observations. With the development of rockets and satellites, kites have become obsolete for this type of scientific investigation.

Many American communities hold kite tournaments for children. Prizes are awarded for the most artistic kites, or the best-made or those which fly highest.

Although U.S. and European kite-flying is generally confined to children, some adults, particularly in England, make a hobby of it. Children enjoy flying kites because, like any toy, it's fun. But what sparks an adult's interest in kites? A familiar sight is the father who, in helping his little boy to fly his kite, insists on first testing it himself while his son cries, "Daddy, let me fly it!"

One UMass coed explained why she enjoyed flying a kite. "It fascinates me," she said, "I wish I were up there diving and looping too."

Whatever your motivation, whether nostalgia or to ward off evil spirits, kite flying can be a rewarding experience. On the next warm day when the breeze is right, go fly a kite and see for yourself.

You're never too young to start. This young kite enthusiast is shown holding one string and nearly tripping over another. (MDC photo by Al McArdle)

Infirmary Announces Visiting Limitations

The Health Services encourages patients to have visitors, expecially in the case of prolonged confinement to the Infirmary. Often, it is helpful for visitors to bring personal articles, books, classnotes - or just themselves for a visit.

There are some problems, however, which make it necessary to establish guides for visiting. A large proportion of students who are admitted have an infectious illness which may be transmitted to others. When a patient has been admitted, at least partly to limit the spread of an illness, it makes little sense to have visitors coming and going.

In addition, because of the construction of the inpatient area, the Services are limited to five-bed rooms. If each of the patients were to have two or three visitors simultaneously, this could lead to having as many as 20 people in one room. A large group tends often to be high-spirited and to forget the needs of some, perhaps few, patients who are more seriously ill and who need more rest or a quieter environment. Furthermore, because of the five-bed rooms, it is difficult to assure patients of necessary privacy with unlimited visiting.

Lastly, the average duration of admission is only about three days, and the mean somewhat less, so for most patients the limitation of visiting is only brief.

Visiting hours are:
Weekdays: one visitor per patient
6:30 - 8:00 p.m.
Saturdays and Sundays:
3:15-4:30 p.m. and 6:30-8:00 p.m.

To reach students who are inpatients, the public telephone number is 256-6804.

Blacks Meet to Discuss Technological Programs

It has been recognized that black students of technology have few alternatives to either going to work in white business and industries or teaching in the established school systems. Certainly these students constitute a vast pool of resource from which can be developed a means for creating alternatives to these situations.

For these reasons all black students and faculty involved in technological programs on campus are asked to meet for the following purpose:

A. To determine methods for increasing black enrollment in technological programs and to insure successful completion of such programs.

B. Explore ideas to establish means of self-determination, e.g., starting black enterprises as a means of establishing an economic base from which a self-sufficient black community can evolve.

The meeting will be held on Friday, April 10, 1970 at 2:00 p.m. in Mills House.

If you are interested but cannot attend contact:

Versatile Frosh Trackmen Lack Depth

By KEN LITTMAN
Staff Reporter

This year's freshman track team is "potentially as good as any in New England" according to freshman Coach Gideon Ariel. Most of the members of the team will participate in two or more events because of a lack of depth. Varsity Coach Kenneth O'Brian who is in charge of running events, feels that the team is "thin but versatile" and says that "the prime objective this year is to find each member's best two events for the varsity next year."

The javelin, with Pete Natti, "the best all-around athlete on the team", and Gil Sylvia, is one of the strong points of the team. Another strong point is the high jump, with Bill Heckler, who has jumped a phenomenal 6 feet 6 inches, and Bob Landry who has jumped 6 feet 2 inches. The mile and two mile are dominated by cross-country stars Tom Jasmin, Rick Barry, and Tom Swain, which will make distance running another strong event. Phil Riley and Pete Crisci will also run in the mile and two mile.

The sprints will have Bob Raucci and Dennis Busa in the 100, Mark Robinson and Busa in the 220, and Steve Levine, Sterling Orr, and Robinson in the team's strongest sprint event, the 440. Running the half mile are Allan Johnson, Mike Levins, and Jerry Schoen. The 440 relay will have Raucci, Busa, Robinson and Landry or Bill Clark. Clark, Landry and Bob Barry will run the 120 high hurdles and 440 intermediate hurdles, a grueling event. In the long jump and triple jump there are Phil Witt, Johnson, Robinson and Landry.

Bob Hoy, Barney Schneider and Natti will throw the shotput while the discus will be thrown by Jim Queeny, Jim Barr and Natti. Natti is also entered in the hammer throw.

Yanks Down Sox, 4-3, On Murcer's Home Run

NEW YORK (AP) - Bobby Murcer cracked a three-run homer in the sixth inning and reliever Jack Aker put down a Boston threat in the seventh, helping the New York Yankees to a 4-3 triumph over the Red Sox Thursday.

Murcer slammed his first homer of the year, a wicked line drive into the right field stands 375 feet away, in the sixth following a single by Thurmon Munson and a walk to Roy White.

The blast, off starter and loser Ray Culp, gave the Yankees their 4-3 edge after Boston had rocked starter and winner Fritz Peterson for three hits and three runs in the top of the inning.

Peterson, sailing along on a no-hitter through five innings - only Gerry Moses reached base on a third inning error by Danny Cater - suddenly lost in the sixth on run scoring singles by Reggie Smith and Carl Yastrzemski and a scoring infield out by Rico Petrocelli.

In the seventh the Red Sox opened with singles by Luis Alvarado and Moses, and Aker came on. The right-hander got pinch hitter Dick Schofield on a grounder, Mike Andrews on a line drive and struck out Smith. He blanked the Sox the rest of the way.

Rough Tough Frosh Lacross Team Opens Season Saturday vs. Brown

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

Opening its 1970 season this Saturday at 2 p.m. on the fields in front of Boyden against Brown University, the UMass freshman lacrosse squad will be one of the toughest freshman teams in New England.

Frosh coach Carl Schultheis, an attack man for last year's varsity lacrosse team, expects this first game of the season to be one of the highlights of the spring. Schultheis said, "Brown not only has an excellent team, but they have been practicing outside against their own varsity for a full nine weeks, while we have had very limited outside work due to the bad weather."

In spite of the lack of practice time the frosh have a good chance to improve on their 5-2 record of last year. Included in this year's team are four starters from Long Island, one of the nation's lacrosse breeding grounds.

Coach Schultheis plans a starting lineup of: goal, Rob Plasanse; defense, Ed Haugavik, Phil Day and Rick Swartwult; midfield, Tom Bock, Dwight Bloomquist and Rick Anderson; attack, Kevin Bush, Vin Sbana and Fred Michaels.

Alternating at midfield are: Joe Deriso, John McClosky, John Mullen and Craig Musselman.

Plasanse, according to coach Schultheis, is, "a hard worker and learning fast for a man who never played lacrosse before". He was a hockey goalie this winter.

On defense, Haugavik, from Long Island, is, "one of the finest freshman prospects in years". Day is a steady player with a fine stick. Swartwult is another newcomer to lacrosse, but his great size makes him a tough defenseman on any team.

Bock and Bloomquist, both from Long Island, are "two of the best midfielders on the team", and Schultheis expects them to lead a fast-moving game, along with Anderson, another hockey player.

Schultheis is pleased with his attack's progress in the short practice time. Bush, the fourth Long Islander, is the main scoring threat on the attack. Sbana, who plays the crease, has a good shot and has the, "knack to put the ball in the net." Michaels rounds out the trio up front. He has, "an excellent stick and is the team's feeder, the assist-man".

Commenting on starting the season against such a strong opponent, Schultheis said, "It will be a tough game for us, but it is a good game to start the season. It will prepare us for some of our later games with Harvard and Amherst, two teams that are always strong."

Varsity Football spring practice: All candidates are to report for practice, dressed and on the field at 4 p.m., April 13th. If any further questions, contact the football office in Boyden.

Redmen Fall to UConn In North Opener, 2-0

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

STORRS, Ct. - UMass began its northern baseball season on a bad note, getting shut out, 2-0, by Yankee Conference rival Connecticut and its sharp left-handed pitcher Jim Jachym here yesterday afternoon.

The Redmen will try to get back on the winning track when they entertain everybody's friend, Boston College, Saturday afternoon at 2 at new-look Varsity Field. Coach Dick Bergquist is expected to start righty flinger Don Anderson in this one.

UMass, whose overall record is now 5-3, was able to collect but five hits, three of them coming in a frustrating eighth inning that saw the visitor's only scoring threat go by the boards.

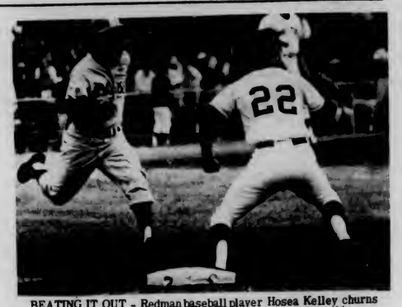
Jachym, only a sophomore, pitched a beautiful ballgame. Except for the eighth, he was in control of things all the way, striking out eight batsmen and walking only one. Not an overpowering hurler, Jachym relief on style and control to pull the Huskies through.

About that eighth frame again, UMass entered it trailing the home team, 2-0. The two UConn runs had come off of Redman starter Lou Colabello in the third. Although the junior southpaw wasn't keen, he and his sixth inning relief man, Jack Bernaedo, kept the Huskies in minimal check, paving the way for a late-inning rally.

And that inning looked like the eighth as second baseman Hosea Kelley led things off by digging out a single to short. The key to the outcome came a few moments later when Kelley, a real speedster, took a chance on a steal attempt of second only to be thrown out.

After a Chuck Newell pop-up was snatched in foul territory for the second out, right fielder Bob Willman wacked a double to center and the Redmen appeared back in business. With two outs, Mike Sawyer, pinch hitting for Bernardo, singled to left bringing Willman to third.

The rally, however, was abbreviated when the next hitter Jim Saracino, was struck out by Jachym. The latter guy had little trouble wrapping up the victory as he retired ninth-inning batters Ray Ellerbrook, Brian Martin and Steve Rogers on a strike out, a ground out and a fly out respectively.



BEATING IT OUT - Redman baseball player Hosea Kelley churns out an infield hit against UConn. The Redmen dropped this encounter to the Huskies, 2-0. Number 22 for UConn is Neil Garbatini. (MDC Photo by Garry Slickman.)

Though UConn produced minor scoring challenges in the first, fourth and sixth innings, it was in the third that Huskie bats did the damage.

Jachym led the frame off by walking to first. Shortstop Harry Trohalis followed by faking a bunt and slapping the ball sharply into left. Next man to the plate, first baseman Neil Garbatini, sacrificed the runners along to second and third.

What turned out to be the decisive run of the ballgame came seconds later when Charlie Perrotti, UConn outfielder, sacrifice-flied to deep rightfield, bringing Jachym across the plate and Trohalis into third. A single by the next man, Tom Stanulis, tallied Trohalis and closed out the scoring for the afternoon.

The feeling in the Redman camp after the affair was that, to take the Yan-Con title, one must expect a loss or two along the way and that this was just one of "those losses."

UMass Nine Encounters "Unknown" BC Tomorrow

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Facing an unknown quantity tomorrow in their northern home opener, the Redman baseball team awaits the invasion of the Eagles of Boston College at Varsity Field for a 2 p.m. contest. BC is coming off last spring's so-so 11-11 record.

And, the Eagles are not making any predictions for this year. Plagued by bad weather which has limited their outdoor activities, the lack of a southern tripand a virtual first year coach in Eddie Pellagrini, Boston College would be less than honest to do otherwise.

Pellagrini's is quite a human interest story. A twenty-year baseball veteran, nine in the big leagues and 11 as coach at Boston College, Pellagrini was stricken last year with tuberculosis and there was much doubt as to whether he would survive, let alone run a baseball team.

But he's back, cured, after a year of rest and the psychological boost of his return is one of the major factors in the Eagles' favor, although most of the personnel are new to him.

Nine lettermen return to a team with good hitting prospects but questionable pitching.

Soph Paul Costello (Milton) will get the nod at first base. Bill Porter (Swampscott), last year's leading hitter at .313, will be at second base. He's a senior.

Paul McKinnon (Arlington), also a senior, brings his .288 average to shortstop. Bob Murphy (Brookline) will go at third. Murphy hit .263 last spring.

This lineup features a preponderance of lefties, McLaughlin and Murphy being the only two righthanded batters.

It is a big guess as to who will pitch. Pellagrini really doesn't know what he has and could well go with two or three pitchers during the course of the game. Lefty Bill Barton, who pitched will in the Cape Cod League last summer and righty Bob Dukiet, who may be familiar to UMass fans as a basketball player, may eventually emerge as the mainstays of the BC mound corps.

Track Team Opens vs. NU, BU on Sat.

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Northeastern University and Boston University supply the U-Mass track team with its opening opponents for this outdoor season tomorrow at White Stadium in Boston's Franklin Park with the meet to get under way at 1 p.m.

Last year Northeastern came away the victor, with the Redmen second, followed by BU. The point spread between the Huskies and the Redmen was 26 points, and coach O'Brien believes that the margin will be much smaller this year with the chance of a victory lying in a few key events.

The biggest key to victory is the added depth of the field events over last year, most notably in the weight throws. O'Brien has been very pleased with the performances of the weightmen during spring practice and looks to them tomorrow to take a number of places in the shot put, hammer throw, and discus.

Eddie Arcaro, who is coming off a fine indoor season, will be competing in all three weight events, and should score in each one. Dave Baker and Jim Barr give Arcaro good support in the discus, as both have been throwing extremely well the past two weeks. Bruce Bursey is the other hammer thrower and has also been a strong addition to the weightmen. Arcaro will make a solo in the shot put.

The javelin is another field event with depth. Dana Robertson, Rocco Petitto and Mike Everett will be competing in this event tomorrow.

Emerson Hiller should score tomorrow in the pole vault. He placed in last year's meet and is out to better that performance.

Cal Carpenter and Ed Shaughnessey, who performed very well during the winter, will once again represent UMass in the high jump. Tomorrow they will renew their rivalry with John Winskowicz of BU. Dave Canterbury is the top Redman performer in both the long jump and the triple jump.

If the above-mentioned athletes can come through with the efforts they are capable of, then the meet could swing in favor of the Redmen.

The other key to victory lies in the mile and two-mile runs. Ron Wayne will be competing in both races and gives the Redmen two good shots at first places as he has been running extremely well this year. The key to these races are in the next three places as UMass must score in order to have a chance to pull the meet out. O'Brien is counting on Larry Paulson, and Don Dunsky to give Wayne support in the mile, and Paulson, and Bruce Blackburn to make runs at positions two, three or four in the two mile.

The sprinters are hampered by injuries for tomorrow's meet. Walter Mayo will be carrying the burden as Ron Harris is out with a hairline fracture of the hip and Dave Marble has not fully recovered from the hamstring injury he got during the N.E. indoor championships.

Old reliables Gerry Spellman and Jim Graves will be competing in their specialties, the 120 high hurdles and the 440 intermediate hurdles. Both runners can be counted on for top-notch performances.

The 440 will be run by senior co-captain Bill Donaldson, who performs at his best when the pressure is on and Jack Olson, who ran the 600-yard during the winter.

Dave Evans, the top N.E. performer in the 1000-yard run at the IC4A's, challenges Frank Kelly of NU, the N.E. 1000-yard champ in the half mile. Al Mangan, the freshman record holder, will be performing in his first varsity half mile. He ran the 600 indoors but this is his specialty. Arnie Morse will also be in this event tomorrow.

The final events in the meet are the 440 and mile relays. These two races will be closely contested and could play a role in the final team standings.

NU is the favorite on paper, but if the Redmen can perform as they are capable of, then there will be a few surprised faces at White Stadium tomorrow when the final results are in.

Optimistic Crew Club Rows Tomorrow

Opening its spring season against Wesleyan Saturday at 2 p.m. on the Connecticut River, the UMass crew club will show a bigger, stronger and potentially much faster unit than last year's sweeps who nailed down fourth place overall in the 36-team Dad Vail Rowing Conference.

Varsity coach Mike Faherty and frosh coach Larry Dean are hopeful of the club's chances as the season opens.

Last year Wesleyan upset the Redman varsity after UMass had badly beaten the Wes frosh and junior varsity. Spirits will be high. There will be three races Saturday starting at 2 p.m. with the varsity final at 3:51. All contests will finish at the boathouse near the Coolidge Bridge in Northampton.

Coach Faherty has finally set his boatings for the opener. The varsity eight features good size and three sophomores. Captain Charles Lenard will row bow in the boat. Soph Jack Appel will be in the tough stroke seat.

Faherty is undecided as to a coxswain. Either EdGiombetti or Bob Jayes, both sophs, will bet the nod. Sophomore Ted Kelley is the spare.

In taking an overall outlook of these two boats Faherty had this to say: "The boats are moving well; we're conditioned for the season. Both crews have been impressive in scrimmage work. I'm confident we will do well."

As for the freshmen, the crews will be the best ever assembled at UMass. Coach Dean has been driving the two crews over many miles and they seem ready.

Dean has continually shuffled his boats with more changes very likely as the season progresses. Competition has been keen for the available seats. Both boats will race against Wesleyan's first fresh men.

'3rd World' Liberation Discussed at Teach-in

The problems of the Third World were the subject of a two-day teach-in at the University this weekend. Guest speakers from many parts of the world came to discuss aspects of Third World liberation movements. Speakers focused their attention on the Arab-Israeli conflict, apartheid conditions in Southern Africa, and the problems of the national minorities in American.

The concept of the Third World arose from a 1954 conference of the non-aligned nations of Africa, Asia and Latin America at which they discussed common problems and common oppressors. Mike Thelwell of the Black Studies Department stressed that we need to have a firm idea of who Third World people are: they are the overwhelming majority of the people of the earth who share a non-white, non-western culture and a colonized experience. They do not control their resources for their own benefit and are the victims of an ongoing technological expansion that had its origin in the European industrial revolution.

The Third World thus includes the vast geographical regions of Africa, Asia and Latin America, and the Mississippi delta, Indian reservations and central city ghettoes within the United States. The problems of the Third World are directly attributable to the second rise of Europe, its expansion into and settlement of Africa and the New World in which the indigenous peoples were enslaved or destroyed. Today the rapidly reproducing populations of the Third World suffer active and debilitating oppression. The ability of these people to survive demands a radical transformation of world conditions. It demands a struggle of liberation that is, as Thelwell pointed out, the only hope for the survival of the human race.

Discussions on the Middle East sought to clarify the causes of oppression in this part of the Third world. Guest speakers included Miss Rita Freed of the Committee for Middle East Liberation, Jon Rothschild of the Socialist Alliance, Dr. Iqbal Ahmad of the Adlai Stevenson Institute, Dr. Elias Shoufani of the University of Maryland, Emanuel Dror, an activist in the Israeli Socialist Organization, and Dr. Naseer Aruri of Northeastern University. Specialists in other areas of the Third World also addressed themselves to the problems of Middle East liberation in an international context. Dr. Naseer Aruri described the network of reactionary alliances among Arab nations that works to arrest social change and contain the struggle for national liberation. The creation of the state of Israel and its existence today as an extended arm of imperialistic expansion was considered in depth. Miss Freed pointed out that Palestinian revolutionary action and the politization of the Arab populace has brought stiff resistance to American exploitation in the Middle East.

Ivanhoe Donaldson of the Black Studies Department called for a recommitment by those who know there is a struggle ahead. He discussed Israel as an "illegitimate facade" created by the same expansionistic, imperialistic and colonialist forces that operate in Southern Africa, Southeast Asia and Latin America. Israel represents a "negative factor in the Third World that seeks to prevent radical revolutionary struggles." It was created by Europeans where a sovereign state already existed just as the Republic of South africa was created and settled by white Europeans.

Actual conditions under apartheid were described by Christopher Ntete of South Africa. The imperialist as well as the racist nature of the South African government must be understood. The liberation of all of southern and southwestern Africa is threatened by the economic imperialist power of Ian Smith's government - power gained by cheap labor at home which enables the sale of cheap goods to other African countries. Despite the "arms embargo", the United States, France, Britain, and Japan, through NATO, supply the technological and military aids necessary to insure the survival of the most racist and oppressive regime in the world today.

Miguel Padilla, a former student of CCNY and a member of the Socialist Speakers Party pointed out the accomplishments of independent political action by Chicano groups in the American Southwest. Chicanos are descendants of indigenous people in the southwest whose land was taken from them unjustly by the treaty of Guadalupe-Hidalgo between Mexico and the United States. The informal nation-state of Aslan was destroyed and expansionistic American forces came into control of what is now New Mexico, Texas, Arizona and California.

Mr. Babu, a black organizer from New York, spoke of the Pan-African base for black ideology, and Bobby Williams from Washington, D.C. gave a Marxist-leninist analysis of the black struggle in America today. Amid ideological debate and confusion, Mike Thelwell provided an illuminating discussion of the international context of the black revolutionary struggle. He said there is a serious need to understand the nature of world revolution and warned of the dangers of over-reliance on a solely historical interpretation since "we are involved with a totally unprecedented situation in the history of mankind."

The European industrial revolution and the expansion of European technology and control over Africa, Asia and America virtually created the world situation as it exists today. The Marxist analysis was the first reaction in this situation but it is not so clearly applicable to colonized peoples in the non-western world. Franz Fanon, in his now classic THE WRETCHED OF THE EARTH updated the nature of anti-colonial struggles.

The nature of Third World oppression is forcing impossible numbers of people into ghettoes, barrios and campos. Thus, the overwhelming majority of people on this earth face mass annihilation as a result of historically expansionistic European technology. Mr. Thelwell pointed out that the same conditions existed at one other point in the history of man - during the industrial revolution in Europe. These huge concentrations of people were wiped out by the "natural" results of overpopulation: plagues, fires and starvation. The indigenous populations of Polynesia, Latin America and other Third World regions are being wiped out today - with and without the help of economic boycott and the armed technological might of a still expansionistic western world. The position of the United States in the world perspective must be understood. The United States is the only place where the technological resources exist to correct the deplorable conditions of humanity in the world today. If its policies are not changed, if the course of history is not arrested, mass destruction will ensue. Either destruction will spring from internal processes which perhaps irreversibly threaten the ecological viability of life on this planet, or destruction will proceed externally, from the wretched of the earth "who are not going to simply lie down and die without a struggle."

A BEGINNING, A FUTURE

April 10-11 Generates Action, Presents Proposals for Change

The two day effort to re-examine and redirect the University promoted by the April 10-11 Committee climaxed on Saturday morning with a plenary session in Mahar Auditorium. Members of the University community brought together proposals written from the Friday discussions and considered future plans for implementing the proposals.

The goals of April 10-11, supported by Chancellor Oswald Tippo, the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate as well as by petition signers from the community at large, emphasized the unification of the community to change the University in a variety of problem areas. Both senates and the Chancellor agreed to cancel classes for the two days. Acting Provost Robert Gluckstern sent letters to deans and department chairmen recommending released time for staff members who wished to participate in the sessions.

Friday's meeting included discussions of over 80 different topics of University concern in approximately 110 separate meetings held in the Southwest and East living areas. Some discussions generated spontaneous departmental meetings in Mathematics and Sociology. Members of most groups met Friday afternoon and Saturday morning to create concrete proposals resulting from their discussions.

Proposals for action included University-wide uniform teacher evaluation, continuation of summer orientation to faculty-student groups meeting in the fall session, rewriting of the University Selective Service phamplet, formation of a student-faculty Peace Patrol to deal with campus crises, placement of a student member on each department personnel committee, writing a handbook for transfer students, reform of the grading system to allow choice between grades and pass-no record evaluation, more student representation on the Fine Arts Council.

Some groups constructed resolutions which included establishing action oriented area committees to investigate physical environment in the living areas, attempting to integrate humanistic concerns into the teaching of math and science, changing the University's attitude toward support of the war and the military-industrial complex in such forms as prohibition of military-industrial recruiting and research, and adopting a definite policy towards freedom of speech.

Other groups suggested areas for task force investigation such as new forms of faculty behavior in the classroom, the future of the humanities at the University, student involvement in course planning, and formation of an All University Senate.

In the Saturday session, a committee headed by Professor John Brentlinger and composed of both faculty and students agreed to analyze and coordinate the body of approximately 60 proposals for consideration at a meeting of all interested community members on Tuesday, April 14 at 9:00 p.m. in Bartlett 207. This meeting will plan for a May 7 campus-wide referendum on action proposals and discuss appropriate methods of achieving implementation.

Univ. Senate Proposal Undecided

By JOHN J. DUBOIS
Senate Reporter

There was but one unassailable conclusion that emerged from some eight hours of wide-ranging dialogue between two faculty members of the University Governance commission and interested parties: with but seventeen days remaining before the scheduled deadline of May 1, the Commission is firmly agreed on only one matter: that no means short of a University Senate can respond adequately to the crying need for in-depth communication among the three campus segments.

The Commission has dismissed as inadequate, schemes of coordinating action among existing bodies by means of some sort of conference committee, reasoning that only in a joint body could there be the continuing process of in-depth educatin to each other's views that is essential to understanding.

A host of substantive decisions remain to be made: What will be the ratio of representation in the new Senate; will the administration be treated as a group entitled to representation, voting or non-voting, or simply as agents who exist to implement the will of the community?

Will questions of curriculum, and policies respecting the standards for hiring, rehiring, promotion, and tenure of faculty be placed in the hands of the faculty caucus of the new Senate, or be placed within the purview of the entire Senate?

Will the Senate be granted power to make decisions finally, or will it be treated, as the current senates, as simply an advisory body?

It would appear that the thought processes of the Commission are dominated by the fear of rejection by the faculty of a Senate which has within its purview areas of previously exclusive faculty prerogative. Thus the members of the Commission are addressing themselves to what they think is acceptable, rather than what they believe to be desirable.

A Personal Reaction
"Immensly Useful"

By JULES CHAMETZKY
Professor of English

All through Friday I was involved in a meeting with between fifty and sixty students and perhaps two or three other faculty members that was extremely interesting, very hard-working and productive - the Free Speech group. It was also "fun," i.e., life-affirming, as is any intensive and real learning experience. I know I learned a lot. We developed many fresh ideas, and some very sophisticated analyses -- but these are embodied in the proposals, critiques, recommendations we read to the April 11 mass meeting, and will presumably be available in a later COLLEGIAN.

I want to talk briefly about something else, somewhat theoretically. There was a discrepancy, I was told, between the good feeling of accomplishment of those faculty and students involved in groups and those whose task was to coordinate or otherwise deal with the over-all picture. Many of these people saw that there were far fewer students involved than had been hoped for -- so that a pessimistic, even despairing, sentiment was frequently voiced. Let me urge those brothers and sisters not to despair. I speak not only out of the heady feelings produced by a successful and productive group (there were many such), but also out of reflection upon the whole experience.

I firmly believe the whole experience was immensely useful, and may prove invaluable in the days, if not years, to come. Basically, we acquired a great store of experience -- in working together, in addressing certain tough questions, in developing real ideas. Perhaps we also learned that large segments of this population will NOT come together in the absence of a major crisis or university-threatening confrontation. All right. Further, I am not one of those who has had any illusion about such meetings forestalling or preventing crises: if they are to come they will come, I imagine. If and when such things do occur however, I think we are in a much better position now to mobilize hundreds and hundreds of people (and a large portfolio of ideas and thinking) who can be expected to react intelligently, constructively. If that is only part of what we accomplished (and began) on April 10-11, then it was a great deal, indeed, and we must count the occasion a real success.

Apollo 13 Speeds to Moon in Flawless Flight

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Three American astronauts sped passed the halfway point Sunday of their long voyage toward man's third landing on the moon. The Apollo 13 spacecraft worked flawlessly but substitute crewman John L. Swigert Jr. had two small problems.

In the last-minute rush to prepare for the voyage he had forgotten to bring along part of his flight plan and he had not filed a 1969 income tax return.

This report from Seigert drew laughter from crewmates James L. Lovell Jr. and Fred W. Haise Jr.

Officials on earth, meanwhile, released a list of lunar orbit science experiments which will be deleted from the flight plan. The deletions were ordered Friday by top space agency officials because Swigert is less familiar with the experiments than the prime crewman he replaced.

The deleted experiments dealt with landmark photography and photographs of space phenomena.

Swigert, who joined the crew after Thomas K. Mattingly II was exposed to measles, said he left a card at Cape Kennedy which listed these deletions. He said he probably left the list in the "suiting room," a part of the crew quarters astronauts use to dress for space.

Five of the 46 experiments planned from lunar orbit were canceled because of Swigert's unfamiliarity with the equipment, officials said.

Apollo 13 flashed past the halfway mark of its 246,000-mile journey to the moon at 5:33 p.m. EST. The spacecraft's speed will decline until Tuesday morning when the moon's gravity gains control and the spacecraft accelerates.

The crew awoke after a solid sleep and capsule communicator Joseph Kerwin read some news to the spacemen.

Kerwin noted that many Americans were spending Sunday working on their income tax returns and then asked, "Have you guys filed your income tax?"

"Hey, listen," said Swigert, more than 200,000 miles from the nearest mail box, "that's not funny. Things kinda happened real fast down there and I do need an extension."

Laughter drifted down from space.

"I didn't get mine filed," Swigert went on. "I'm really serious."

"We'll see what we can do, Jack," said Kerwin still joking. "We'll see if we can get an agent out there in the Pacific when you come back."

"Hey," said Swigert, "I'm serious about that."

"Okay," said Kerwin, "Tom Stafford chief astronaut said he'll try to get you an extension."

Later, Kerwin told Swigert: "The preliminary indications are that you can get a 60 day extension on your income tax if you are out of the country."

"That's good news," said Swigert. "I guess I qualify."

"Yeah," said Kerwin, "we were just looking at the map and you're south of Florida so you're not in the country now. But we wondered, how about your car tags? Have you taken care of those."

"Yeah, I did, matter of fact," he said. Then Swigert paused and added: "I THINK I DID." The income tax and Texas state car tag deadline is Wednesday, April 15, when Swigert will be in moon orbit and his space compantons wil be landing on the moon. Swigert won't be out of quarantine until May 8.

Mission Control also told the astronaut they would radio up the flight plan list he left at Cape Kennedy.

Lovell, Haise and Swigert started a 10-hour rest period at 3:13 a.m. EST Sunday, their first rest since they were awakened at 8:30 a.m. EST Saturday to prepare for launch.

BC Boycotts

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) - The Boston College undergraduate Congress has called a strike for Monday to protest a $500 tuition increase for incoming freshmen.

The school initially had announced a general $500 increase, raising the tuition to $2,500, but following several meetings with the student body, the Rev. W. Seavey Joyce, college president, said the increase would apply only to incoming freshmen.

Newspapers Join Ranks Of US Strikers

(ASSOCIATED PRESS) - Strikes against schools, trucking companies and a newspaper were in progress yesterday in various parts of the country. Teachers in Los Angeles, drivers in Chicago and newspapermen in New York City all were threatening to begin more walkouts Monday.

The "sick out" of air controllers also continued for a 19th day, with absenteeism centered in New York, Kansas City and Denver.

Teachers have been out since Thursday in Minneapolis, and since Friday in Butte, Mont., and Muskogee, Okla.

Wildcat trucker strikes continued in a number of cities.

Editorial employees struck the Boston Record American on Saturday night in a demand for higher pay.

The Los Angeles teachers' walkout would affect 653,000 pupils in the nation's second largest school system. The teachers have rejected a 5 per cent boost in salary which ranges now from $7,230 to $13,650 and have demanded other improvements.

The Chicago Teamsters locals have vowed to strike Monday against every firm in the city that has not signed new contracts boosting wages by $1.65 an hour over three years - 55 cents higher than a pending national trucking agreement.

The city's trucking industry countered with a lockout of 35,000 drivers, and called the union's demand inflationary.

Meantime, the 5,000 - member Milwaukee Teamsters local rejected the national pact and said it would seek the $1,65 Chicago formula.

The Chicago slowdown of truck traffic was expected to affect a wide area. In Houston, a Teamsters' spokesman said 1,200 drivers were laid off over the weekend because no freight was coming into the city.

There were 10,000 truck drivers on strike in Ohio, and another 10, 000 in Southern California.

The AFL-CIO American Newspaper Guild threatened to strike the Post on Monday in a demand for higher wages. The Times threatened to shut down because a printers' slowdown had kept it from printing much advertising and news.

A shutdown by the Times would be followed by a shut-down of the other papers - the Post, Daily News and Long Island Press.

Does it hurt to chill beer twice?

Not that you'd want to. Sometimes it just happens . . . like after a picnic, or when you bring home a couple of cold 6-paks and forget to put 'em in the refrigerator. Does rechilling goof up the taste or flatten the flavor?

Relax. You don't have to worry.

A really good beer like Budweiser is just as good when you chill it twice. We're mighty glad about that. We'd hate to think of all our effort going down the drain just because the temperature has its ups and downs.

You can understand why when you consider all the extra trouble and extra expense that go into brewing Buds. For instance, Budweiser is the only beer in America that's Beechwood Aged.

So . . . it's absolutely okay to chill beer twice.

Yes? No?

Enough said. (Of course, we have a lot more to say about Budweiser. But we'll keep it on ice for now.)

Budweiser is the King of Beers.

The demands are, the immediate discontinuance of R.O.T.C., R.O.T.C. money that is given to military students now, shall be converted into scholarships, and that there be a march on the R.O.T.C.

The University Mobilization Committee endorses Monday's Anti-R.O.T.C. meeting. The demands are supported by the University Social Action, and S.M.I.L.E.

The Little Girl

Some will say that it was a failure and leave it at that.

Others will go deeper and analyze why it was a failure. They will say that a blind man does not care what colors the sun rise are; his eyes have been destroyed by something he had no control over. They will say that people know from many attempts to gain some goof for our world, that all attempts are futile, and it wasn't worth another futile effort. They will say that most people don't have the vision.

But there are those who believe that April 10 and 11, 1970, were those kind of days that make all the others worth living through.

Serfdom, tithes, and nobility in France were legislated away in the short night of August 4, 1789--but it was too little, too late to stop the ensuing blood. If only half the proposals that emerged from those two days of April, 1970, University Self-Evaluation, are approved and implemented, the University of Massachusetts will become a world model, not of anti-intellectualism and alternate reigns of terror by Jocobins and Girondists, but of academicism, of harmonious faculty-student-administrator relationships, and of education itself.

And there was the little girl running on and off the Mahar Auditorium podium Saturday morning, oblivious to the audience and to the person she would become, growing up in her times.

A referendum on the proposals will be held on May 7,. I hope that one University, using the conservative tool of Peaceful change, recognizes its responsibility to that little girl.

Part Two

Moratorium

Today is April 13. Just two days away from Moratorium Day. Two days left in which to organize for what promises to be the broadest, most emphatic peace demonstration in history, not only in Amherst, but in this country as a whole. Two days left; what can you do to help?

First of all, you can believe in the moral righteousness of the idea--Peace, now. Sanity in an increasingly insane society (world?) demands the acceptance of this goal as a minimal affirmation of faith in your fellow human beings. Bring all of the troops home, now; Vietnam, (and "Greater Vietnam", in pentagon terminology) for the people of those lands; America for all Americans, now.

Secondly, as manifestation of your feelings, you can sign the campus petitions pledging to strike on April 15 in support of the war moratorium. Among others, the Student senate has thoroughly endorsed the idea and principle of a campus moratorium day for April. The signing of this pledge will be your public community statement placing, you, personally, in opposition to the United States Government's actions and policies in and around Southeast Asia. Sympathetic sentiment is fine, but it will take action, even if only on a relatively symbolic level, as a one-day strike is, to bring these sentiments into noticeable, significant consideration to those who ostensibly serve the people.

Finally, in the true spirit of the brotherhood which this nation espouses verbally but so slanders in actuation, you can attend the mass assembly and public address, to be held in the University stadium, at noon, Wednesday, and then march into Amherst common for a public rally, a vocal and rational lament of present conditions, and an earnest expression of the people's desire for a more human element to be welded into the American character.

All necessary permits and legal requisites for each of the day's activities, including those noted above, have been attained. There is no reason to fear anyone in a blue or khaki uniform. There is no need to fear internal disruption. Present plans call for upwards of 200 moratorium marshals. All that you really need to fear is your own static inertia.

In an age where death has become a way of life, where gneocide is alluded to in patriotic terms, where the most fiendish technological weaponry in history is being leveled at the innocent civilian population of a once-quiet Southeast Asian land, it seems to me altogether proper that this nation of people, who were born in the fires of the struggle for the true freedom of man, should now peacefully rise, and point an accusatory finger. Indeed.

I believe quite strongly that there is no defensible excuse for not speaking your mind. So please be vocal on Wednesday, April 15. What you stand to lose are a few class hours. I don't think that your professors will really mind, down inside. What you stand to gain is a great deal of self-awareness and self-respect.

"Peace on Earth, Goodwill towards Men." Gcd knows that is such a tired phrase. Perhaps a bit more public outrage and a bit less concern for number one will give it some real meaning. Meaning hopefully, mercifully, like an end to this sorry, sorry war.

As one individual exhausted by the weeks of planning and deadlines that went into creating April 10-11, I was glad to see the evening on Saturday. At last, some rest! But those two days are only the first step of acting on proposals, planning a referendum, and getting the University community together. April 10-11 was a solid beginning but only a beginning. Change requires many individuals to put themselves out to become exhausted both physically and mentally and no one can sit back and wait for someone else to act. Get on with it! There were lots of beautiful people at the sessions on Friday and Saturday and at the Hatch on Friday evening. But there are a lot more of you out there. This is your invitation--not quite engraved but very sincere. Come! Help change your community!

Dialogue is Basic

To the Editor:

I was a coordinator of one of the eighty or so groups which met on April 10, when regular classes were cancelled. The groups were supposed to meet at 9:30 a.m.; by 9:45, I was still the only one in the room; by 10:10 we were six and started talking. Students drifted in; some began to drift out about 11:30; most stayed until we adjourned at noon. The afternoon session was about the same, with perhaps 4 or five more students; I suppose a total of 50 students for the two sessions (not counting a few repeaters in the afternoon) would be about right. We came up with a statement of our position and two recommendations for action.

If this group was representative, then such quantitative information fed into a computer which knows that there are about 18,000 students in the University and about 8-10,000 who normally take classes on Friday, would not produce results likely to impress the legislature or those faculty members who questioned the justification for calling off classes for such a small group and nebulous cause. Yet, now that I have had a chance to reflect on what went on in our group, attended the "wrap up" session in Mahar on Saurday morning where we got brief reports on the recommendations of many different groups, and talked with others about their experiences Friday, I am convinced that April 10 should be considered one of the most important days in the history of this campus--important not only for the "tangible" results which were achieved (and are yet to be achieved as the recommendations are studied and acted upon), but for its symbolic value as well.

Although our society is dominated by statisitcs, and its value system is quantitatively oriented, it would be folly to try to evaluate the meaning and significance of last Friday in terms of "how many." On any given Friday at UMass, one never knows how many go to classes because they feel they have to in order to keep up their sums. One does know that last Friday, those who came wanted to--to listen, to speak. On any given Friday, one never knows how much input and output of education on this campus came from minds in action, producing, examining, creating ideas. There were no texts to be studied ahead of time; there were however, texts created. (An edited volume of the discussions and recommendations might make pretty interesting reading for sociologists, psychologists, architects, community planner, educators, across the country.) The important thing now is not "how many took part," but rather "what was said and recommended by those who did take part."

Last Friday, UMass demonstrated that it has the courage and elasticity to experiement in education. Symbolically, it said its students (and the people of Massachusetts) that the time has arrived when student - faculty - administration - trustee dialogue about the meaning and direction of education can no longer be considered peripheral, extracurricular, but central, basic. If you had suddenly appeared inside the campus last Friday, without knowing where you were, and were led around by a guide to taste 10 minutes here and 20 minutes there (as a few students did), and then you were asked where you were, you would probably have said that you were in one of the top, small, seminar-oriented colleges in the country (with all the bright students). You might have wanted to stay. But it's Monday again, big old sprawling state multiversity. Or is it quite the same? (A few students from one group KNOW TWO OF THEIR TRUSTEES, AND VICE VERSA!) Let us have one such day every semester when regular classes are cancelled (except that "cancelled" suggests shutting down, which was far from the case last Friday).

Seadag

To The Editor:

Since I am on leave this semester my contact with campus activities has been somewhat restricted. However, during a visit to the Student Union the other day, I picked up a copy of THE STUDENT MOBILIZER issued by the Committee to End the War in Vietnam. The theme of the issue is, "Counterinsurgency Research on Campus Exposed." I found my name listed on page 17 under my former affiliation at Harvard. Although I am in sympathy with the stop the-war objectives of the Mobilization, their loose journalistic style can only hinder the broad sort of unity they seek, by an arrogant verbal tarring of all who have been associated in any way with U.S. government activities in Southeast Asia. The organization to which I am listed as belonging and one in whose activities I participate is known as SEADAG, or Southeast Asia Development Advisory Group, an organization funded by the Agency for International Development but organized privately under the auspices of the Asia Society, a cultural group concerned with Asian affairs which among its other activities has art shows, publishes a scholarly journal and sponsors public lectures.

The editors of Mobilizer acknowledge that they do not have direct information on SEADAG but this does not prevent them from using a guilt-by-association innuendo to the effect that, "Other references indicate that our counterinsurgency specialists consider SEADAG as an organization sharing their goals, but one that has not been extremely effective." Several paragraphs later they have second thoughts and come up with a disclaimer, "We wish to emphasize the fact that for professors listed below...there is no concrete evidence that they are involved in counterinsurgency research." They end their statement by expressing the hope that, "those professors not involved in counter-insurgency research will join with us in exposing, criticizing and putting an end to the counterinsurgency work being done by their colleagues. "This last appeal has the familiar ring of thought control about it although it is expressed as a hope rather than a demand. I share the latter goal but abhor the implied process which subverts, ultimately, the ends sought. I also do not like the deliberately misleading reasoning that inserts pictures of the American military in Vietnam in an article on counterinsurgency in Thailand.

But saying these things does not minimize the disaster that our military involvement in all of southeast Asia has become. Despite my objections to the tone and accuracy of the statements in the Mobilizer, their desire for more information about the activities of SEADAG is a reasonable one. SEADAG is composed of a number of seminars concerned with subject matter areas such as population, urban development, rural development and political development and with geographic areas - Indonesia, Vietnam and the Mekong Basin. It issues publications, several dozen in number at last count, which are distributed to libraries, including our own. For those who would seek detailed information about SEADAG activities looking at these publications would be a good place to begin. Franz Schurmann, a China specialist, Professor at Berkeley and sympathizer with many aspects of radical student activities recently spoke at a meeting of Concerned Asian Scholars (a radical offshoot of the Association of Asian Studies) in Boston about of Asian Studies) in Boston about the laziness of those who would denounce without doing their homework. Exposes are, of course, fun to read but for those interested in an informed radical view the Bulletin of Concerned Asian Scholars (1737 Cambridge Street, Room 305, Cambridge, Mass. 02138) is a much more useful source of information...

Index

To The Editor:

The INDEX is much more than a simple yearbook. It is the summation of an entire year at the University - the only summation. And, it is the only concrete memory of the year - the only way that you can remember the events and the people.

This year 75 per cent of the UMass senior class considered the book important enough to have their senior portrait taken for the INDEX - so they will be remembered (for better or for worse) by classmates and underclass friends. Seniors are but a small part of the book, though, because the book will picture the entire year's events. It's the way that you remember that you were there and took part.

Some Student Senators feel that the INDEX is not worth even $6 a year. I disagree. I think that if we are to fund the Collegian ($93,000), Spectrum, Yahoo, the Drum, WMUA, and even the Student Senate ($98,000) with Student Tax Funds, certainly we should fund the INDEX.

But now, INDEX is gravely threatened. The referendum called by the Student Senate asks all students to vote on whether or not they wish to continue funding the INDEX. If the vote is no, either the yearbook of the University of Massachusetts will die or it will cost $20 (plus), with a certain drop in quality, in the future.

For all the undergraduates, I implore my fellow students to vote in the Student Union this Thursday for SATF funding of INDEX.

SANDER B. ROSS

To The Editor:

The Student Senate has called for a referendum on the INDEX Well, I'd like to call for a referendum on the Student Senate.

We pay $6 a student for the INDEX and get it to keep and later to look back on. I understand that we pay $6 a student for the Student Senate - and do not get anything but bullshit in return.

I'm going to vote to keep funding the INDEX as we do now and then try to get the senate to have a referendum on themselves. If they do, I'll vote against the senate and maybe put an end to some of the verbal pollution on campus.

Power to the Students.

Pollution

To The Editor:

The student body has recently become aware of pollution; water pollution, air pollution, and noise pollution. I'm more concerned with PEOPLE pollution, not the obvious overabundance, but the more obscure, integrity of our present population. I'm refering to the type of person who regards others' personal property as community property and his for the taking.

I'm referring specifically to the individual(s) who would steal a tire from an automobile, assuming he needs the tire more than the rightful owner. I'm also concerned with people who would watch such an event happen in front of Wheeler at 7 p.m. Friday evening; these people evidently think it natural for the owner of a late model car to leave it sitting on a cement block.

Chances are the person who now has my tire is reading this article and laughing, knowing he's home safe. But sooner or later he'll be tagged out and my only wish is to be there to trip him when he rounds third. May I also wish him a blowout at 80 miles an hour.

DAVID ODABASHIAN
Hills North

One student told me that April 10-11 was the first time he had ever talked to an administrator. "They're human beings believe it or not", he said. "I learned that just because a man seems conservative, he is not necessarily anti-student."

And certain faculty members learned about the quality of the student body. "They're pragmatic and tough. Not all of them are hedonistic revolutionaries."

Of Rats and Reason

To All Brothers and Sisters:

When the power structure comes down on one political worker, then it is time for the left community to stand solid. Because my friends are rising to my defense I feel high spirit coming over the jail house walls and I want to send a little high spirit back through the bars.

This persona non gratis law, Mass. Gen. Law ch. 266, sect. 123, means that the local pigs, acting in concert from Whitmore to the pig car, have the power to declare any man "lawless" if, in the pig's opinion, he is "on University property without good reason." Once declared "persona non gratis" the laws of this commonwealth empower the pigs to endlessly harrass, arrest, and im prison a man for mere presence on University property even though he is engaged in entirely lawful activity.

This law was passed last year precisely for the purpose of isolating the student movement from political workers in the larger community. The enforcement of this law against me only reveals that the University is a police state in disguise in nice Amherst - so long as we don't get militant.

By defending the rat in an out front political manner we defend leftist Everyman. As fingers of a hand can be stepped on, they can also be clenched into a fist and we can make some room for ourselves in the land of the pig.

To The Editor:

Reason is the ability to think in a sane, rational manner. Whether it be Nixon and Agnew or Cleaver and Seale, reason is hardly the cornerstone by which these men (and most Americans for that matter) do their thinking. Yet to the Abbie Hoffman's, Jerry Rubins, Rennie Davis', Tom Haydens, and their ilk who regard anarchy as an answer to the ills which plague our society and the world, I suggest they heed the words of Lennon and McCartney's song, REvolution; it speaks for itself.

You say you want a revolution, well you know
We all want to change the world
You tell me that it's evolution, well you know
We all want to change the world
But when you talk about destruction
Don't you know that you can count me out...
You say you got a real solution, well you know
We all would love to see your plan
You ask me for a contribution, well you know
We all do what we can
But if you want money for people with minds that hate
All I can tell you brother is that you have to wait...
You say you'll change the constitution, well you know
You ought to change your head
You tell me it's the institution, well you know
You better free your mind instead
For if you go carrying pictures of Chairman Mao
You aren't going to make it with anyone, anyhow...

EDWARD HILL
Thatcher

To The Editor:

Lately I've been experiencing a tug of war between my studies, the senate and the beginnings of spring which seasonly sprout a condition of pleasant apathy in the hearts of man. Next week is election time for senate officers, a time when the gourmets of politics exhibit trays of platform goodies to entice fledging senators for their time and support. But more important then elections, next week is Moratorium. By some slip in the divine order of things, being neither a radical or devout peacenik, I am presently the unofficial quad area coordinator for the moratorium.

Thus far my efforts at coordination haven't been too successful since the Quad seems to be made up of hundreds of people whose social conscience extends only as far as who they've been fixed up with on Saturday night.

By working for, pledging your support and participating in the Moratorium you may demonstrate: 1. the Quad isn't traditionally apathetic, 2. you refuse to remain silent while this beastly war continues its rampage in Southeast Asia.

UMass Riflemen Hit N.E. Bulls-eye

Redmen Take Title, Set New School Record

Entering the New England Finals on Saturday at MIT with the third best seasons average of the six finalists, the Redman Rifle team finished on top with a new school record. UMass had won the Southern Division Championship with an average of 1317, but MIT came with an average of 1320 and Coast Guard Academy with an incredible 1359. Naturally the Coast Guard Cadets were hot favorites to retain their championship for the second year.

The Redmen were probably the most experienced team at the finals since they were all seniors or juniors and, for half of them, it was their last shoot for UMass.

As the final targets were scored at the end of two hours of shooting, it became apparent that the Redmen, lead by Captain Joh Lacouture, had just edged Coast Guard by 1349 to 1344. MIT was a close third with 1341.

Lacouture finished his UMass career with a score of 278, tying his own school record and good enough to win fim first-place medal for high individual score at the finals. The Redmen top five score of 1349 was also a school record.

NEW ENGLAND CHAMPS – Here is UMass' rifle team, winner this weekend of the New England Finals. Left to right (front row), the riflemen are Don Souza, captain John Lacouture and Pete Costello; (back row) coach Mike Goodge, Bern Armata, John O'Donahue, Doug Hjorth and Dave Craig. Not pictured is Dud Darling. (MDC photo by Bob Cristman)

For coach Mike Goodge and seniors Lacouture, Dud Darling and Doug Hjorth the Championship marked the end of their U-Mass shooting--they could not have wished for a better one.

Frosh Stickmen Jitter, Get Jolted, 19-6

By STEVE MOSHER
Staff Reporter

The UMass freshman lacrosse team suffered a case of season opening jitters and, before it could recover, the Brown University stickmen had built up a 7-0 first-quarter lead on the way to a 19-6 win last Saturday afternoon.

The Redmen's lack of practice time showed up in the first period as they were always one-step behind the Brown players. This inability to keep up with the flow of play allowed Brown to have many easy scoring opportunities as they were almost always on the attack. Redman goalie Rob Plasance could do little good as Brown's attack of Wagner, Russo and Earl were free all the time in the first 11 minutes of the game.

The Redmen finally got on the scoreboard at 12:42. Joe Deriso scored from Tom Bock on a scramble in front of the net. At the time Brown was down a man for slashing. At the end of the first period the score was 7-1.

Again Brown forced the play for the first 11 minutes of the second period and consequently scored five more times to up their lead to a commanding 12-1. Three of these goals came when UMass was penalized.

The Redmen finally got untracked and dominated the last three minutes of the half. Kevin Bush and Fred Michels combined to score two UMass goals. The second of these came at 14:16 and was the prettiest goal of the game. Michels passed from the left side behind the Brown net to Bush who was breaking in and,in one leaping motion, Bush grabbed the pass and whipped the ball past a startled goalie.

In the first half Plasance came up with six saves to nine for the Brown goalie.

The second half of the game was like a new contest as the Redmen got their share of face-offs and the defense played a tighter game. Still Brown surged to a quick 15-3 lead in four minutes. Russo and Porter combined for all three Brown goals.

UMass came back with another goal, this one by Bock from Joe Deriso at 7:42 just six seconds after Brown had been penalized for slashing.

Brown scored once more in the period as the score was 16-4 going into the last period.

UMass played its best lacrosse in the last quarter, but by then it was too late. Vin Sbano scored an unassisted goal at 4:38 on a quick breakaway, and also added the final goal, again an unassisted one, at 9:34.

The final score was 19-6, but over the last half UMass played a much better game and Brown, one of the better teams in New England, could only score a 7-3 margin.

Over the last half Plasance made 12 saves as Brown was not allowed to take the easy shots. The UMass defense had started to hit like coach Carl Shultheis had said it could.

The freshmen play twice over this long weekend, home on Saturday against Wesleyan at 2:00 and away on Monday at ever - dangerous Harvard.

Coach Shultheis looks for more improvement as the season wears on

Frosh Nine Dumps JV, 4-3

By BRONA SIMON
Staff Reporter

Coming up with a run in the bottom of the ninth, the UMass freshmen pulled one over the Junior Varsity baseball team Saturday, 4-3, in what was supposed to be the first of two seven-inning scrimmages.

After the freshmen scored one run in the third, frosh pitcher Jack Welch held the slim lead by shutting out the JV until the seventh inning.

In the seventh, however, the JV took advantage of four walks, two errors, and one single to knock out Welch and go ahead 3-1. The freshmen came back to score two and send the game into extra innings.

Tom White pitched the last two for the '73-ers, striking out four. He got the win when first baseman Esposito hit a long shot to center good enough to be a home run, but called a single when Earl Manley scored.

UM Finally Beats BC; It's Redman Nine by 16-4

UMass Bounces Back To Up Record to 6-3

By STEVE SHAMBAN
Staff Reporter

Long-suffering UMass finally got to beat Boston College in something Saturday as Redman baseball clobbered the Eagles, 16-4, to bounce back from Thursday's 2-0 loss at the hands of UConn. This win in the northern home opener raises UMass' record to 6-3 while BC's falls to 2-1.

Perhaps the contest could more aptly be termed the North Pole opener as 40 degree temperatures, combining with high winds whipping in off the Boyden tundra, made conditions very difficult for baseball, normally a summer sport.

Junior pitcher Don Anderson was the star of the day as he went six innings, giving up but one run in a shaky first inning, and going four for four at the plate with two singles and two triples for three RBI. In picking up the win, Anderson struck out seven while walking only two as his round-house cuve appeared to be up to its old tricks.

Rich Rappoli finished up, surrendering the final three scores. Lefty Bill Barton went four and two thirds innings for the Eagles and was tagged with the loss.

The Redmen got all the runs they needed in the fourth and fifth innings picking up two and six runs repectively.

With Bob Willman on third and Anderson on first, second baseman Hosea Kelly reached on an infield hit, Willman scoring. BC shortstop Paul McKinnon's throw got by first baseman Paul Costello on the play, allowing Anderson to scamper home with what, at the time, was the go-ahead run.

Brian Martin led off the sixth with a towering 360-foot home run to left against the wind for the third run. Then an error, a single and a walk led to Barton's departure.

Rightly Dave Silvia was his replacement. He was warmly greeted by consecutive singles from Anderson and Kelly which led to two more runs. After Ray Ellerbrook reached on an error, Martin came through for the second time in the inning with a pop single to left for two more runs. The Redmen led at this juncture, 8-1.

After this point the only question was what the final score would be., UMass was clearly in control. off Anderson came on a single to left, a walk, a fielder's choice and a sacrifice fly to center by Jack Abbott.

Anderson drove in the two U-Mass runs of the sixth with a triple to deep center, scoring Willman and shortstop Joe Gugliotta.

BC's three eighth-inning runs came on a walk with the bases loaded followed by a single up the middle by substitute catcher 'Chief' Bender. UMass struck back in its half with six runs on four hits and one error.

DIAMOND DUST - The Redmen recorded 16 runs on 18 hits and four errors. . . BC had its four runs on seven hits and seven errors . . . Undoubtedly, the cold weather contributed greatly to the exorbitant amount of errors committed by both squads . . . Eagle third baseman Bob Murphy had a tough day with two errors on infield pops . . . One of them was on a foul off Martin's bat; two pitches later, Martin hit his homer . . . Next UMass home game is Wednesday when AIC comes to town . . . Vermont will be in Friday and Saturday for two games . . . UMass coach Dick Bergquist feels the Catamounts may be the darkhorse threat for Yankee Conference honors.

Baseballers Right Back in Action, Face Tufts Away Today

Coming off one of its easiest wins in a long time, the Redman baseball team will try to continue its victorious ways as it travels to Medford to meet the Jumbos of Tufts. The game is scheduled to start at 3 p.m.

After displaying an awesome offense against Boston College, Coach Dick Bergquist will go with the same starting lineup today. This would mean that the infield will be comprised of Ray Ellerbrook at first, Hosea Kelly at second, Joe Gugliotta at shortstop and Tom Semino at third.

In the outfield for the Redmen will be Brian Martin, Steve Rogers and Bob Willman and Chuck Newell, as usual, will be behind the plate. Bergquist is undecided as yet about his starting moundsman but has narrowed the choice down to Jack Bernardo and Lou Colabello.

As far as Tufts is concerned, the Jumbos come into the new season with nine letter men returning from last year's 8-8 squad. Leading the way for Tufts is co-captain Bob Cyboron. The senior shortstop is a two-time All - New England selection and can do the job both with the bat and the glove.

Another strong point is the all-around play of Rich Giachetti. Giachetti is both an outfielder and a pitcher and has come through admirably at both positions for Coach Herb Erickson.

Erickson also points to the good depth in the pitching department and the catching of sophomore Scott Trowbridge as the Jumbos major strengths. However, Tufts has a big hole in the right side of its infield where it lacks both depth and talent, especially at second base.

The game should be a good test for the UMass defense. After their strong showing Saturday against BC, it will be interesting to see whether the Redmen can keep it up against a fine Tufts pitching staff.

Bruins, Bosox Wrap-up

Bruins Fall to NY, 4-2; Sox Tripped by Nats, 6-5

NEW YORK (AP) - Rod Gilbert fired two goals inside of 71 seconds Sunday night, leading the New York Rangers to a 4-2 victory over Boston and tying their National Hockey League Stanley Cup quarter-final series at 2-2.

The teams return to Boston for the fifth game of the series Tuesday night with the sixth game scheduled for New York Thursday. The winner will meet Chicago in a playoff semifinal series.

Gilbert who struggled without a goal through the final five weeks of the regular season, continued his hot playoff streak, getting the Rangers off in front early. His third goal of the series came at 3:49 of the opening period on a power-play when he rammed a rebound past Boston goalie Ed Johnston.

Gilbert clicked again just 1:11 later, converting passes from Jean Ratelle and Ted Irvine for a 2-0 Ranger lead.

Phil Esposito cut New York's edge in half midway through the second period. But it took the Rangers just 22 seconds to restore their two-goal edge. Dave Balon intercepted an errant pass by Derek Sanderson and scored unassisted.

Boston's Bobby Orr and New York's Walt Tkaczuk traded third period goals to complete the scoring.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Mike Epstein clouted his third home run of the season and Frank Howard tarely missed a pair on two doubles high off the left field fence Sunday as the Washington Senators trimmed the Boston Red Sox 6-5.

Jerry Moses gave the Red Sox a brief lead in the second inning with Boston's first homer of the season, and Carl Yastrzemski added one in the seventh.

Casey Cox tagged for 13 hits, won his second straight with relief help in the ninth when a three-run Boston rally fell short.

The Senators scored an unearned run without a hit off Gary Peters in the second and took the lead in the fourth on Howard's double, inches short of a homer, and Epstein's homer.

Peters was knocked out in a three-run fifth on Paul Casanova's single, a sacrifice, a walk to Del Unser, a base-filling single by Ed Brinkman, a wild pitch and Howard's second double.

The Red Sox, outhitting the winners 15-6 over-all, threatened repeatedly against Cox but could not finish him until the ninth, when Tony Conigliaro's tow-run single keyed their just short rally. Every starting player in the Boston lineup hit safely, with Moses contributing a double and single in addition to his homer.

Crew Scores with Varsity, Frosh And JV Triumphs over Wesleyan

On the wind-swept and flood-swollen Connecticut River, the UMass crew team convincingly defeated Wesleyan Saturday before a crowd of over 200 people who came to watch the Redmen's season opener.

The UMass freshmen, as expected, won the opening contest. The margin of victory was extremely close as a large, well-drilled Wesleyan frosh pushed coach Larry Dean's first boat 'till the finish before finally falling by one length.

UMass led the entire course, understroking the visitors. UMass' second freshmen trailed the two first eights, encountering more difficulty coping with the wind than the first eights. Coach Dean, of course, was pleased with the results, but was disturbed by the margin.

The Redman junior varsity eight thrashed its opponents by five lengths. Both boats were even after the start with UMass eventually assuming a length lead at the halfway mark.

Then Wesleyan experienced some difficulty with the wind and the Redmen, capitalizing upon this mistake, ran out another length ahead. From 500 yards to finish UMass' strength showed as the crew put forth little strength in pouring it on.

The varsity race was a classic. Wesleyan's high-stroking eight against the low-stroking Redmen. The home club had the lead after the start, but Wesleyan swept past UMass at 35 strokes per minute to the home team's 30.

After giving the guests a length the Redmen went to work. A hard 20 pulled them even. Another ten gave UMass the lead. From the halfway mark home the Redmen, with remembrances of last year's upset on their minds, proceeded to walk by the frustrated Cardinals. UMass, hiking its stroke to 34 (to Wesleyan's 37) pulled out even further for a 16-second win. The clean sweep was completed.

Coach Mike Faherty was all smiles at the finish. He stressed the hours and miles put in before this effort as making the difference. "There is no doubt on my mind this is our best team yet. How far we go will be determined by the men in the coming weeks. They were sharp today, a great group to work with."

Next week the club hosts La-Salle (Pa) and Worcester Polytech in another home race next Saturday.

CAMPUS READIES FOR APRIL 15

Spring fever has swept the campus and the dorms are emptying as thousands of people head outside to enjoy the warm weather. Forgotten for the moment are the vast fields of mud that seemed endless and eternal only a few short weeks ago. The number of diversions to be found around the campus pond on a balmy day are interesting in the extreme. Plenty of colorful kites, someone's St. Bernard, and a big jug full of sunshine and happiness. (Photo by Bob Mangiaratti)

Sub Com Recommends Cancelling of ROTC

In a Boston meeting yesterday, the Faculty and Educational Policy subcommittee of the Board of Trustees voted to recommend to the Board that all contracts with the Army and Air Force for ROTC instruction on this campus be cancelled as of the end of the 1970-71 academic year. New contracts would be negotiated within the next year, after consideration of faculty and student recommendations on the controversial ROTC program. Chancellor Tippo had stated his support for cancellation and renegotiation of the ROTC contracts.

It is expected that the Trustees will accept the subcommittee recommendation at their April meeting. Members present at the subcommittee meeting yesterday included chairman Frederick Troy, Cinci Olken, Louis Lyons, Frank Boyden, and General McGinnis.

The Student Senate has recommended that the ROTC program be reduced from 4 to 2 years, no credit be given for "non-academic" courses, and academic courses be taught by regular faculty members in various departments for credit.

Area Colleges Hold Chemistry Lectures

A series of lectures on new developments in chemistry will be given this week at three Valley colleges and the University of Massachusetts.

Dr. Albert F. Cotton, professor of chemistry at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will speak as the 1970 Four-College Chemistry Lecturer Thursday, Friday and Saturday, (April 16 - 18). The events are open to the public.

"The High Resolution Structure of an Enzyme, Micrococcal Nuclease, Part I" is the topic of the first talk, scheduled at Smith College at 8:00 p.m. Thursday in Room 103, McConnell Hall. There will be an opportunity to talk with Professor Cotton at a coffee hour after the lecture in the McConnell Foyer.

At Mount Holyoke College Friday afternoon, Professor Cotton will speak on "the High Resolution Structure of an Enzyme, Micrococcal Nuclease, Part II" at 4 in Room L2 Cleveland Hall. That evening at 8, the third lecture will be given at Amherst College, Lecture Room 2 in the Science Center, on the topic "Quadruple Bonds."

"Fluxional Organometallic Molecules" will be presented Saturday morning in Peters Auditorium, Goessmann Laboratory, at the University of Massachusetts, concluding the annual series of lectures. This speech will be at 10:30 a.m.

Professor Cotton received the Ph.D. degree from Harvard in 1955, then joined the MIT faculty where he has been an eminent chemical researcher and a prolific writer. He collaborated with Geoffrey Wilkinson in writing the standard text and reference book, Advanced Inorganic Chemistry (1962). His pioneering book, Chemical Aspects of Group Theory (1963) popularized a powerful method for studying the geometry of molecules. He has edited the annual publication, Progress in Inorganic Chemistry, since its founding in 1959.

This will be the 29th Four-College Chemistry Lecture Series, a distinguished series which is one of the oldest of the cooperative enterprises of the valley colleges.

SDS Debates Value of ROTC, Calls for End To Program

By BERNARD BLAIN
Staff Reporter

A panel consisting of four speakers representing the SDS, moderated by Joanne Levenson, spoke to about 200 people yesterday in the student union ballroom calling for the abolition of ROTC on campus and the replacement of ROTC scholarships with University scholarships.

John Barbaro began the discussion saying "I don't think ROTC deserves academic standing." Barbaro pointed out that no other course requires you to sign a contract at 20 years old which obligates you for a period of 6 years. He also is an ROTC graduate who refused his commission, and according to him, became one of the few cadets who did not get drafted as a result. Barbaro stated that the ROTC obligation "is ridiculous." He could not see any relation of specified requirements such as keeping your hair trimmed in a certain fashion and the $50 stipend presently paid to junior and senion cadets to a university education.

Professor Howard Gadlin pointed out that the civilian control which once existed over the military no longer does. According to him there is a circular process in which the permanence of the military due to the requirements of technology and advancement outlasts the change of civilian authority. He continued saying "ROTC is necessary for the military in order to bring in people who are skilled in social, economic and political factors. These skills produce people who are willing to make independent decisions without civilian consent." Quoting Colonel Pell who was head of ROTC at Harvard, Gadlin said, "ROTC is critical to the defense establishment." Gadlin did not question anyone's right to military training but he challenged the right of the Army to enter into contracts with universities for military training. Gadlin proposed "If the campuses are in fact open and are free quorums, then the University ought to establish the institute of Che Guevara studies."

According to Bill Abbot, the University has stated in response to proposals such as cancelling classes on the 15th that they are apolitical. Abbot's response was, "If that was true, no government institutions could be on this campus."

Abbot also said that ROTC produces officers and these officers exert great power on others. "They are cast as an oppressor group." Those who go to college have a chance to take ROTC while lower class, non-college people don't get that chance."

Finishing the panel discussion and teach-in was Norm Bender who felt that war hurts working Americans by taking their tax money to fight wars, taking their sons and daughters to kill or be killed so people can make more profits." He contended that officers push soldiers to expolit the Vietnamese as a lower class society and stated, "We can fight war by attacking war institutions. Already, there has been a 50% decline in ROTC enrollment in New England."

In attendance were Air Force Major Hayes and Army Captain Kleb from the University ROTC Instructor Groups. There will be a meeting Thursday at 4 in the Ballroom to decide on programs for action and education dealing with the ROTC issue.

Engineering to Change Names

Three distinguished engineers will be panelists at the symposium following the dedication of the main engineering building as Marston Hall at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, Saturday, April 18.

The three are Lucius P. Gregg, Jr., associate dean of sciences at Northwestern University; Robert C. Gunness, president of Standard Oil Company of Indiana; and Hubert Heffner, deputy director of the U. S. Office of Science and Technology.

They will be panelists on "The Role of the Scientist and Engineer in Public Affairs" at 1:30 p.m. in the East Engineering Building Auditorium. Panel moderator will be State Rep. John W. Olver, (D-Amherst) a former member of the UMass chemistry faculty.

The building will be named Marston Hall in honor of George A. Marston, former dean of the UMass School of Engineering. The formal dedication at 10 a.m. at the building will include an address by Dr. Eric Walker, president of Pennsylvania State University. All members of the University Community and friends of Dean Marston are cordially invited to attend all of the ceremonies and discussions.

The day's events will begin with a coffee hour and registration period from 8:45 a.m. to 9:45 a.m. at the East Engineering Building. Dittlach, representing the engineering faculty; William J. Boyle, Jr., representing the Engineering Alumni Association; Paul W. Chase, representing the senior class; and former Dean Marston. He joined the UMass faculty in 1933, became the first dean of the School of Engineering when it was formed in 1947, and retired in 1963.

After a luncheon for invited guests at Worcester Dining Commons, the panel discussion will be held.

Mr. Gregg is a graduate of the U. S. Naval Academy who also studied at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Catholic University of America. Kenneth Clark Speaks Tonight, First MLK Memorial Lecturer

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, educator and psychologist who has been called "the scholar of the Civil Rights Movement," will deliver the first Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial lecture this spring at the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, April 14.

His talk, at 8:15 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom, is open to the public without charge. It is sponsored by the Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture Committee, composed of members of the Distinguished Visitors Program and the Senior Class Executive Council.

Dr. Clark is professor of psychology at New York City College and also research director at Northside Center for Child Development, director of the National Child Labor Commission, director of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, and a member of the New York State Youth Commission. Dr. Clark also serves as a consultant for the N.A.A.C.P. and the U.S. Department of State.

Dr. Clark's book "Dark Ghetto" was based on his personal experience while serving as Chief Consultant to the Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited (HARYOU). The book probes the pathologies of Harlem and rebuts the theory that ghetto residents are responsible for their own condition. Dr. Clark, who was the original architect of HARYOU, has been called the "scholar of the Civil Rights movement" by the New York Times.

He has also written "Prejudice and Your Child" and "Desegregation: An Appraisal of the Evidence."

Dr. Clark graduated from Howard University and received both his M.A. and Ph.D degrees from Columbia University. He received an honorary degree from UMass in 1967.

Dr. Clark will be on the UMass campus all afternoon on April 14, speaking to various classes. Other events during Mr. Clark's day on the UMass campus will include a reception at Mills House from 4:30 to 5:30 p.m. and a reception for the University community in Memorial Hall immediately following the lecture. His is the first of this year's Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial lectures. The other will be given by Dr. Ralph Abernathy on April 22.

SGA Votes Sigelman Nomination Invalid

The SGA Committee of the Student Senate, in charge of elections unanimously voted the nomination papers of Nelson Sigelman, candidate for President of the class of '73, invalid at its meeting last night. The committee decided that the papers with ninety-nine signatures, of which three were admittedly written by Sigelman himself, did not constitute a valid nomination. The Senate Election Rules Act requires 100 signatures from the candidate's class.

The committee also considered a challenge to the nomination papers of another candidate, raised by Sigelman's supporters on grounds that they considered the two cases similar. The committee however, pointed to "substantive" differences in the two cases decided not to uphold the challenge to the other candidate's papers.

The committee's decision means that there will be no primary election for President of the class of 1973 on Thursday, April 16. For final election will be on April 23. Sigelman now has the option of appealing the decision to the Senate or the General Court.

All faculty, students, and administrators of the university community are encouraged to attend the first in a series of university-wide planning sessions, the goals of which will be the synthesis of the many proposals created during April 10th and 11th. The meeting this evening will focus on the creation of a comprehensive and effective series of proposals for the May 7th, university-wide referendum, which will reflect as many divergent interests and perspectives as possible.

The tentative agenda for this Tuesday's session will include:

1. A recapitulation of the April 10/11 weekend by Jay Savereid.
2. A report on Sunday night's committee analysis of the April 10/11 proposals by John Brentlinger.
3. Discussion and suggestions for further reorganization.
4. Possible positions to be taken toward the "All University Senate."
5. The nature and politics of the May 7 Referendum.
6. Possible advising and consulting relations with the university administration.
7. Creation of a schedule/timetable for the effective allocation of effort and interest over the forthcoming months.

This first session will "come together" this evening, Tuesday, April 14, beginning promptly at 9 p.m. in Bartlet Hall 207. Those desiring further information before the session are encouraged to contact either Barbara Heron (Tel. 5-2043), or Tom Lindeman (Tel. 5-2789, U.C.F. Office).

Loan Closet Will Accept Donations 30

The office of International Programs at the University of Massachusetts needs household furnishings, baby furniture and clothing, and winter clothing for all ages for a Loan Closet for foreign students and their families. The Loan Closet is a joint venture between the UMass Office of International Programs, foreign student volunteers and members of the Amherst Town Committee for Foreign Students.

Donations may be brought to the basement storage room south door, of Arnold House, which is across from the new Graduate Research Center on North Pleasant Street, between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. on Wednesdays. The basement storage room is accessible from the parking area at the rear of the building. Arrangements may be made for donations to be picked up by calling Mrs. Ann Silva at 545-2710.

Learning-Resources began to serve as a communications switchboard yesterday. Interaction with the student community will be vital to the efficiency of the operation.

Previously, the organization of a plan of action has been the main concern of the group. The program will stress information on the coming moratoriums, organizations and events concerning quality environment, living-learning communities and campus educational opportunities.

Those who seek involvement with their surroundings but who don't know how to go about finding the necessary information can call and let Learning-Resources locate and deliver the information to them.

More important, people already connected with some function, no matter how exotic its nature, can inform Learning-Resources of its existence so that it can be filed for future reference. Located at 320 South College, the switchboard will be open Monday thru Friday from 12:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. and can be reached by calling 5-0066.

Trying to call attention to the war atrocities being committed in Vietnam was this group of students who walked the Worcester and Franklin Commons yesterday burning babies as they went. The event was planned as part of the April 15 Anti-war protests.

N.E. Mobe Burns Babies, Protest Slated for Wed

Students belonging to the N.E. Mobe to End the War conducted guerilla theater yesterday in the Worcester and Franklin Commons as part of the April 15 strike. A procession carrying shrouded coffins wound its way from table to table and then assembled to burn baby dolls to dramatize the plight of the Vietnamese civilians who are burned by U.S. jets dropping napalm. The demonstration was planned as one of the events leading up to tomorrow's strike against the war.

Events at UMass on the April 15 national day of anti-war protest will include a "peace commencement" at Alumni Stadium, a march to the center of Amherst and a rally on the Town Common.

The plans for the day of protest are being made by the University Mobilization Committee to End the War in Vietnam and the Connecticut Valley Anti-War Coalition.

The stadium program beginning at 1:30 p.m. will include such speakers as Amherst College historian Henry Steele Commager and award-winning poet Denise Levertov. Other speakers who have been invited represent the areas of politics, labor, the black community, Vietnam veterans and women's liberation. After the stadium program, a march will be held to a 4 p.m. rally at the Amherst Common.

The schedule for April 15, a Wednesday, also includes leafletting and canvassing on and off campus in the morning, according to the committee. At noon, rallies with bands and guerrilla theatre will take place at the residence areas and at the Campus Pond. The Committee also plans leafleting and canvassing in the community Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon.

Cookout season is upon us again. But cooking babies isn't exactly what this high priest of the Anti-war movement had in mind when he torched Tiny Tears at the Franklin Commons.

According to the mobilization group, nearly 2000 students have signed petitions pledging to strike against the war April 15. The strike pledge petitions are being circulated at the Student Union, the dining commons and in living centers.

The Mobilization Committee is a student-faculty group at the University dedicated to an immediate, unconditional withdrawal of U.S. troops from Southeast Asia.

Yippies Want In On Rock Festival

NEW YORK (AP) - A group of promoters announced Monday a $1 million rock music festival to be held in northern New York State in June and the Yippies immediately demanded to be cut in.

Jim Rutherford of the Youth International Party said the Yippies insisted on a 50 per cent voice in booking the talent, free admission for Negroes and poor people and assurances that some of the profits would be used to defend Dr. Timothy Leary, the Chicago 7 and the Black Panthers.

Otherwise, he said at a news conference called to announce the plans, the Yippies would run a free festival of their own in competition.

Promoter Bud Filippo said he and his partners hoped to limit attendance to 100,000 persons at the festival on a 1,240-acre dairy farm they have bought at Harrisburg, about 25 miles from the Canadian border near the Thousand Islands.

He urged all those attending to leave their drugs at home.

Filippo did not give a direct answer to the Yippie demands except to say that "some of the profits will definitely be donated to causes that are important to the country." He said the festival would cost $1 million and he hoped profits would reach $1 million too.

Tickets for the three-day festival, he said, would cost $20 and be sold only through the computerized Ticketron agency. The price includes free parking and camping starting June 24 with the festival proper getting underway the 26th.

Filippo said the town supervisor and board of Harrisburg had a show of unanimous support for the venture and he had been working for the past week with officials of the state health department to provide water and toilet facilities.

He said his contract with town officials calls on him to provide a private security force to ensure no federal, state or local laws are broken.

MIT Students Jailed

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) - A senior at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a former MIT graduate student were sentenced to one month each in jail and $50 fines Monday for disrupting MIT classes during a campus protest last Jan. 16.

Judge Haven Parker in East Cambridge District Court found them guilty following a trial April 7. He released them on personal recognizance bond of $100 pending appeal.

The two are George N. Katsiaficas, 20, of Baltimore, Md., a senior, and Peter G. Bohmer, 25, of Rego Park, N.Y., a former graduate student.

They were charged with two counts each of disrupting a school by barging into a metallurgy lecture and a nutrition class, and urging the students to leave their classes to join a protest group which smashed its way into the office of the institute president with a battering ram.

The two were among 24 persons charged with trespass in the takeover of the president's office Jan. 15-16.

Apollo Engineers Order Helium Pressure Check

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) Mission Control engineers ordered two Apollo astronauts Monday to check a remote possibility that helium pressure has built too high in the moon landing craft.

Astronauts James A. Lovell Jr. and Fred W. Haise Jr. are to crawl inside the moon lander, Aquarius, for a general inspection. They were directed to activate the craft's electrical system and to check on the pressure level in a super-cold helium tank.

Mission Control ordered the test as a precaution against any unplanned pressure build up. Helium pressure, which is used to force propellant into the descent rocket engine of the moon lander, rose unexpected before Apollo 13 was launched. The problem was fixed, but engineers want to make certain the tank is still all right.

Haise and Lovell had already planned to enter the moon lander to check out systems. The pressure check was added only as a precaution, officials said.

Astronaut John L. Swigert Jr. will remain aboard the command module, called Odyssey, while his crewmates wiggle through a tunnel connecting the two craft.

The astronauts reported earlier they had been jarred awake during the night by the shriek of a master alarm in the space craft.

"It really scared us," said Lovell. "We were all over the cockpit."

The problem was only minor, however, and the spacemen went back to sleep. Space officials said the alarm was caused when temperature in a hydrogen tank in the electrical system dipped too low. A heater came on automatically and solved the problem, they said.

Apollo 13 is so accurately on its path to the moon officials canceled a course correction Monday and Lovell and Haise will use the time saved to move into Aquarius three hours earlier than planned.

The two men move through a tunnel connecting Odyssey, the command ship, with the attached moon lander and spend more than an hour checking systems on the spindly-legged craft which will carry them to a dangerous landing in the rugged highlands of the moon Wednesday.

The spent third stage of the Saturn 5 booster, also bound for the moon, trailed the astronauts by about 900 miles officials said Monday.

The rocket hull, called the S4B, is to crash on the lunar surface about 8:10 p.m. EST Tuesday, only minutes after the three astronauts rocket themselves into lunar orbit.

The 15-ton spent rocket, which started Apollo 13 toward the moon Saturday, will crash on the moon with the force of 11 tons of TNT.

The impact is expected to send a shuddering shock through the moon and gouge a 100-120 foot crater. A seismic device left on the moon by Apollo 12 will record the shock, sending data back to scientists at Mission Control.

Nixon's New Judge?

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis said today he feels that U.S. District Judge Edward T. Gignoux would be "a fine candidate" for the U.S. Supreme Court.

Gignoux is one of two men reportedly being considered by President Nixon for the nation's highest court.

Curtis told a news conference that he thinks Gignoux "is a man of high caliber and an excellent judge.

"I have yet to hear any attorney have a bad word for him," the governor commented.

More than 15 FBI agents from the Boston division took part in an investigation of the judge's background over the weekend and forwarded their findings to the Justice Department.

One of the persons interviewed, Benjamin J. Dorsky of Bangor president of the Maine State Federated Labor Council, said he gave Gignoux "a clean bill of health" in his decisions involving civil rights and labor.

Conscription Corner

(Ed. Note: The following is a semi-weekly column written special to the DAILY COLLEGIAN by the Valley Peace Center and the Committee to Repeal the Draft.)

A good many students who seek advice from draft counselors think that by beating the draft they are doing something radical, something useful to "The Movment." This may be true--because of deferments they are free to work in anti-war, anti-draft activities--but sometimes the opposite happens. Obtaining a deferment may simply allow a man to stop worrying about the war while other young men, less fortunate than him, are drafted instead. Like many other aspects of American society, the draft tends to discriminate against the poor, the Black, the Puerto Rican, the ghetto-dweller and the kid whose poor high school background prevented him from getting into college. For every university student enjoying a II-S deferment, for example, there is someone else in military service because of the draft. Even among students there is discrimination in favor of the more affluent. Those who have to take part-time jobs, or who have to drop out for a semester in order to earn money for their education, are liable to be drafted because they have failed through no fault of their own "to make normal progress toward graduation."

Anyone who applies for a deferment must realize that The System continues to operate as usual, drafting 10,000 to 20,000 men each month as the war goes on and on Those who avoid military service can do so precisely because the System is Selective--that is, it selects the most vulnerable, usually the very people already getting the worst deal in today's America. As long as we have an unfair conscription system, the burden of fighting will be unfairly carried by poor people and minority groups. As long as our country thinks it needs an enormous armed force to suppress wars of national liberation around the world, to man military bases in 50 or more foreign lands, and to police other nations (whether they want our "help" or not), we will require a huge army made up of unwilling conscripts or hired mercenaries. Even if our wars were legitimate and necessary, however, the present draft system would be discriminatory.

You should bear in mind that you need not seek employment in your local area or even in this State. If, for example, you get a teaching job in Ohio and your local board in Massachusetts turns down your request for an occupational deferment, you can appeal to the Ohio State Appeals Board. They are likely to be more sympathetic; perhaps the need for teachers is greater there than here.

QUESTION: I want to know where I stand with the draft on medical grounds. Can I ask for a physical exam now instead of waiting to be called?

ANSWER: Yes. Recent regulations allow registrants to request a physical exam at any time so they can find out their draft classifications. This right is supposed to be granted by draft boards at their earliest convenience.

QUESTION: Could you please publish a list of occupations approved for deferment? I want to decide what to do after graduation.

ANSWER: There is no established list of deferrable occupations, although local boards tend to observe the guidelines set up by the State Director of Selective Service. It is up to your local board to determine whether your job serves the "national health, safety or interest" and is thus eligible for deferment. Priorities change from time to time, depending on national and local conditions. If you have a particular job in mind, you should ask your local draft board if they consider it deferrable.

On Thursday, April 16, at 7:30 p.m. there will be an open meeting for all History majors in the sixth floor faculty lounge in Herter Hall. The purpose of the meeting will be to elect next year's members to the Student Faculty Liason Committee and to discuss any relevent ideas, problems, or hangups.

AMHERST, MASS. – Dorothy Ornest, a member of the music department faculty at the University of Massachusetts, will offer a recital in Bowker Auditorium Wednesday, April 15, at 8 p.m. Assisting Miss Ornest will be Walter Chesnut, trumpet; Joel Krosnick, cello; Charles Fussell, piano-harpsichord; Joanne Tanner, flute; Robert Stern, piano; Elsa Brown, viola; and Ronald Steele, violin.

For this occasion Miss Ornest has programmed an aria from Handel's Oratorio "Samson", "Let the Bright Seraphim", followed by Sonata for Trumpet and Cello by Yves Chardon and "Recuerdos Mexicanos" by Robert Stern, to be given its first complete performance at this time.

Vietnam, U.S.A.

I support the Vietnam War. I'm glad this nation is willing to fight there, to defeat alien ideas, to protect OUR way of life. I feel strong beside our bombers (whose metal eggs sprout like spring crocuses in those Cong-ridden jungles and villages.) And I'm glad they do it, and, believe me, I feel sorry for those poor Viet Cong and villagers. And it's about time they let our boys into those other countries down there where the Viet Cong hide out (in their homes). I support our President's right to run that war the way HE sees fit, for after all did we not elect him in fair electoral process? Hmmmm?

Of course, I deplore warfare, but it is the curse of mankind you know--better a few thousand should die than our fair nation perish. And as for the massacres, well, you know how it is--all's fair in love and war. Heh, heh. Besides, whose side are you on anyway...OURS or theirs. But I do criticize the war the war is run--if I had my way we'd be out of there soon enough--then we could solve our home problems--like dissent and riots and such. It's time the people of this country started to obey those in office who know their jobs. No more nonsense! If our country is to be respected in this world and I mean RESPECTED, then we have to look orderly and like we know what we're doing. Appearance counts. Neatness pays.

So have some national backbone. Don't let yourself get fooled by what seems to be in the air--dissent, national instability, rebellion. EACH THOUSAND POUND BOMB IS ANOTHER BLOW FOR FREEDOM! Stick it out a little longer--our boys are doing just that--you don't hear THEM complain, do you?

And remember that it WILL be over soon--we've been promised that--it's just that the Viet Cong are stubborn and won't admit defeat. It will be over soon. It will.

"On Principle"

Tomorrow many students around the nation will sacrifice a day of education in order to demonstrate the moral conviction that the United States' military activities in Southeast Asia should be immediately discontinued. Other than that, tomorrow will accomplish little.

I will support the moratorium on principle, but with the full realization that like the October, November and December ones it will only give me the self-satisfaction of telling everyone that I am against the war. If the individuals who will cut class tomorrow are really in earnest in their beliefs, why not take positive action, rather than a one that has been proven failure?

Perhaps the lesson of the Eugene McCarthy primaries has been forgotten too soon. With one-third of the U.S. Senate, and all of the House of Representatives been elected this year, why not go out and get "peace" men through the primaries in victory? A peace-dominated Congress could greatly hasten our departure from Vietnam by taking action on other Nixon programs. Remember the Defense Department needs money to run the war!

In New York State the Republican and Democratic parties are having Senatorial primaries. Why not work for men like Ottinger, who resigned the American Bar Association because it backed Carswell, or Goldberg, who refused his party's nomination in the primary because he didn't want to owe anything to the bosses? This is the time to act, not next November after the elections. If both parties run peace candidates in the next election (say Ottinger and Godell) then how can we lose come November? This is the time to work for the end of the War.

Just think what it would be like to have the overwhelming majority of the House of Representatives being doves; or how about most of the incoming third of the Senate? Think that would influence Nixon? Probably a heck of a lot more than the moratorium. It's time to stop dreaming and kidding ourselves, the moratorium is good internally for the marchers, but Nixon only understands politics; why not give him a lesson?

Sherman Skulnick

There is a man they used to carry down the stairs to the basement synagogue where his father was the lay leader. The man is quite grotesque-looking and he has trouble speaking. His name is Sherman Skulnick.

Last week Skulnick filed suit in Chicago federal court to order the disclosure of the archives relating to the death of President Kennedy.

Before you laugh off the suit as an impossibility, you ought to know a little about Skulnick. People used to ask what he did. Some said he researched cases for lawyers, others claimed he would have to be supported by his father for the rest of his life.

Every man needs to know that he accomplishing something, someone once said. Skulnick has found his raison d'etre in the law; he has studied to make a living and to be able to accomplish something. He is commonly referred to in the Chicago media as 'self-taught legal researcher.'

Some time ago, Skulnick filed suit to force the redistricting of Chicago aldermanic wars on the basis of one man, one vote. In Mayor Daley's city, a city where judges must be approved by the local Democratic head (Daley), a city where gerrymandering is a way of life, Skulnick's suit was successful.

I think that Chicago's wards are now in the process of being remarked.

About the time that Abe Fortas was forced off the Supreme Court, Skulnick shocked Illinois by demanding the resignations of two state supreme court justices. He had uncovered evidence which implied that the two men had been able to purchase treasury stock in a bank related to a convicted state treasurer whose case was under consideration at the time.

Justices Roy Solfisburg and Ray Klingbiel resigned from the Illinois Supreme Court.

Skulnick occupies the unique position of one who can bring action against powerful persons and institutions and not fear the reprisals. Persons who have uncovered evidence of corruption can bring it to him and know both that they will be safe and that something will be done about it.

Skulnick said last week that there is evidence which suggests a plot in Chicago to kill the President two weeks prior to Dallas. There are records, he insists, of a car registered to Oswald.

There is also the matter of a black FBI agent who has been curiously silenced in the case.

There are so many unanswered questions in the public explanation of the assassination, that it is difficult to have much faith in the government agencies responsible for the investigation, especially the FBI.

Certainly the public has a right to know if new evidence has been uncovered, or if there is evidence implying more than the conclusions of the Warren commission.

And if there is any one private citizen who can shed light on the events of 1963, I think that it just might be Sherman Skulnick.

Give $$ To The Revolution

To the editor:

The following is a letter sent to the Jefferson Airplane. We'd appreciate your printing it as an open letter for the consideration of the University community. (We'd hate to think the Airplane is laughing all the way to the bank.)

Dear Jefferson Airplane,

In your album, "Volunteers", you preach violent overthrow of the government. (i.e. "We Can Be Together" and "Volunteers") Aside from singing these songs, what do you do to further "the revolution"? It seems to us that given your extensive economic resources, you are in a position to give significant financial assistance to those actively engaged in furthering the ideals you espouse. We hope that rather than just singing "Got a revolution - Got to Revolution", you are doing something to precipitate it. (Actions speak louder than lyrics.)

Do you pay your income tax? If you do, you must recognize the fact you're supporting the government, ABM, the F111, the F112, the police, defoliation, etc., etc., etc., . . . Please reply, so we can attend your April 18th concert at the Univ. of Massachusetts in good faith.

A Liberal

To the editor:

I would just like to inform the student body of the University what one Sociology professor, namely Professor Korsan, is doing. Prof. Korsan claims to be a pacifist and one against the Vietnam War. But what is he doing on APRIL 15th? He is giving an exam to his Soc. of the Family students. This class regularly meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays. But on this week there is no class Tuesday April 14th or on Thursday April 16th, but rather an exam given on Wed. April 15th. Professor Korsan also stated anyone who is not at this exam will receive a zero, regardless of the moratorium.

It is this type of hypocritical liberal behavior that causes me to wonder if these so called "liberals" can ever really see the true need for change and the true list of priorities to act upon. It is no wonder that so many people have given up on reasoning and discussions with such people, and have declared that violence is necessary for change. It is up to these liberals whether this country will undergo a non-violent or violent change. I only wish that these people would think more before they act.

One who supports the April 15th moratorium!

Red Hen

To the Editor:

And to the vast majority of student, faculty and administration who decided that they had better things to do than "come together" on April 10th and 11th:

I hope you remember the story of THE LITTLE RED HEN, who could get no one to help grow the wheat, kill the aphids, etc., but then found EVERY-ONE willing to help eat the bread. I hope you can see the analogy between your copout this long weekend and that story. I hope you can understand how I feel today: that you think nothing (much) is wrong at UMass; that you forfeit your right to bitch hereafter.

To those few that stayed, and tried, praise, and peace. To all the rest: I earnestly hope you never come back--because it's YOU that is the problem.

Anti-Teach-In

To the editor:

This past weekend the University was host to a self proclaimed "third world teach-in", during a good part of which we were filled with lies and half-truths based on paranoid and illogical reasoning. Part of the expenses were defrayed by the graduate and undergraduate senates, which I believe should not have been done. I would therefore like to point out some of the prevarications and hypocrisy to which we were subjected.

We were told that the actions of the government of Israel in June of 1967 were not in self defense, nor a matter of survival, as most would believe. Rather the Arab tactics prior to the outbreak of the war were provoked for a number of self serving reasons. We were led to believe that one of these was to increase the sale of Israeli Bonds in the U. S. Anyone who remembers news reports in May 1967 will recognize this as patent nonsense. Recall that the Arabs declared holy war and threatened to push Israel into the sea. In addition if one could believe that Israel instigated war to increase bond sales then one should believe that Czechoslovakia provoked Russia so as to increase Russian tourist visits!

We were told that the "imperialist" U. S. gives economic and military aid to Israel but we were not reminded that she also gives such aid to Jordan and Saudi Arabia. Nor were we reminded that the Soviet Union, the great liberator of Czechoslovakia and Hungary, supplies Egypt and Syria.

We were told that Israel was an ally of colonialist Britain. We were not told that Britain put her military forces on Arab soil, not Israels. We were not told that from the formation of Transjordan (later Jordan with its illegal capture of the west bank of Palestine in 1948) from Palestine in 1921 through the formation of the Arab League in 1945 that the Arabs too were very much Britain's ally. We were made to feel that Israel is a colonial phenomenon. To quote Abba Eban: "There is no greater fallacy than (this)...No state in the world expresses the concept of nationhood more intensely than Israel. It is the only state which bears the same name, speaks the same tongue, upholds the same faith, inhabits the same land as it did 3,000 years ago."

The point of the "teach-in" was to show how the so-called "Palestinian revolution" is related to the Black "revolution" because they both are, or should be, or think they are against imperialism, fascism, capitalism and the usual. They neglected to mention Arab leaders such as Haj Amin El Husseini who were allied with the Nazis. They neglected to mention the Arab war against the blacks in the Sudan; incidents of chattel slavery in Aden, Kuwait, Yemen, Muscat, Oman and Qatar, as well as Saudi Arabia; and the treatment of Kurdish minorities in Syria and Iraq. They disregard Israels support of revolutinary Biafra.

At the University we should hear objective, truthful discussion, not a one sided harangue under the guise of something else. The fact that the student body was deceived into supporting this is an outrage.

Art—The Visual Language

The Art Department and the Fine Arts Council of the University of Massachusetts will present a series of programs during the first two weeks of April dealing with the arts as a visual language. The series will explore visual literacy and sensory perception as learning devices for the arts, general education, and environmental and cultural studies.

The final two programs this week will emphasize new roles for the arts in education. On Tuesday, April 14th, Dr. Daniel Jordan of the University of Massachusetts School of Education will speak on the arts and early childhood education. He will demonstrate the use of non-verbal techniques such as music as learning devices. Donald Brigham, director of the interdisciplinary program in visual learning in Attleboro, Massachusetts, will discuss his widely acclaimed program on Thursday, April 16th. Mr. Brigham's program will be preceded in the afternoon by a seminar workshop in visual education. This will feature the Attleboro program and the Pelham Elementary School of Amherst project which is developing sensory education as an adjunct to the dominant verbal methodology used in most schools. The Pelham program is directed by Sidney Poritz of the University of Massachusetts Art Department. The complete program schedule is as follows:

Golfers, Deep in Talent, Open Today in Triangular Match

By BARRY RUBENSTEIN
Assistant Sports Editor

With six lettermen returning from a squad which finished with a fine 11-3 record, the UMass golf team embarks on a new season today hopeful of being even better. The team opens today in a triangular match with Wesleyan and Springfield at Wesleyan's home course.

Leading the way for Coach Page's forces is captain Ed Puzas. The junior from Westwood will play in the first position after finishing with a fine 8-3 mark last year and displaying fine form on the team's southern trip.

John Kul, one of the top frosh performers a year ago, will be the second man for Coach Page. Kul also played very well down south. Another newcomer on the squad is Don Langevin. Langevin is a junior transfer who had to sit out last season and who will play in the third position.

Four lettermen round out the seven positions for the golfers. Playing fourth will be junior Dick King and fifth will be Dave Slater. Salter is recovering from a recent injury which has hurt his game a bit but he has been improving rapidly and should be ready for today's opener.

Dick Barber, one of two seniors on the team, and Dick Aherne, another senior, will play the last two positions. This gives the golfers experience in the bottom of the lineup and should prove useful as the season progresses.

Should any of the first seven falter, Coach Page has three fine golfers who can move in and do the job. Both Mark Mills and Mike Minkos are experienced players who both saw action last year and Erik Filsinger is a promising sophomore.

The match at Wesleyan should be very close. Last year at UMass, the Redmen defeated Springfield but lost to Wesleyan and the year before at Springfield, UMass beat Wesleyan but lost to the home team.

Although the golfers went on a southern trip this year, Coach Page does not feel that this will give them any real advantage. "We've been back two weeks," the coach comments, " and we haven't been able to play since the courses around here have been closed."

However, Page feels there are other factors which could balance off the team's two week layoff. He cites better depth at the bottom of the lineup, something which comes in handy in dual and triangular matches, as the prime factor in the squad's improvement over last year.

Page also thinks that the golfers can improve upon their third place finish in the Yankee Conference a year ago. He believes that Rhode Island, last year's champs, is still the team to beat but feels that since this year's YanCon Championships will be held at a neutral course, this should help the Redmen. "If the boys play as well as they are capable of playing, they should do quite well."

Frosh Trackmen Second

In last Saturday's freshman tri-meet at White Stadium in Boston, UMass scored 64 points to finish second behind Northeastern University's 79 points. Boston University placed last with 37 points. Coach Ken O'Brian feels that there were "encouraging signs because we took 27 places, two more than Northeastern, which shows our good versatility."

The field events proved to be the most successful as UMass scored 38 points. Peter Natti was tremendous in racking up 15 points all by himself. He won the hammer throw (132 feet, 5 inches) and the shotput (43 feet, 9-1/2 inches), finished second in the discus and third in the javelin. Bill Hackler took first in the high jump by jumping six feet even. Jim Queeny finished second in the javelin, throwing 184 feet, 6 inches, just four feet short of the school's freshman record. Coach O'Brian expects Queeny to break the record soon because in this meet he was throwing into a 40 mile per hour wind, and only fell short by four feet.

Tom Jasmin took first place in the two mile, running it in 10:09. Other scorers included Barney Schneider, second in the shotput and third in the discus; Bob Hoy, fourth in the shotput; Gil Sylvia, fourth in the javelin; Bob Landry, third in the high jump, fourth in the long jump and fourth in the 440 intermediates; Bill Clark second in the 440 intermediates and fourth in the high jump; Allan Johnson third in the long jump; Mark Robinson third in the triple jump; Dennis Busa second in the 100 and 220; Bob Barry third in the 440 intermediates; Steve Levine third in the 440; Sterling Orr fourth in the 440; Dave Sarrette third in the 880 and Jerry Schoen fourth in the 880.

Silent UMass Bats Fall to Tufts, 5-1

Redmen Collect Only Four Hits, Jumbos' Never Forgot"

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

MEDFORD - Redman baseball bats went silent yesterday as Tufts University, remembering a day in Amherst last year, outdid UMass for a 5-1 victory here on a chilly, bitter afternoon.

The visitors, who saw their record drop a notch to 6-4, were able to garner but four hits against Jumbo righties John Caro, who hurled the first six and two-thirds innings, and Roy Bordon, who finished things up.

It's common knowledge that "elephants never forget" and, in Tufts' case, its Jumbos certainly recalled an April afternoon, 1969 at UMass when the Redmen crushed and embarrassed them, 29-0, sending them running back to Medford with their trunks dragging.

And, with this in mind, the Tufters worked hard for this victory, althought it was a slight mistake by the Redmen that allowed the home team to score its winning run.

UMass' opponents had come up with an early marker in the first inning on a Bob Cyboron single, a Jeff Rossman sacrifice and a Rich Giachvetti one-bagger. But it was in the fifth frame that the Jumbos pushed two heart-breakers past the Redmen.

UMass started Lou Colabello had just retired his seventh batter in a row and there were two outs. Things looked good; the score still read 1-0 when Tufts started to fool around with the third base line.

Caro bounced a single off the top of the third base bag, a hit that died 92-odd feet from home plate. Nothing to worry about; Colabello in control with two down. But what happens? Cyboran places a double right on the left field foul line and suddenly there are men on second and third.

At this point, the Jumbos came through with two fortunate scores. A pick-off play was attempted at second but the ball was bobbled and Caro broke for the plate. A hurried throw was sped toward Redman catcher Chuck Newell, but it arrived at the same time as Caro and a tremendous collision resulted.

Newell was knocked unconscious, the ball popped out of his glove and Cyboran followed Caro across the base with Tufts' third run. Newell was taken out of action for proper care and was replaced by Mike Sawyer.

Colabello, who had shown signs of working a good ballgame, became erratic, lasting only an inning and a third more and giving up four walks, a double, a single, a hit batsman and two more runs before being relieved by Redman.

Two walks put Jumbos on first and second with one out in the sixth. A quick double by John Ambrosino brought in the fourth run, although the runner ahead of Ambrosino was nailed when he made a wide turn around third base. A single by winning pitcher Caro rescued Ambrosino from second and closed out Tufts scoring at five.

UMass could muster but one tally and that came in the seventh. Ray Ellerbrook, who was the Redman hitting star with three, doubled home Hosea Kelley who had walked. A brief rally by the visitors in the ninth, featuring two walks with only one out, was quickly quelled by Bordon, who received the heartiest of congratulations from his teammates when he struck out Brian Martin for the tilt's final out.

DIAMOND DUST - Newell, to the surprise of most, rejoined the team in a healthy state for the bus ride home . . . Make no mistake about it, this guy was really wracked . . . The fact that he nearly kept control of the baseball for the third out in that fifth inning is something in itself . . . The weather was crummy . . . The bus ride, with rapid-Robert Allen behind the wheel of his Peter Pan "Doodledoo", was an experience only Redmen athletes who know Bob, could tell one about.

Tennis Opens Spring With HC, AIC Matches

By JOHN SULLIVAN
Sports Editor

UMass tennis cracked open its spring season with matches against Holy Cross last Thursday and American International last Saturday.

In the Crusader affair the Redmen out-pointed their opponents in the singles competition, with the doubles action slated to be completed today at about 4 p.m. versus AIC, singles competition was the order of the day because of the intense cold that pervaded the Boyden tennis courts, and the home team came out on top with an easy 8-0 victory.

The doubles event in Thursday's meet got under way but, for reason of time, was suspended until today. As for the singles, UMass' Mike Katz, Steve Gervickas, Jon Bloom and Jim Bornheim emerged as victors over their HC foes. Redmen who were edged out were Gus Peron and Alan Goldbert.

Gervickas picked up his win in two sets, 6-4 and 6-2, over the Crusaders' Bici. Bloom defeated Carey in three sets, 4-6, 6-2 and 6-1.

Bornheim shaved Schick in his match, in two sets, 6-2 and 6-5. Katz, UMass star and captain, took the best of HC's Young in two sets, 12-10 and 6-2. Kosakowski commented, "In singles Katz did an outstanding job. I think he played as good a match as he has played in four years."

Goldberg lost to Mayotte, 6-2 and 8-6, in two sets. Peron faced off against a person Kosakowski considers "probably the outstanding college tennis player in New England", HC's Hughes, and proceeded to lose in two sets by identical 6-2 scores.

As the doubles play stands, Goldberg and Bloom dropped their first set to Young and Mayotte, and the score is knotted, 3-3, in the second.

In the second doubles match, the UMass combo of Katz-Gervickas is belting the ball back and forth with the Hughes-Carey team from Holy Cross. The match is still in the first set; the score is deuce, 6-5, with still one set to play. Kosakowski points out that, for the Redmen to overtake the Crusaders, they must win this match.

In the third doubles contest, the Peron-Wilder unit lost its first set to the Bier-Schick tandem and, at present, it is a match point against UMass.

While the outcome of the Holy Cross affair was in question, UMass took to the courts Saturday to score an easy 8-0 victory over AIC and earn itself a 1-0 record.

By an agreement with the Yellowjacket coach, only singles competition was held because of the cold weather. AIC simply had no chance against the Redmen, allowing Kosakowski to employ some second stringers.

In quick summary, every UMass guy beat his opponent in two sets, and the scoring went like this: Katz over Call (6-2 and 6-1), Bornheim over Cohen (6-1 and 6-2), Peron over Burnsall (6-1 and 6-4), Goldberg over Abrams (6-1 and 6-2), Bertrand over Jenney (9-7 and 6-1), Deren over Mandel (6-2 and 6-4), Cross over Rice (6-2 and 7-5) and Henrickson over Newfield (6-0 and 6-1).

Northeastern's Depth Provides Redmen with 'Shades of Winter'

Trackmen Nab Ten Firsts But Place 2nd to NU

By EARLE BARROLL
Staff Reporter

Shades of winter track were present at White Stadium on Saturday when the UMass track team took second place in a tri-meet with Northeastern and Boston University. The final point standings stood at NU with 98, UMass with 71, and BU bringing up the rear with a mere 14 points.

With temperatures hovering in the low forties, and with a gusty wind in the face of the competitors, all the times of the runners and the tosses of the weightmen were hampered to an extent. The other shade of winter track occurred in the complexion of the meet as the Redmen were able to amass more first places than their two opponents combined, but were defeated in the final total due to the ability of Northeastern to take the overwhelming majority of second, third and fourth places. As was the case in winter track, this was due to lack of depth.

The exact number of UMass first places was ten, compared to five for NU and two for BU. The Redmen scored 21 places in the meet, whereas the Huskies scored 39 places, and this is where NU picked up its margin of victory.

There were two double winners for the Redmen as Ron Wayne captured the mile and the two-mile and Gerry Spellman won both hurdle events, the 120 highs and the 440 intermediates. Wayne's times of 4:42 and 9.56 for the mile and deuce were due to the weather conditions and the tactical type races that were run in the two events. Spellman started where he left off in the winter by running two very strong hurdle races.

Eddie Acaro had an outstanding day in taking a first in the hammer throw and two seconds coming in the shot put and the discus. Acaro came on strong at the end of the winter season and, after Saturday's performance, it appears that he is in for a good spring season.

On the whole the weightmen were the biggest area of improvement for the Redmen as they scored 14 points to keep UMass in the meet through the weight events.

Ed Shaughnessey led a one-two finish for UMass in the high jump. Both he and Cal Carpenter jumped 6'2, with Shaughnessey winning on fewer misses.

Dave Canterbury won the triple jump with a leap of 41'10 1/2. For Canterbury this was his first jumping competition of the track year as he didn't jump indoors.

In the 100-yard dash, Mayo ran a solo and won in the time of 10.6 seconds, into the teeth of a strong wind. The Redmen were performing in this event without the services of Ron Harris, who sustained a hairline fracture in his hip earlier in the week and Dave Marble, who is just recovering from a hamstring pull. During indoor Mayo, Harris and Marble could be counted on for a sweep, but Mayo had to run this race on his own, thus NU was able to take second and third places.

Dave Evans came from behind to win the 880 in the time of 1:58.1. Northeastern set out on making this a tactical race, but Evans took the upper hand on the final straightaway and foiled the plans of the NU runners.

The final UMass victory came in the mile relay as Spellman, Bill Donaldson, Arnie Morse and Jack Olsen combined for a time of 3:34.6.

Coach O'Brien pointed to the performance of Olsen in both the relay and the 440 as the pleasant surprise of the meet as this was Olsen's first varsity track performance. Before anchoring the victorious mile relay team, Olsen ran a 52.9 second, 440 which was good enough for a fourth place finish in a field dominated by the strong NU quarter milers.

This Saturday the Redmen travel to Newton for the annual Boston College Relays. With the fine individual performances turned in over this past weekend, UMass can be rated as one of the favorites for the team title.

UM's Cooney Takes First In 'Lifting'

Freshman Doug Cooney travelled to Lawrence, Mass. last Saturday to compete in the Junior New England Olympic Weight - lifting Championships.

Cooney pressed in succession 230 lbs., 240 lbs. and 250 lbs. to end up with the second highest press of the entire contest. In the snatch Cooney opened with an easy 200 lbs. He missed his initial attempt with 215 lbs. but came back to make a strong success with it on his third attempt. The clean and jerk virtually put him out of reach of his opponents as he made in turn 255 lbs., 270 lbs and finally, 285 lbs, for a strong 750 lb. total. This total earned Conney first place in the middle heavyweight division (198-1/4 lb.).

Holzman Voted Tops

NEW YORK (AP) - Holzman accepted with modesty the news that he had been named Coach of the Year in the National Basketball Association Monday in the eighth annual poll of sports writers.

"I never expected this," said the coach of the New York Knickerbockers. "I'm sure there were several other guys who deserved it. I'm honored but you have to remember that it was the team that really did it."

The 49-year-old Holzman, who now serves as both coach and general manager of the Knicks, received 17 votes from the 40-man committee. Joe Mullaney of the Los Angeles Lakers was runnerup with nine.

Richie Guerin of Atlanta and Larry Costello of Milwaukee, each received five votes. Dick Motta of the Chicago Bulls had three and Lenny Wilkens of Seattle one.

Apollo 13 Rocket Fire To Speed Up Splashdown

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) Three American astronauts spurred their hobbled spaceship ahead with a burst of rocket power Tuesday to hurry them home before their vital and already short supplies of water, oxygen and electricity run out.

They borrowed the rocket power from the prime engine of their little moon lander. For Apollo 13 pilots James A. Lovell Jr., Fred W. Haise Jr., and Jack L. Swigert it means cutting their flight time by ten hours.

"Shutdown," called Lovell at 9:44 p.m. EST as the engine cut off. "Now we want to power down as soon as possible."

The firing came with the spacecraft on the way home, 6,555 miles from the moon and nearly a quarter-million miles from earth. They were on direct course for a 12:18 p.m. EST splashdown Friday in the Pacific.

Meanwhile experts on the ground may have zeroed in on what caused the sudden loss of oxygen Monday night and the subsequent failure of electricity and water producing fuel cells.

The best theory, they said was that there was a short circuit in the supercold oxygen storage tank allowing pressures to build up over 1500 pounds per square inch and causing the tank to rupture.

This would explain the explosion heard by the astronauts that set off all their troubles Tuesday night.

Little more than 1 1/2 hours before the rocket firing, they emerged from their only pass behind the moon, their only close-up view of the surface they had hoped to explore. For almost 40 minutes, blocked from earth by the lunar surface, they were out of contact.

When they came out at 7:46 p.m. EST, they were on a return course of their abbreviated journey, heading for a splashdown in the Pacific Ocean about 300 miles south-southeast of Samoa on Friday at about 12:18 p.m. EST.

Even the 10-hour saving is an advantage to the weary, coverall-clad astronauts. It saves 10 hours usage of water, oxygen and electricity. They are still a quarter of a million miles from home and safety, and surviving on the life system of the little moon lander Aquarius that was to have taken them to the first exploration of the lunar highlands.

That objective blew up Monday night with a lost oxygen supply and a failing power system. Said one of the astronauts from space Tuesday: "I'm afraid this is going to be the last moon mission for a long time."

But officials at the Space Center were not so sure. Even though they don't know what caused the trouble in the oxygen supply and likely never will know for sure, they were reluctant to forecast any delays in the Apollo schedule.

It is more important to bring the men home safely, officials said. They have created a high-level committee to meet every eight hours and review the flight's immediate past and future.

There is a small chance of trouble on Friday. Although the weather forecast in the recovery area is currently good, there is the building and ominous shadow of tropical storm Helen nearby, 40 knot winds at her heart.

The mission achieved its only scientific accomplishment Tuesday amid all its trouble. The third stage of the mighty Saturn 5 rocket slammed into the lunar surface with the force of 11 tons of TNT and shook the seismometer left there by Apollo 12. The experiment was designed to tell scientists something more about the structure of the moon's interior.

Told of the impact, Lovell said tightly, "Well, at least something worked on this flight."

Crewmate Haise added from the little lunar lander, "I'm glad we didn't have a LM lunar module impact, too."

Moral Equivalent of War Needed To Solve Social, Urban Problems

One of America's foremost experts on racial problems spoke to several hundred students in the Student Union Ballroom last night and declared that the United States "must address itself to a moral equivalent of war" and solve the country's social and urban problems.

Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, educator, psychologist and author (Dark Ghetto and Desegregation: An Appraisal of the Evidence) delivered the first of the third annual Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Lecture Series. Clark has been called "the Scholar of the Civil Right Movement."

In his opening remarks, Dr. Clark said of the late King that, "I cannot accept the fact that he is no longer with us. He was one of the finest human beings I have had the pleasure to know. He was one of those wonderful human beings who stand up and fight against injustices and human dignity, transcending partisanship of any kind."

According to Dr. Clark, America is the strongest nation in the world yet is confronted with an "embarrassment," 30 million of its people subjected to a "life of squalor, sub-human levels of existence." This is intolerable because it is remedial. He stated that as long as these problems are given lesser priority than such efforts as the Vietnam war there will be continuing disruptions and social unrest.

The guest lecturer said that politicians such as President Nixon and Vice-President Agnew are playing with the emotions of the people for political reasons and declared them "profoundly subversive."

Clark then called for America's genius and committment to be mobilized for (1) elimination of poverty; (2) elimination of slums (which he termed as "institutionalized forms of cruelty); and (3) "revitalization" of the public education system so that the "human beings coming out of it will be soldiers in the ongoing war" of America's problems. He declared that America can literally "transform its cities into monuments of human respect."

Come Together Proposals Take Shape for Action

By BILL WOODS
Staff Reporter

To say that the University's "Come Together" experience of April 10-11 was just a beginning is definitely an understatement. This fact was in evidence at a meeting last night of some fifty people, who met to try to synthesize the proposals generated at last weekend's session. The meeting started with the examination of a 27 page handout which attempted to give some sort of organization to the mass of proposals.

The handout grouped the proposals into "action categories" according to what might be the best way to insure that the ideas would become reality. Some proposals it was decided, would be best handled by a community referendum, while others could be implemented by individual departments, and still others would require additional study.

Because of the many problems associated with a referendum including educating the community or the specific issues, interpreting the results, and apathy, it was thought best to limit the May 7 referendum, to grade reform, semester organization, academic and faculty issues, war complicity, or other similar issues which could accurately gauge community support.

It was decided that issues like specific courses, class scheduling the freshman experience or registration problems should be handled either by departments or in special committees which would meet during the summer.

After hashing over the basic issues of the May 7 referendum, the larger group then divided into 5 committees: 1) People to draw up the actual questions of the May 7 referendum 2) People to educate the community on the issues 3) People to deal with the proposals not on the referendum. 4) Summer continuation 5) Coordination of the "Movement" to insure communication among all the members.

Piccolo, Hollands Accepted Senate Rejects Sigelman

The Student Senate last night struck the name of Nelson Sigelman, a candidate for presidency of the class of '73, from the ballot because of forged names on his papers.

In defense, Sigelman stated that immediately before the filing deadline he realized he was three signatures short of the required number, and supplied the names of friends whom he was sure would give him their vote (his roommate, a fraternity brother, and a friend in his dorm).

By a vote of 23-29-10 however, the motion made not to allow his name on the ballot, was passed.

On the recent controversy over ineligibility of nomination papers for three others seeking class offices, the Senate accepted those papers of Joseph Piccolo (candidate for President, class of 1971) and Mary Hollands (candidate for Treasurer, class of 1972).

Both sets of nomination sheets were filed after the official deadline, but valid reasons (misprinted deadline date in the Collegian, etc.) were given for the delays.

Asked by Senator Levine for intervention (a statement) from the chair concerning the scheduling of exams on April 15 (Moratorium Strike), President Olken said she would make the proper recommendations to the Discipline Board.

President Olken, speaking in favor of the bill, explained that athletic scholarships come primarily from ticket returns and would not be hurt by using the said $50,000 for other purposes. The bill passed, allowing the money to be spent for repairs and services in dormitories.

Donahue Calls For War Vote in November

by ROBERT NORTHSHIELD
Staff Reporter

On the eve of the third major day of protest against the Vietnam War, Massachusetts Senate President Maurice Donahue (D-Holyoke) is filing a measure to the General Court which would place on referendum in November the question of United States involvement in Southeast Asia.

Donahue, an unannounced candidate for Governor, will seek to have placed on the November ballot the following question to be voted on by Massachusetts residents: DO YOU FAVOR THE IMMEDIATE WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. TROOPS FROM SOUTHEAST ASIA?

The measure, which must be passed by both houses of legislature and the Governor before it is placed on the ballot, will, Donahue says, "give Massachusetts people a clearcut opportunity to judge U.S. involvement in this war."

Senator Donahue, in strong statement against the war, continued, "I am dissatisfied with the Nixon administration's failure to end the folly of American involvement in Southeast Asia. I am dissatisfied with the present pace of troop withdrawal and Vietnamization policies that provide little concrete evidence of cessation of armed hostilities."

"In my opinion, direct termination of our involvement is the only way to end this war which has only meant disaster for this country, and destroys any possibility of resolving domestic problems which are the source of so much division in our country."

Donahue also scored the Nixon administration for its failure to explain the extent of U.S. involvement in Laos and other bordering areas.

Donahue has spoken out against the war on previous occasions. Most notable was in conjunction with the October 15 Moratorium when he set down the first foundations of the recently enacted Shea Bill which prohibits Massachusetts citizens from fighting in an undeclared war.

Petition Drive Termed "Success" Leaders Estimate 8000 at Rally

As Student Mobilization Committee members closed the strike petitions tables around campus last night they estimated that nearly 3500 students have pledged to halt their normal activities and to participate in Moratorium activities today.

This makes the April 15th signature drive one of the most successful petitions ever circulated on campus.

UMass MOBE spokesmen said last night they expect an additional 5000 students to attend morning classes and then to participate in the afternoon rallies today. They also anticipate a large turnout from Western Massachusetts residents.

Stadium, Town Rallies Slated As UMass Joins U.S. Protest

By MARK SILVERMAN
Managing Editor

Thousands of Western Massachusetts residents are expected to converge on Amherst and the University today for the April 15th Moratorium-Strike against the war in Southeast Asia.

The University Mobilization Committee, working with the Connecticut Valley Anti-War Coalition, is sponsoring two afternoon rallies, one at Alumni Stadium and one on the Amherst Common. These events highlight a week of low key anti-war activity in town.

Nearly 3500 UMass students have signed pledges to strike all their classes today, and campus MOBE spokesmen yesterday estimated that an additional 5000 members of the University community will probably participate in this afternoon's activities.

The 1:30 rally, which marks the first time the Stadium has been used for a non-athletic event besides Commencement, will include speakers from members of various organizations involved in the anti-war movement.

Amherst College historian Henry Steele Commanger will deliver the key-note address on the war and on war protest from an historical perspective.

Other stadium speakers include poet Denise Levertow, Socialist Party candidate for Attorney General Toba Singer, UMass SDS member Judy Glass, Vietnam Veteran Peter Fossel, and two students from Springfield College.

Commanger will speak again at the Amherst Common rally, which is scheduled to begin at 4:00 and students from the other valley colleges are expected to turn out for this event.

Joining Commanger at the Common will be an active-duty G.I. whose name has not as yet been released, UMass administrator John Childs, Welfare Rights worker Barbara Revara, electrical union member Carl Chiaretto and representatives from the Valley Peace Center.

A series of small rallies are planned for this morning which, according to MOBE spokesmen, "should generate a lot of enthusiasm for the afternoon rallies."

Noon meetings in all four University residential areas will break up and march to the Stadium at 1:00, and a major rally at the pond for commuters at noon will feature "Roxy", a band currently playing at the Tea Party in Boston.

Moratorium activities will continue tomorrow night with the Orchard Hill "Festival of Light."

Earlier in the week a number of students canvassed in Amherst, passing out leaflets and gaining strike pledges and support for today's major rallies. Several students staged guerilla theatre productions Monday and yesterday to build interest in today's activities on campus.

The other focus for anti-war activity in New England today is Boston, according to MOBE members. That city will be the scene for a major rally on the Boston Common sponsored by 10 different anti-war groups, and featuring State Representative James Shea (sponsor of the anti-war bill), Georgia State Representative Julian Bond, several other speakers from political groups and a number of entertainers, including the Boston cast of the musical "Hair."

Boston area colleges are planning separate demonstrations this morning, and plans call for these to break off into marches to the Common Rally by late morning, a plan similar to the October Moratorium.

The Vietnam Moratorium Committee, essentially the same organization which sponsored previous Anti-War days of protest this year, has received the support of 25 Senators and Congressmen from across the nation. No New England legislators appear on the Committee's list of Senators and Congressmen supporting the Moratorium.

Originally organized as a "prayer for peace" day, the April 15th protest has grown into a broadly based series of local rallies, similar to the October 15th Moratorium, because of what national committee leader Sam Brown calls, "A new sense of urgency in the country."

"People are becoming increasingly dissatisfied with the Administration's withdrawal policy . . . it seems as though the war will just drag on and spread gradually throughout the rest of Southeast Asia," he said.

Brown continued, "And people are focusing on the relationship of the War in Vietnam to the economic crisis facing the country . . . inflation, high taxes and a curtailment of public services are in large part the result of this cruel and senseless war."

In addition to rallies across the nation today, the National Committee has also sponsored a three day fast, which began Monday and which has created what Brown terms, "A solid week of protest against the war which was supposed to be ended a long time ago, but which just continues with no end in sight."

Court Denies Press Kopechne Transcript

BOSTON (AP) - A federal judge today issued a temporary injunction barring distribution to news media, scheduled Wednesday, of the transcript and judge's report on the inquest into the death of Mary Jo Kopechne.

Judge Andrew A. Caffrey acted in U. S. District Court a few minutes after the 1 p.m. deadline he set for filing of briefs in the suit by a professional court stenographer.

The stenographer, Sidney R Lipman, contended that he has sole right to reproduce and sell copies of the 764-page transcript and that plans of the clerk of Suffolk Superior Court to issue the documents Wednesday would harm him financially.

There was no immediate indication when Judge Caffrey would hold further hearings on Lipman's move.

The Superior Court Clerk, Edward V. Keting, had contracted with Xerox Corp. to reproduce the documents, and planned to issue them to news media who had ordered them at $75 apiece.

The court order was the latest in the legal tangles of the case of Miss Kopechne, who was found dead in the car of Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., last July 19, after it overturned into a Chappaquiddick Island pond.

Nixon Names Blackman To Supreme Court Post

WASHINGTON (AP) - Judge Harry A. Blackmun of Minnesota was named Tuesday by President Nixon to fill the much-fought-over Supreme Court vacancy which is now nearly a yer old.

The appointment, announced by presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler some hours after it had become known unofficially, is Nixon's third effort to fill the long-vacant seat.

Earlier, two Southern jurists were denied confirmation by the Senate. And after his second rebuff last week Nixon said he would not name another Southerner in his quest for a so-called strict constructionist but would look elsewhere for a conservative nominee because he believes the present Senate will not accept a Southerner. Several senators denied this.

Ziegler told reporters the 61-year-old member of the 8th U. S. Court of Appeals was selected from a group of six possibilities. The press secretary said that in contrast to the procedure on the two earlier appointments the President conferred in person with Blackmun before nominating him.

Ziegler continued:

"The President said he was highly impressed with Judge Blackmun's personal qualities and that he was highly impressed when he studied the judicial record. He considers Judge Blackmun to be a strict constructionist."

Although Blackmun is a longtime, close personal friend of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, Ziegler said Burger made no recommendation for Blackmun's appointment. But the chief justice was consulted on the appointee's record, Ziegler said.

The Senate Judiciary Committee plans to start public herings a week after the nomination is submitted formally to the Senate.

If no major opposition develops, it is likely that committee and floor votes will come quickly so that the court can be restored to its normal complement of nine justices.

Its present eight-man makeup reportedly has prevented decisions on some major pending cases because the justices are evenly divided, four and four.

Republican Senate leaders and GOP members of the Senate Judiciary Committee met for about an hour Tuesday with Deputy Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst and were briefed on the nominee selected by the President.

Youths Protest Panther Trial

BOSTON (AP) - About 2,000 youths staged a march through traffic-clogged downtown streets Tuesday afternoon to protest the trial of Bobby Seale, chairman of the Black Panther Party, which is about to get underway in New Haven, Conn.

Speeches at Boston Police headquarters climaxed the downtown march. Helmeted police officers came out into the streets when the youths attempted to remove an American flag from a pole in front of the station, but there was no violence.

Robert S. Wooton, 26, of the Roxbury section was arrested and charged with breach of the peace in connection with the flag incident, police said.

The demonstrators marched from the police station to Boston University, about 20 blocks away and dispersed. Some of them tossed rocks through plate glass windows at the First National Bank, and the National Cash Register Company at Kenmore Square.

Howard Zinn, a political science professor at Boston University, told the crowd at the police station that the U. S. is a "police state" because, he said, police enter the homes of the poor without regard for justice.

He said "police are victims of he people in power who give them orders' ' to treat citizens badly. Zinn urged that the police perform heir duties without armament.

Sargent Unveils Health Plan

BOSTON (AP) - Gov. Francis W. Sargent unveiled a new health care delivery system Tuesday which he says will be the first in the nation to combine the resources of the state and private industry to provide health care for all without regard to whether a person is able to pay.

Dr. Leonard Cronkhite, chairman of a committee that is to put the plan into operation and the architect of the plan, said one prototype will be in operation in Boston by October with others to follow at four month intervals.

Cronkhite said the plan will center around a new non-profit corporation which will direct small neighborhood centers that are to be open 24 hours a day and serve the health needs of about 15,000 persons.

A number of these neighborhood health centers, in turn, will look to larger hospitals to provide the patients with specialized care and treatment. The major Boston hospitals have pledged cooperation in providing medical care for the patients who need highly specialized treatment.

Saturday March to Protest Vernon, Vt. Nuclear Plant

The "future victims" of a nuclear power plant under construction in Vernon, Vermont will be honored in a planned march on Saturday, April 18. The march will start at the site of the plant on the Connecticut River and will proceed to the Brattleboro Common where a memorial service will be held. A ladies' group in Putney is organizing the march and a large crowd is expected to help them protest.

The power plant is being constructed by several privately owned Vermont power companies and is funded in large part by the Federal government. Several years ago, the Atomic Energy Commission announced plans to make New England and New York "guinea pigs" for atomic power plants. Presently there are two plants in operation in New England. The AEC does have a list of stringent regulations to be followed during the construction of these plants and the Vernon plant has been charged with violating some of the more basic ones. These violations precipitated Saturday's demonstration.

Professors David Inglis and Gerald Peterson of the UMass Physics Department outlined some of the problems connected with the Vernon plant. First, AEC regulations require a public hearing before the townspeople before the plant can be built. There was a hearing, but opponents of the plan were not given time to speak. Secondly, the plant must be located at least 28 miles from a town with a population of over 28,000. Vernon is located within 28 miles of Amherst, which has a studen population of 18,000.

Besides the obvious legal violations, the plant would contribute greatly to the pollution of the Connecticut Valley. It would not be a blatant smoky-sky type of pollution but a much more insidious type. Prof. Inglis claims that at least one death a year can be expected from the radiation emitted by the plant. Most of this radiation will go into the sky to come down elsewhere, but, as Prof. Inglis puts it "If you don't know who it is who got hurt, is it OK to hurt him, or not?" The ratiation emitted by the plant is capable of causing cancer, birth defects, and, in case of a serious accident involving nuclear fuels, could destroy life over a widespread area.

The proponents of the Vernon plant claim that the pollution from the plant will eventually go into the higher atmosphere and become harmless. But studies on the problem show that the prevailing southerly winds in the area will blow the pollution right over Brattleboro before it has a chance to dissipate. In any case, the effects of the plant won't be felt too seriously locally, but more on a worldwide scale. The people building the plant are also taking a lot of responsibility into their own hands by deciding that they can pollute the air and the river. Prof. Inglis stressed that what the AEC presents to explain the safety of the plant "just isn't the kind of thing to prove it's safe."

The marchers will assemble at 8:30 at the entrance to the parking lot of the plant. They will then walk to the Brattleboro Common, seven miles away. At 11:30 the memorial service for the "future victims" will be held. Buses will be provided for any students wishing to help in the demonstration. In Prof. Inglis' words, "This march is a denial of the claim of the people who are building the plant that it is, among other things, safe."

Recent Research Shows Campus Protest on Rise

CHICAGO (CPS) - "Major incidents" of campus protest have occurred at the rate of one a day during the first quarter of 1970, according to the Urban Research Corporation.

Although some consider this academic year more calm than last, the statistics show that 92 campuses experienced major unrest this winter compared to 88 during the same period last year.

The protests were "not significantly less violent" than last year, nor did they draw fewer participants, according to John Naisbitt, president of Urban Research.

He said violence occurred in 23 per cent of this year's winter's protests and 20 per cent of last year's.

The major issues have been minority recognition, quality of student life, greater student voice in decision making, and the war and military. The environment has not yet been a major source of protest.

The largest number of protests have taken place in Ohio, New York, Michigan, Massachusetts and California, with every section of the country experiencing some protest.

Weekend Charity Drive To Benefit Heart Fund

A 24-hour outdoor rock festival will highlight this year's "Bounce for Beats" Heart Fund Charity Drive to be held this weekend in Hadley and Amherst. Sigma Alpha Mu fraternity is sponsoring "Bounce for Beats" as its annual service project.

Sixteen bands from the East Coast, including Fat, Flight, Prog, Quarry, Factory, Steel Snappers, Cin, Rail, Stone River, and Breckinridge, have donated their time to play Friday night through Saturday afternoon for the Heart Fund Drive.

The brothers of SAM will introduce the charity drive Thursday from 1 - 5 p.m. at the Southwest Little Hatch and Friday from 9 - 5 outside the Student Union. A continuously bouncing basketball is the trademark of the "Bounce for Beats" effort.

The official opening of the Drive will be Friday at 6 p.m. at the Hadley Shopping Center. Opening ceremonies with representing dignitaries from the town of Hadley and the Heart Fund will attend.

At 11 p.m., "Bounce for Beats" will move from the shopping center to the athletic fields near Alumni Stadium. Sixteen bands will provide entertainment through the night and continue until 6 p.m. Saturday. A food shop will be open throughout the music marathon.

SAM asks that everyone "pray for unrain" so that the festival can present super sounds to a large audience and that the Heart Fund Charity Drive be a success. In case of rain, curtailed festivities will be held at the shopping center and the little Hatch.

Bob Wurzel and Dave Annis, coordinators of this year's drive, invite students and area residents to enjoy and contribute to "Bounce for Beats."

Legalize Marijuana Says Doctor Survey

A survey of more than 600 drug researchers, psychologists, and physicians revealed a high percentage of them believe marijuana should be as available as alcohol to the public.

However, a majority of those surveyed felt LSD should be legally available only for research purposes. Very few said psychedelic drugs should be available by prescription.

The findings also revealed a sharp difference of opinion on the effects of marijuana use between researchers familiar with psychedelic drugs and practicing physicians and psychologists.

The survey appears in the April issue of the magazine PSYCHOLOGY TODAY. It is authored by Dr. Walter Houston Clark of Newton Theological Seminary in Andover, Mass. Dr. Clark found:

"Supervised use of marijuana is rated as very safe by 58 per cent of the researchers but by only 39 per cent of the professionals. However, even the researchers are far from unanimous about the safety of unsupervised use of marijuana: only 19 per cent of the researchers and 10 per cent of the professionals regard it as 'very safe' ".

The author added, "Professionals are much likelier than researchers to think that unsupervised use of marijuana is a danger to the user's mental health. Forty percent of the researchers and 71 percent of the professionals regard the unsupervised use of LSD as very dangerous to mental health."

The magazine surveyed 127 professionals having first-hand knowledge of drug research and 490 physicians, psychologists, and psychiatrists who have not done such research.

Volunteer Fire Dept. Aids Town Fire Defense System

By WILLIAM WOODS
Staff Reporter

For the past fourteen years, a small group of students has filled a vital gap in the town and campus fire defense system, the UMass Volunteer Fire Department. They work as an auxiliary unit of the Amherst Fire Department.

The volunteers are currently solely responsible for manning and operating two engine companies, one in the North Amherst Station and one in the Central Fire Station. The town call force mans the ladder truck. The two remaining engines and the ambulance are handled by regular town firefighters.

The UMass group, which presently has twenty-one members, is on call twenty-four hours a day via a system which includes town fire horns, the campus steam whistle and, most important, small radios which they carry with them at all times.

Responsibilities of the unit include responding to all box alarms at the University, at Amherst College and in the town. They also provide fire prevention officers at football and basketball games, concerts and other events on campus. Each year the members sponsor a Fire Prevention Week display.

Together with the University Fire and Safety Officer, Edmund Goetzel, the students conduct fire drills and inspections in the dorms and buildings on campus.

April has been a busy month thus far for the volunteers. They have responded to eight box alarms including a house fire on East Hadley Road, a kitchen fire and two grass fires. Their largest fire to date this year was a conflagration at the Restaurant On The Green on Main Street which caused over $100,000 damage.

All candidates for the force undergo an intensive eight to ten week training and probationary period supervised by Chief John Doherty of the Amherst Fire Department. The training includes learning how to operate the trucks, first aid, firefighting skills and drills such as burning a barn to simulate actual fire conditions. All trainees, however, participate at all fire calls as well as at drills.

Volunteers fight a fire at the Restaurant On The Green. The UMass Voluntary fire department now has the sole responsibility of manning and operating two engine companies.

The present membership includes both graduate and undergraduate students, although there is a large contingent from the class of 1971 and the unit faces a large turnover next year. Any students, particularly freshmen, who are interested in the department may contact the volunteers in their office in 107 Chadbourne House.

All members are eligible to receive all-campus parking privileges and presenting about one-half of the force is on a work-study program with the Amherst Fire Department.

The outlook for the future sees increased responsibility for the force as the town and the University continue to grow. The town is currently awarding a contract for a $38,000, 1000-gallon-per-minute pumper which is tentatively scheduled to be manned by the students when it arrives in the fall.

Draft Committee to Submit Proposals

By RICHARD LANE
Senior Reporter

Meeting in Berkshire Dining Commons Friday morning, four members of the Draft and Manpower Channelling Committee made eight proposals on the draft. Members of the Committee are Jack Weston (UMass faculty member and draft coinselor), Jean Williams (Valley Peace Center), Walter Mullen (Chairman of the Class of 70 Draft Committee) and Jim LaMaMacchia (member of the University Mobe Committee).

Some of the proposals to be presented to John Hunt of the English department are:

1. We request that the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate pass a resolution condemning any form of conscription.
2. Since the present official University booklet on the draft ("Facts on Selective Service and the Student") is oriented toward the providing fodder for the war machine instead of informing students of all their rights, we require that this booklet be withdrawn immediately and require that a new University booklet be prepared.
3. Since the present "Veterans Coordinator" in the Placement and Guidance Office (who now handles all Selective Service matters) seems to represent exclusively the interests of Selective Service, we require that he be replaced by one or more full-time trained draft counselors whose duty will be to protect the rights of students and inform them of all alternatives.
4. We require that draft counseling and business related to and communication with Selective Service be transferred from Placement and Guidance to the Office of Student Affairs.
5. We require that the University give no information to Selective Service System except that which is requested by the individual student.
6. We require that active draft counseling be a structural and prominent part of summer orientation for entering freshmen.
7. We require that at least one student or counselor or faculty resident from each dorm attend a substantial workshop

Art—The Visual Language

The Art Department and the Fine Arts Council of the University of Massachusetts will present a series of programs during the first two weeks of April dealing with the arts as a visual language. The series will explore visual literacy and sensory perception as learning devices for the arts, general education, and environmental and cultural studies.

The final two programs this week will emphasize new roles for the arts in education. On Tuesday, April 14th, Dr. Daniel Jordan of the University of Massachusetts School of Education will speak on the arts and early childhood education. He will demonstrate the use of non-verbal techniques such as music as learning devices. Donald Brigham, director of the interdisciplinary program in visual learning in Attleboro, Massachusetts, will discuss his widely acclaimed program on Thursday, April 16th. Mr. Brigham's program will be preceded in the afternoon by a seminar workshop in visual education. This will feature the Attleboro program and the Pelham Elementary School of Amherst project which is developing sensory education as an adjunct to the dominant verbal methodology used in most schools. The Pelham program is directed by Sidney Poritz of the University of Massachusetts Art Department. The complete program schedule is as follows:

"Collective Bargaining on Campus" To Be Topic of Economics Lecture

Professor Timothy Bornstein, of the UMass Business Law Department, will deliver a lecture tomorrow evening, 8:00 p.m. in Herter 231, on the relevance of collective bargaining to college life.

The lecture is being sponsored by the Economics Liason Committee, an ambitious group of Undergraduate Economics majors, which has provided a number of lectures and discussions to help inform the university community of the importance of Economics in our lives today.

In recent weeks, labor disputes have dominated the news and the public has, as a result, become more aware of the methods used in attempting to end strikes and work slow-downs. It will be surprising, however, for many to learn that these same problems are afflicting college campuses throughout the U. S. and many of the same remedies used to end strikes will have to be applied to campus problems.

To deal with this issue in depth, the E.L.C. has been fortunate in finding a professor on this campus who is an expert in the field of labor. Professor Tim Bornstein, of the Business Law Department at UMass, was former assistant to the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board in Washington. Having been appointed under a Democratic Administration, he left his position when a Republican administration came in. However, he still is a key consultant for the N.L.R.B.

On Wednesday evening, Prof. Bornstein will apply his vast knowledge of labor problems to the issue of "Collective Bargaining on Campus". He will deal with both white and blue-collar relationships with college administrations, as well as the role that collective bargaining will play in student - administration problems. Prof. Bornstein will attempt to answer such questions as: How are the laws changing with respect to the rights of students in their academic and social demands.

The lecture is strongly recommended for all Business, Economics, Government, Sociology, and Labor majors. There is no admission charge.

April 10-11 Group Proposes Structural, Course Changes

By NANCY HIRSH
Staff Reporter

Professor John Nelson and approximately 50 students met to discuss Academic Freedom as part of the UMass student-faculty Class Moratorium, April 10-11. They met along with 68 other groups to "generate ideas to end apathy."

Pertaining to the number of semesters offered each year, the group proposed that school be open year-round, with four full semesters of three months each, and a week's vacation in-between. A student could go any semester, with a minimum of 2 a year.

Under this new system, as one student pointed out, "There would be a lot more jobs for kids who have to work. The University would be open a lot more and would be less crowded. You could break instead of dropping out if school gets to you."

The group proposed the elimination of University core requirements, to be replaced by department requirements.

It was suggested that more beginning courses be interdisciplinary, and less technical. The group agreed there should be more appreciation courses--like Botany 101.

To meet these and other group proposals, the need was shown for more faculty, more relevant courses, more relevant requirements, and a closer individual counselling program.

This all means more work and more money. But, as Professor Nelson said, "A great many people are unhappy...they feel essentially passive to the education process."

Visiting Prof Named to Post

Harold C. Lyon, Jr., 34, formerly Assistant Deputy U.S. Commissioner of Education, has been named Acting Deputy Associate Commissioner for a new Bureau of Libraries and Educational Technology in the U. S. Office of Education.

Mr. Lyon is returning to the Office of Education after a one year leave of absence during which he held the Horace Mann chair at the University of Massachusetts (Amherst).

Problems Facing Transfers Topic of Weekend Meeting

By PETER BRUELL
Staff Reporter

Residential living, social interaction, financial aid and other problems experienced by transfer students, were among topics discussed during the "Transfer Student Experience at UMass." The program, coordinated by Mr. Ernie Beals, an Assistant Dean of Admissions, was part of the April 10 - 11 "Come Together".

According to Mr. Beals, UMass accepts almost exclusively transfers who have completed a minimum of two years at another college. There are two reasons for this: (1) the UMass "core" courses which involve the first two years of college are overcrowded, and the acceptance of one-year transfers would only complicate the overcrowding problem, and (2) admitting students from two-year schools before the completion of two academic years, would "ruin the system of the two-year colleges".

The group proposed an April 16 meeting with Mr. Beals to initiate action on the development of a "transfer handbook", specifically designed to assist a new entering transfer student on existing University conditions, policies, and procedures.

A Clean Fight

Anti-Pollution Group To Picket Louis' Foods

A group of concerned students and faculty have formed a new front in the fight against pollution. The Student Organization Against Pollution, also called the SOAP Commandos, is currently concerned with the sale of commerical laundry detergents containing phosphates which pollute the nation's rivers.

The SOAP Commandos approached Wally Vincent, owner of Louis' Foods, yesterday morning, asking that he discontinue the sale of phosphated detergents. Mr. Vincent refused. The SOAP Commandos will begin leafletting outside Louis' this Thursday afternoon at 4 to inform local housewives and students shopping there of the harmful effects of phosphated soaps, and ask that they buy brands not containing phosphates.

SOAP Commandos, an affiliate of CEQ, are organizing now to "expand ecology action tactics," in the words of one of its members.

The next meeting of SOAP will be Tuesday, April 21, at 3:30 p.m. in the Berkshire Clubroom. New members are welcome to come to this meeting, where plans for Earth Day action will be decided. Anyone wishing more information may contact John Gillespie at 6-7092 or Earl Katz at 6-5152.

The obvious fact that a third nationwide moratorium on the Vietnam War is necessary, we think, says something about the effectiveness of this activity. If the intention of people supporting and participating in the moratorium is to collectively express opposition to the war, then the moratorium will probably be successful. But if the intention is to do something about bringing the war to an end, then this moratorium will fail, as the others have failed.

The present administration has made only token committment to ending the war. War has seeped into Cambodia and Laos, and, coincidently, there have been other news events that coincided with past and present Moratoria such as nationalistic "spectacular lunar ventures." In short, the administration is ignoring the people who are activily upset over the Southeast Asia fiasco.

We support the Moratorium and today's strike. We oppose the War in Vietnam. But we feel that stronger and more effective measures have to be taken to end the war. A large number of Senators and representatives will be up for re-election in November. It is not too late to apply collective pressure and put someone in a government position who feels the same way about the war as you do, and who is willing to do something about it.

The Leotard Mardi-Gras. Part Two

If you remember in the first episode Henry began to take out his road forker to inseminate the latent earthquake beneath the highway when Maudlin Camp the batboy came on the scene and hypnotised Henry to lie in the road forker's path so he could run him over and ride off and smash the energy system on Rubb Hill that separates the two peacefully coexisting societies and become king over the godless . . .

Henry down between the two front wheels . . . mumbles something like "I can't see!" Maudlin revs up the engine . . . then for the gas! suden-atin suden-atin goes the engine, cof cof cof goes Maudlin . . . he is choking on carbon monoxide . . . he didn't remember what mother and daddy had told him: never start a car in a salt mine . . . the bad air had no way to escape. The gas has stopped and the smoke is lifting but there is no way for it to get out. Maudlin is turning blue with his unconscious head on the steering wheel and Henry is all right . . . the hypnosis put him in a state of suspended animation temporarily. A leper has walked in looking at the forker and the two nitwits as if the whole thing is a pop art exhibit that you put on your front lawn next to the flamingo. The leper looks then bends down, snaps his finger which falls off which wakens Henry and asks him for a dime so he can use the pay toilet at the other end of the room. "Sure!" says Henry . . . "and you just saved the fate of the free world for everyone by this slaphappy circumstance. . . good luck!" . . . The leper runs off screaming through the salt mine and runs into a phone booth where a couple are engaged in a duet long - distance conversation . . . "Yes, book a flight for two to South Africa at once and speak to Dr. Barnard, would you . . . me and Yoko are swapping valentines."

Meanwhile: Henry has not a moment to lose. He cannot be late for the entire Karma district will sink into Oblivion #532 . . . private subterranean property. He has gotten up off the ground, wrapped the bluefaced Maudlin Camp in a susan spotless disposo-bag, and takes off in his magic road forker to inseminate the latent earthquake with a soothing swallow of honey. Zooming screeeeeeeeeeeeeowrrrrrr voom voom voom voom! watchout! you almost hit a hitchhiking scientist! the one now shedding dandruff all over the black tar highway. Look . . . he's spilling formulas . . . cocolossal! mathematical diarrhea . . . two-toned equations . . . First the plans for the tonic to blow up the world . . . then a nuclear test ban treaty blueprint lying nude on the road in the dust and the dandruff. "Shouldn't of shook his head" vrooms Henry as he streaks past. "Fascist pig!" screams the old scientist as Henry's exhaust pipe farts ala carte on the scientist's silver-studded suspenders. The ones that Atom Queen sewed out of old garter belts for his birthday.

Henry hits a stop light . . . dotted lines oiled and greased . . . vroom . . . mission accomplished. He pulls into town . . . a small nearby center . . . property of G-O-D but not ultraconservative. "Henary!. jes kim ova hair an set a wy!" urges a tiny smidgeon of sound from behind the reins of a buggy. Madam Tuli is dudded up . . . and she wants everyone to have a look. "Kim ova hair Henarry precious . . . I wan to diskus with yer intellect seein as you is a road-fokka ridah ahem tee hee tee hee!" Madam Tuli has a mangy mutt who snaps in the other direction. Henry reaches out to pat it. "What's the name of your pooch, Tool of gall" . . . "She's called Baynewort Bartfarkel and you'd betta not say nothin partikarly offensive in yer verbosity or Baynewort will dry heave all over yuh and hold her breath till you say uncle. Baynewort you know is a mutt-liberal . . . she can't stand confrontation you know.

So Henry and Madame Tuli discussed a subject that was agreeable to Baynewort Bartfarkel: the antipasto crisis . . . how 25000 antipasto assembles a year were starving of malnutrition. "Well shit!" cried Madame Tuli in a toothless manner . . . "them guys just can't possibly assemble enough andypafko a year to feed their sto-macs." Henry broke in . . . "well what do you expect? that antipasto takes a long time to get together . . . it's got sardines and pickles and mushrooms and peppers and . . . "Stop!" cried the chick "stop! you've gone and made Baynewort ill . . . she's just remembered she hates the ingredients of antipasto . . . and now she's druh heaving all ova muh buggy. Baynewort is a very sensitive dog. She . . . she picked up the alphabet from a parrot that hung round the pet shot where I gotter." By now Henry was in no such mood for intellectual belly bummers and he got into his forker and started reving up the engine. A great silent shadow fell across the sky . . . It was . . . GORGONZOLA . . . the big cheese . . . great mythological being from another time and tranquil destiny. He could take Godzilla with both hands tied behind his back with his eyes closed. Gorgonzola the big cheese was a giant mouse with the tail of a lizzard and the breath of a southern supreme court justice . . . his breath never made it in the closeups. Gorgonzola stood like a lighthouse, immense and photogenic. 50 stories high! Madame Tuli was horrified. Baynewort Bartfarkel was scared. An innocent bystander, Iggy Ogle the 11th was satisfied. he liked to watch live hangings for a hobby, and naturally he hoped that the big cheese would step on somebody. But leave it to Henry. he was in control. He was cool and calm. He got into his road forker and drove a little ways down the street where the gigantic monster was hovering and casting shadows while people were creaming and japanese exchange students were auditioning as extras so they might see the day when "Attack of Gorgonzola" would be shown on the 11 o'clock news/do you know where your children are right now? . . . cha cha buddy and off . . . Henry with his special advanced machinery loosened one of the grilled sewer covers on the side of the street . . . wiped his nose, read a comic book, scratched his ass . . . picked up the sewer cover with the forker's special metal gloves and like a steamshovel offered the sewer cover to Gorgonzola the big cheese. "What?" gasped Madame Tuli . . . Bartfarkel just watched sputtering in astonishment. "He just wants a sewer cover for a screen in his hash pipe!" shouted Henry. But no sooner had the beast picked up the tiny tiny sewer cover dwarfed in contrast, then he picked Henry too, leaving the magic road forker melodramatically empty, Henry all arms and squirming legs, and the whole town sobbing . . . some were grabbing for digitalis. The copcars pulled up one by one until there was a whole army of them, and they all looked and watched the bad news. O sad days are here! Look out for the next exciting episode when Henry discovers a long suppressed secret . . . if he lives that long.

Moratorium

PART THREE

Wednesday, April 15. Today. Today is the day. After you finish reading this issue, a good many of you will, at least hopefully, decide to participate in the moratorium events. As I've attempted to communicate to you in the two preceding appearances of this column, I believe it to be for the benefit of mankind that we do so. I believe it to be for the benefit of America that we do so. And I also believe it to be for the benefit of ourselves that we do so.

I've touched on this before, but it seems to me that for too long have people of the industrialized west been content to have faith in the "experts" who run our computerized societies, and, indeed, faith in the computers, themselves. People have become content to allow the executive aspect of living to slip away into the clutches of the smiling technical and business executive.

What more revealing example than that of spectator sports? Why aren't you out there playing with some friends instead of sitting in front of your neighbor's television every Sunday of every Autumn? Why aren't you out in the streets more often, actually taking your rightful share of participatory living instead of having faith in the eventual correctness of at least one of the vocal few? They are not necessarily prophets. Don't just exist. Live.

Just as you, as an individual, are what you eat, so should the society that you choose to live in be at least a partial function of your sentiments expressed within it. If you're content to be a sheep in society (in a society of sheep) fine. That's your level of reality and no one has the right to criticize that in you. But as for me, I'd rather be a wolf. I'll defend my individual rights, those human rights that old Thomas Jefferson ascertained from the lessons of philosophy and history, and later enumerated in his conception of the ideal American condition as manifesting "Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness." These three social conditions are in danger of losing their original timeless meaning and becoming something more in harmony with data-processed assets and debits, pervaded with stern moral doctrine. Don't let it happen to you. Don't be a well fattened cog in the slaughterhous of the organization. Do something Get up from in front of the television.

And say something aloud to the world about how you, as a thinking individual, feel on Vietnam, cause for alarm dwarfing in significance all of the above. After all, first in the order of importance is the basic, "Life."

And that is exactly what Vietnam is all about. The experts are now demanding human sacrifice at the altar of computer programming, the faceless nobodies that in some unimaginable way have become everybodies, the men in the business suits with impeccable floral ties, are now manufacturing their own wars to suit their ghoulish, strange lusts.

I cannot accept them. I do understand them. We all understand them, deep down inside. And I cannot accept living in a world ruled by them.

I will have my say today. I extend an invitation to you to join me in a celebration of my emancipation, your emancipation from cooperative lethargy, and in the vocalizing of our mutual horror at this most monstrous jaundicing of the human spirit and right, so pitiably obvious in the war of genocide in Vietnam.

Subtlety

To the editor:

It seems the University is in a sad state of affairs when the Student Union is not for students.

Since the Union is supposed to be for students, you would think students would be able to use it without being hasseled by the University's gestapo. They have been ordered by the higher echelons of the University to patrol and safekeep the building from student activities. They are also commanded to crush individualism in the student body whenever it appears in public. If there is no backing organization, the individual is persecuted because he is not bringing "political pressures" to the "right people". If a "recognized" campus organization publicizes, the posters are allowed to remain, for fear that "public" negative feelings will result. If an individual puts up a leaflet, it is ordered torn down.

This action not only surpresses the education of students but helps the administration to control the University by permitting only selective propaganda to enter the University community.

Students - open your eyes - it is this subtlety which is the cancer and must be destroyed or it will destroy us.

Peace,
(but fight on)

Progress Out

To the editor:

I would like to report to members of the University Community on the progress we have made in pursuing the case of Miss Jennifer Thomas, which was mentioned during my appearance at the University last week. As I said at that time, police brutality directed toward any person will not be condoned by this administration; but if justice is to be done, we must avoid publicity now which might be prejudicial to the rights of anyone charged with misconduct or which might imperil the rights of a private citizen to file legal action against a law enforcement agency.

Project Place, where Miss Thomas is a resident, is a voluntary agency which provides temporary residence, counseling, and similar services to young people. Members of my staff have worked closely with Project Place over the past two years, coordinating their relations with the community and the Police Department, helping with the maintenance of their facility, and now helping to find another building so that their operations may be expanded.

On the afternoon of March 24, 1970, Miss Jennifer Thomas, a sixteen year old resident of Project Place, accompanied by George Weeks, a director of the agency, came to my office to make a complaint about police mistreatment of Miss Thomas while she was being held at Station Four that morning. Miss Thomas had been arrested that morning, held in Station Four, and taken to Boston Juvenile Court where the charges against her had been dismissed. Present at the meeting with Miss Thomas and Mr. Weeks were: James Breay, Director of Turn Off, who works most directly with Project Place; Marvin Harrell, Deputy Director of the Mayor's Office of Human Rights, and John Hyson, an assistant corporation counsel for the City of Boston.

A transcript of this meeting was prepared and submitted to the Corporation Counsel who is the city's chief legal officer. At our request, a complete departmental investigation is now underway. At the same time, members of my staff are continuing to work with Project Place and Miss Thomas, who has chosen private counsel and has been advised to consider further legal action in addition to the City's investigation. It is our understanding that Miss Thomas has also released a statement to the press.

Immediately upon the conclusion of the investigation, appropriate action will be taken by the City. Meanwhile, if any of your readers wish additional information, I hope that they will contact Marvin Harrell, Deputy Director of the Mayor's Office of Human Rights (Room 206, City Hall, Boston, Massachusetts). Again, let me assure you that I share your concern and that the City of Boston will take all possible steps in this matter.

Sincerely,
KEVIN H. WHITE
Mayor

May we express our full support for the anti-Vietnam war activities planned for April 15 in the Amherst area. The peace movement in this country must speak up loud and clear to tell he Administration in Washington hat an end to the bloodshed is not in sight so long as the present policy of Vietnamization policy is continued. Let us remember, however, that one-day protests must always be part of an on-going protests movement designed to inform the public continuously about the effects of the war upon the directions and quality of life in this country and elsewhere.

Out Rent

(The following letter was sent April 9, 1970 from Senate President Maurice A. Donahue to Joseph P. Healey, Chairman - Board of Trustees - University of Massachusetts - Amherst)

Dear Mr. Chairman:

In recent weeks I have received hundreds of letters from students of the University of Massachusetts and their parents informing me that the Administration at Amherst has suggested that the room rent be increased over 30 percent, to over $160 per month per student.

I am aware that no such increase can be ordered without the approval of the Board of Trustees.

Please be advised that I am unalterably opposed to the proposed increase and I sincerely trust that your Board in its wisdom will look upon the suggestion with disfavor.

I need not remind you that the objective of the University of Massachusetts is to provide quality education for as many qualified young men and women as possible at a minimum cost to them and their families.

We are all cognizant of the problems which the rampant inflation of the past several years has caused as they relate to costs, budgets, fees, and so forth. We realize, too, that University dormitories are intended to be self-supporting.

Yet despite this awareness, it does not seem to me that a 30 percent increase is conscionable when the cost of living itself has increased at no more than about 6 percent per year.

I have every confidence that the Board of Trustees will give its most serious attention to this latest recommendation and that you and your colleagues on the Board will consider the unanticipated and unfair economic hardship which such a disproportionate increase in room rent would cause to thousands of young men and women who together with their parents are struggling to make ends meet.

I sincerely trust that your deliberations on this item will be marked by your recognition of the basic objective of the University itself -- quality education at minimum cost.

Sincerely yours,
MAURICE A. DONAHUE
President of the Senate

Henry Korson is no liberal, nor is he a "so-called liberal", or even a "liberal". He is a firm believer in the value of the status quo, and will admit it freely.

I doubt he'd go so far as to say that the war has achieved the status of a quo, and thus may not be opposed. But he certainly doesn't think he should try to stop it, or ald those who might try to stop it.

That's his choice. Don't blame it on a philosophy he doesn't share.

Spring 1970

It is spring and the world is still not the world. It is not together. It must be time to transcendental up some harmony with nature before there is none with which to up. It must be time for green thoughts and not white thoughts. It must be time to carpe diem (seize the day) and not to rest in the everlasting arms. It must be time to suffer us to come unto the children. If it is not time then this is Amerikimmortal.

It seems the end of decay is not in the future, which means the beginning of being without it is likewise not. If we are submissive to the solution of decay as being in white thoughts (of sheep and omnipresent omnipotences vacationing in white houses behing perfectly clear stellar gates) then our present is misery. We must realize that a solution to decay does not exist, but that an alternative to contributing to it does. We can only be sure of our commitment to one world - this one. And that is why we must recognize that the bleakness of the present is not released by the inactive white hope of the second arrival of vacationers from white house.

It is essential that we seize this day which others are allowing to pass lest we too be others in tractibility. The problems are obvious. We are preventing Blacks, Orientals and other races, we are preventing women, we are preventing birth control and we are preventing trees, all, from an equal chance for survival. The whole line of problems Ralph Nader points to are less obvious but just as important. So, it would not be difficult to say that we are in the process of preventing life - all life - from continuing.

If silence means consent then inactivity allows the day to pass and contributes to the bleakness of our present, never mind our future. If the activity of law and order does not seem to bring lawlessness and disorder then that activity is legitimate. And just by virtue of being an American we are supporting it, unless, of course, we otherwise respond. (An otherwise response might be cancelling our subscription to conscription.)

If we are not sufficiently outraged then we will not complain so loudly. But if we are, with the fact that complaining-so-loudly meets with so little positive, active response, then "any means necessary" does not sound so unintelligent. The statement does not prescribe violence but allows for any day to day changes in the overall situation.

One might say in regard to progress in this area that Rome wasn't built in a day. But if we believe that over in Vietnam and here in this country, The Nixon Administration burns while America fiddles, is there really any excuse for taking longer than a day to destroy evil elements. We must seize this day. Moreover, perhaps we do not have an ultimate choice between destruction and construction, but a choice of destructions, one being slower and inclusively final, the other being temporary and a prerequisite to a better construction. As Milton Mayer says anarchy is better than tyranny.

We must make an attempt to "bring this country back" and to put the world back in this world this day or tommor we shall have none. "If you want it, here it is, come and get it. But you better hurry because it may not last." It must be time to take time or time will take us.

Black Rep Theatre Presents Elder Play

April 17, 18, and 19, the University of Massachusetts' Black Repertory Theatre will present one of this season's most provocative off-Broadway plays in Bowker Auditorium. It's author is an American Black, Lonne Elder III, director of the Playwrights Directors Division of the Negro Ensemble in New York. Curtain time for the second production of the Black Rep is Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30.

The Director for Ceremonies is Esther Terry, a Ph. D. candidate in the department of English. Members of the cast include Nate Sims as Mr. Russel B. Parker, the father; Rose Sims as Adele Parker, an only daughter; Anthony Pendleton as Bobby, a younger son, and Danny Scarborough as Theopolis, an older son. Also included in the cast are Mitch Williams as Mr. Jenkins, a friend of Mr. Parker, and Bill Hassen as Blue Haven (on Friday night). Saturday and Sunday Monte Jackson will be featured in the role of Blue Haven.

The play attempts to offer solutions to the problem of being Black in a society which condones racism. Yet, the play is more than a social commentary about a particular Black family. It moves beyond the realm of color and attempts to analyze the human predicament and what an individual should or should not do with his life. CEREMONIES attacks the problem of not just mere existence in a society but life itself.

The entire action of the play occurs in a small poverty-stricken barber shop in Harlem. Both the barber shop and its living quarters remind one of Lorraine Hansberry's description of the Younger's home in a RAISIN IN THE SUN in that "they have clearly had to accommodate the living of too many people for too many years--and they are tired." Tickets for the production are on sale at the Student Union Box office.

Smith Theatre Produces Rock Farce

" 'PIG' has everything!"

This is the enthusiastic feeling of the director of the Smith College Theatre and Speech Department rock musical, set for April 17 to 19.

The director is Smith graduate student John Driver of Northampton. He sees "PIG" as "a 'rock farce' - a new form of rock musical. It has old farce plot devices and contemporary rock music.

"It is light. It is comic. It makes no attempt to be serious - except to imply the authors' feelings toward the American way of money making. It has plot: it is about 10 illegitimate children whose destinies are linked to a small female pig."

The production will be offered in Smith's new Theatre 14, Center for the Performing Arts. Performances will be at 8:30 p.m. on April 17 (Friday) and at 2 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. April 18 (Saturday) and at 2 p.m. April 19 (Sunday).

Driver, who has had considerable acting and directing experience - including directing a comic review guest performance at Chicago's Second City - is co-writer of the rock farce. Smith senior Sydney Andreani wrote the book with him. Driver has also written the music and lyrics.

The aim of "PIG" 's creators was to produce a rock musical that was "more than just a string of rock songs with little or no plot, very loosely tied together. And the characters had very little individuality or 'character'. After seeing a good number of musicals, we decided to try something different," says Driver.

"We liked the appeal, the energy and excitement of rock music and dancing. We wanted to write a rock musical that had a definite plot and definite characters - a play with rock music. 'PIG' has a cast of 17, none of them 'chorus' parts."

Group rates are available for the April 17 performance, with tickets reduced to half price. For reservations call the Center box office, 584-2700, Ext. 840, weekdays from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Judith Keyes as Grandma and Sid Schiff as the Angel of Death rehearse a scene from Albee's "The Sandbox," one of three Albee plays being staged this weekend by University Theatre.

UMT Stages Albee Plays

The University of Massachusetts Theatre is presenting on April 16 through 19 three short plays by Edward Albee: "The Sandbox" - "Box" - and "Quotations from Chairman Mao Tse-Tung" - the latter two being inter-related plays.

The director, Assistant Professor Vincent Brann, says of this production, "In one early and two recent plays, Edward Albee turns his witty but savage eye upon contemporary America, and his view is one of widespread decay in every major sector of the social landscape: ethics, morals, religion, art, politics. This bill of entirely unconventional one-act plays, taken as a unit, makes a penetrating comment on modern American life as seen by one of America's least satisfied and most theatrically satisfying young dramatists."

General critical opinion has considered SANDBOX, BOX, and THE SAYINGS OF CHAIRMAN MAO TSE-TUNG to be the most experimental, the most adventurous, the most challenging work of Edward Albee. Harold Clurman has said, "There is a melancholy beauty in these plays, and genuine feeling without tears....They are like no other plays he has written, and like very few others written by anyone else."

The style of this production is presentational, rather than representational; non-objective, rather than objective, which is not what one has come to expect of Albee plays. Director Vincent Brann compares these plays to contemporary music, and non-objective painting, where apparently unrelated elements all finally merge into very penetrating inner connections.

SANDBOX, BOX, and THE SAYINGS OF CHAIRMAN MAO TSE-TUNG will be presented Thursday through Sunday, April 16-19, 1970 at 8:30 p.m. in Bartlett Theatre.

African Art Exhibit Portrays the Essence

By LINDA McINTYRE
Fine Arts Staff

Thursday night welcomed a new art show in Herter Hall Gallery. The show of African Art, organized by Roslyn Walker, museum organizer and instructor in African Art, opened with sounds of Africa and visual objects of wood, grasses and metal. In a good selection of pieces, the show portrays the African importance of essence and soul rather than the western ideal of physical accuracy. The female figures portray women, not just a woman's shape. The masks range from funny to fierce, but all are exciting. Coupled with photos of usage, these pieces pull the observer into the art. The overall feelings are those of the geometric, flowing curves, repetition, and a constant use of the three dimensional. Of interest in the far room are a tapestry and sculptured wooden heddles.

The first night crowd has thinned, so now is the time to go to Herter. The show will be up until April 30th but you will probably enjoy seeing it more than once. Posters for the show and an informative illustrated catalogue are on sale at the gallery. The introduction to the booklet is especially fine. Congratualtions to Roslyn Walker and all the others who have made this super show possible.

AC Presents Andorra, A Focus on Prejudices

Friday and Saturday nights, April 17th and 18th, ANDORRA, an engrossing drama by Max Frisch, Europe's most acclaimed playwright in the past twenty years, will be presented at Kirby Theater, Amherst College. As directed by Josh Karter '71 in association with the Department of Dramatic Arts at the college, the play focuses on the inherent prejudices shared by most well-meaning people. Frisch sets up a model of an ideal state which through human hatred is destroyed from within before succumbing to external forces.

The play will be performed at 8:30 p.m. There are no reserved seats, nor is there an admission charge.

Future of Theatre . . . Speech Dept. Holds Open Meeting Today

The theatre areas of the Speech Department has scheduled an open meeting in the Studio Theatre of South College at 4:30 this afternoon, for all persons interested in the future of theatre at UMass.

A result of the Speech Department's April 7 decision to join the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences, the meeting is an effort to discern how students and faculty members feel about the move.

At present, the Speech Dept. has five major areas: rhetoric, communications disorders, speech education, mass communication, and theatre. Some members of the theatre area feel that theatre has no ideological affinities with social and behavioral sciences. The area's natural social and philosophical allegiances are with English, Music, and Art, which are presently in the School of Arts and Sciences.

This open meeting, which should attract theatre faculty, undergraduate and graduate students in the theatre area, will center on the immediate problem of what, if anything, the theatre area should do now.

Mgt. Prof. Publishes Labor Book

A book by UMass management Professor Max S, Wortman, Jr., presents a group of actual cases and problems in collective bargaining, labor economics, labor problems and industrial relations.

The book, "Labor Relations and Collective Bargaining, is co-authored by George C, Wittereld of the University of Missouri at St. Louis. It is published with an accompanying instructor's manual by Allyn and Bacon.

According to the authors' preface, both the labor and management viewpoints are emphasized. The authors have divided the book into two sections, one an overview and the second part dealing with substantive issues of the contract.

Dr. Wortman is author of "Critical Issues in Labor" and co-author with C. W, Randle of the 1966 book "Collective Bargaining". He also wrote "Creative Personnel Management," published in 1967, as well as a wide range of other publications.

Easy Acceptance, Flexibility Mark Classes at U. of Helsinki

Scandinavian schools are often overlooked by Americans interested in studying at a European university. Sometimes American students overlook studying at a European university entirely. The many who stay in America for four many undergraduate years may be depriving themselves educationally and socially and also financially.

It costs a little over one-hundred-dollars to live one month at the University of Helsinki in Finland. Allowing for plenty of good food (not meaning macaroni and corn-flakes) and a room in a student dormitory (bigger than at UMass mostly doubles, some singles and no triples, with a chambermaid once a week, radio and telephone for each room, television per corridor) and laundry charges, that means under $1000 for nine months.

Tuition is $25 per semester and there are no lab fees, athletic fees or hidden fees. Included in that amount is a junior medicare that means everything from free hospital care to birth control pills, The part of the $25 which counts as dues in the student organization opens the world of socialism in the form of free newspapers and all kinds of savings such as occasional half-price European hotel bookings.

Depending on what books, clothes, or souvenirs you buy, you will then start tipping the annual budget over the one - thousand-dollar mark. But this still means that it costs less than one year at UMass.

But there is a string attached. Finland is an ocean away. You can not walk or thumb there. Usually it means a jet plane, although sometimes you can work a summer on an ocean-liner into transportation across. If you are unlucky, you may pay six to seven-hundred-dollar to some airline for the round trip. So start with the thousand for the nine months and figure on several hundred more for those two little days when you come to Finland and when you leave.

So much for finances. With a jet plane it may cost you two-hundred-dollars more than UMass. What bargains will that money buy?

The University of Helsinki is as hard to graduate from as any in America. Standards are high and some of the teachers are Fulbright grantees from top universities in the states.

However, the University of Helsinki is easy to enter. Students weed themselves out as they fail or feel their money disappearing or old age catching up with them. Acceptance is your last worry. Foreigners do not even have an application deadline and it is possible to enter after the year has officially begun.

The University offers courses only incidentally; its main offering is final examinations. You need not attend a lecture. All you need do is pass the one final examination to be credited for a course. Exams are offered throughout the year and you choose your own time to take them. At the School of Arts and Sciences the professors are kind to foreigners to the point of permitting, on request, exams to be answered in English. This means you do not need to learn Finnish or Swedish, the languages of the country and of the University! If you do want to learn either language, however, Helsinki is your natural language lab. Though Finnish is difficult, Swedish is close enough to English to be easy.

(Note: At the University of Massachusetts a Finnish course is presently offered in two sections under the auspices of the Honors Colloquia. For one credit you can take Finnish which will prepare you for your trip to Finland). For further information contact Nancy Hanrahan (323-7507) or Jack Ampuja (6-6464).

Chem. Lecture Series Features MIT Professor

Dr. Albert F. Cotton, professor of chemistry at MIT will speak as the 1970 Four-College Chemistry Lecturer this Thursday, Friday and Saturday (April 16-18). the events are open to the public.

"The High Resolution Structure of an Enzyme, Micrococcal Nuclease, Part I" is the topic of the first talk, scheduled at Smith College at 8:00 p.m. Thursday in Room 103, McConnell Hall. There will be a coffee hour after the lecture in the McConnell Foyer.

At Mount Holyoke College Friday afternoon, Professor Cotton will speak on "The High Resolution Structure of an Enzyme, Micrococcal Nuclease, Part II" a 4 in Room 12 Cleveland Hall. Thavening at 8, the third lecture will be given at Amherst College, Lecture Room 2 in the Science Center, on the topic "Quadruple Bonds."

"Fluxional Organometallic Molecules" will be presented Saturday morning in Peters Auditorium, Goessmann Laboratory, at UMass, concluding the annual series of lectures. This speech will be at 10:30 a.m.

Professor Cotton received the Ph. D, degree from Harvard in 1955, then joined the MIT faculty where he has been an eminent chemical researcher and a prolific writer. He collaborated with Geoffrey Wilkinson in writing the standard text and reference book, Advanced Inorganic Chemistry - (1962). His pioneering book, Chemical Aspects of Group Theory (1963), popularized a powerful method for studying the geometry of molecules. He has editied the annual publication, Progress in Inorganic Chemistry, since its founding in 1959.

CHEF WANTED

For small resort for summer in New Hampshire — mid-June thru mid-September. Write:

W. J. Herbert

P.O. Box 909

LYNN, MASS.

a U is not a P* * *

(This is a revised version of a resolution proposal submitted by Assoc. Prof. Vaclav Holesovsky of the Department of Economics during the April 10 - 11 deliberations.)

RESOLUTION PROPOSAL

Since the University community — students, faculty staff, other employees — has not been established as an organ of political representation but as an educational institution of learning and research;

since the University is to be dedicated primarily to the search for truth and its dissemination;

since truth cannot be determined by taking a vote, gaining majorities, or conducting public opinion polls;

since the members of the University's self-governing organs and administration have not been chosen to act as political representatives of the University community vis-a-vis the outside world;

since the political constitution of the United States allows many alternative channels and methods for expressing political opinions and wishes, as well as for organizing political will of the citizens through voluntary associations and representative machinery;

since, therefore, there is no justification in using educational institutions as substitutes for the regular democratic political process, as may be the case in non-democratic countries, let it be resolved that the self-governing organs of the University and its administration refrain from serving as vehicles for political representation and action, or allowing the University to be used for such purposes:

the University continue providing at the same time the most liberal framework for free, (i. e., orderly) expression and exchange of opinion on political (or any other) issues by individuals and groups;

the University as an institution remain neutral with respect to topics and areas of research undertaken: neither force anyone to pursue research in a particular direction, nor prevent anyone from undertaking research of his choice, while protecting individual researchers from harassment by self-appointed arbiters.

*And that covers the Moratorium "strikes," Faculty Senate resolutions advising the U.S. President on the conduct of foreign policy, or possible future flag-waving declarations of patriotic loyalty.

This is meant to protect, among other things, possible research on Che Guevara, anti-counter-insurgency, etc.

A University is not a Parliament, not a House of Representatives, not a political Party, not a Town Meeting, not a soviet, and not a propaganda bullhorn for group views.

UMass Drill Team Places In Washington Semi-Finals

For the first time in five years the UMass Drill Team, Number one Trick Drill team in New England, placed in the semi-finals of the "Parade of Princess" Tournament in the Cherry Blossom Festival Parade held this past weekend in Washington, D.C.

Competing with sixty other units for the three trophies in the "marching unit" category, UMass' Flying Redmen Drill Team held on to first place for the majority of the semi-finals but lost by 20 points within the finals to place fifth in this 1970 Parade of Princesses Tournament.

The "Black Knights" of Northwestern University, and Louisiana placed 4th; "Queen's Guard" of Rutger's University, 3rd; Univ.- of Michigan, 2nd. The Freshman Drill Team of Texas A & M University, winning 98 out of a possible 100 points, placed 1st.

UMass' Drill team, unable to enter the National Cherry Blossom Drill Competition because they are not an ROTC drill team, showed that a civilian-university drill team can handle any ROTC drill team on fair grounds.

The tournament boosted the Redmen's morale after their sound defeat in the Boston Beanpot Invitational Drill Meet held last April 4th. Still retaining their New England Trick Drill championship crown, UMass' Flying Redmen placed 5th in basic, 6th in trick and 6th place overall among fourteen of the Eastern coast teams.

This weekend the Flying Redmen Drill Team travel to the Manhattan Invitational Drill Meet and plan to come back with all three trophies in basic, trick and overall for UMass.

Scott, Conig, Smith HR's Lift Sox Over NY, 8-3

BOSTON (AP) - George Scott, Tony Conigliaro and Reggie Smith drilled homers through a stiff cross-wind in powering the Boston Red Sox to an 8-3 victory over the New York Yankees Tuesday in an American League home opener.

The Red Sox, who lost three of their first five games on the road, celebrated their 1970 debut in Fenway Park with a 12-hit attack against New York's Fritz Peterson.

Despite the jet-like wind whipping from right to left, Scott, Conigliaro and Smith found the range on the left field wall for their first homers of the year.

Scott broke a 1-1 tie with a solo shot into the screen in left center with one out in the fourth. Then, after third baseman Jerry Kenney robbed Rico Petrocelli with a diving stop behind the bag, Conigliaro hit a tremendous shot which cleared the screen atop the 37-foot wall.

The Yankees tied the score 3-3 on Dany Cater's two run homer in the fifth but Smith put Boston in front to stay.

Long-Homeless Patriots Come Closer to Having Own Stadium

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) - The long - homeless Boston Patriots were much closer to having a stadium of their own Tuesday, but all of the financing and other details still had to be ironed out.

A plan to build a 57,000-seat stadium here for the pro football team was approved overwhelmingly at a special town meeting Monday night.

A team spokesman also said the Pats were hopeful that Harvard University would permit them to use its stadium as long as a sound financing plan can be demonstrated for Foxboro and assurances can be given that use of the Harvard facility would be on a short-term basis.

Possible alternatives as temporary sites would be Fenway Park or Boston College's Alumni Stadium, both of which have been used by the Patriots in the past. Both of these fields are too small for permanent use under the National Football League's 50,000-seat minimum requirement, and Fenway has the additional disadvantage of being unavailable until mid-October because of baseball.

The latest action in the Patriots' long quest for a home came in Monday night's meeting, when the townspeople voted 11,933-84 in favor of a plan.

Under the complicated financing arrangements being worked out, the 15 acres of land involved are being donated to the town by E.M. Loew and will be leased by the town to the Stadium Realty Trust, a private body.

The Stadium Realty Trust is preparing a public stock offering to help finance the stadium, but officials of the firm say no information which has anything to do with the financing may be given out at this time pending the filing of a registration statement with the Securities Exchange Commission.
